The discovery and exposure of fraud and of illusions have their value for psychology as well as for public interest, and this wholly apart from the existence of anything supernormal. Consequently they may stop the exploitation of human credulity by adventurers in matters so important as real psychic research. But if the supernormal of any kind be a fact it would be inexcusable to everlastingly pander to the prejudices of skepticism simply because it is respectable. Hence it will be a fundamental part of the Journal's policy to see that the claims of the supernatural shall have fair consideration.

The matter which the Journal intends to furnish its readers will consist of five kinds: general articles, editorial matter, incidents, correspondence and discussion, and reviews.

The first will be articles on such topics as will interest psychic researchers in regard to methods, special cases, psychological problems of an obscure type, historical questions in philosophy and other intellectual fields as affecting psychic research, and any phenomena connected with the main purpose of the Society. Special energies will determine the nature of the matter so regarded.

The editorial department will serve as a vehicle for the discussion of questions suggested by correspondence and the general needs of the work in regard to methods, experimentation, and all conditions affecting the nature and results of investigation. The amount of space devoted to this department will vary with circumstances.

In regard to the publication of incidents several considerations will have to be taken into account. In the first place, incidents will not be published on the ground that they "prove" any special contention, even though as a fact they may do so. Whatever value they may have as individual phenomena their real importance must be determined by their place in a collective whole. The evidential point of view for science is quantity as well as quality and in observing this rule we mean to suspend explanatory considerations in the publication of them. This must be reserved for the discussions in the Proceedings where the facts can have a collective force and importance. In the second place, the records in the Journal will be treated as "raw material" requiring either more detailed investigation and discussion or the multiplication of confirmatory evidence to give them scientific importance. They will primarily justify inquiry rather than prove the theories. The plan will be to allow the reader to determine for himself the interpretation of such incidents as the Journal records. All general theories of them must be referred to other publications where the criterion of quantity may be satisfied. In the third place, the Journal must confine its incidents to the less comprehensive instances of mental experiment. Detailed and elaborate cases will have to go to the Proceedings. In the fourth place, it will consider phenomena that interest psychological students wholly apart from the supernormal and that serve as a matrix in which the supernormal may be moulded. This brings its functions into the field of illusions, hallucinations, coincidences and similar phenomena of an unusual kind. In the fifth place, it will try, as far as the circumstances permit, only to vouch for the fitness of the records for serious consideration. Whether facts have been accurately and correctly described by reporters will perhaps be a matter of individual judgment, and the editor wishes to defer as much as possible to that right, though endeavoring to admit only such instances of personal experience as seem to him probably important for some purpose. Their record will be intended to call out thorough investigation and discussion upon their merits in this respect. Those which pass this ordeal and embody the essential characteristics of evidential matter may be usable in constructive discussion in regard to general views affected by collective masses of evidential matter.

The publication of correspondence and discussion will have to be regulated by the editor's judgment of its relation to the general policy of the Journal. Only such letters and discussions can receive publication as seem to represent the scientific objects we wish to keep uppermost in our investigations. This department is intended to be a vehicle for the critical expression of views regarding published matter and so a medium for others than the official representatives of the Society.

The reviews of books will be those of a shorter nature. More elaborate reviews and discussions of books will have to be reserved for the Proceedings.

Editorial.

In the February number of the Journal we shall have one of two articles representing a summary of experiments with Mrs. Piper since the death of Dr. Richard Hodgson. The detailed records will receive publication at some later time in the Proceedings.

Readers of the Journal must remember that the dissolution of the American Branch of the Society for Psychical Research with the removal of the records accumulated by Dr. Richard Hodgson in Boston to England makes it necessary to begin the work of collection anew in this country. There will probably be some difficulty in obtaining well attested phenomena for scientific purposes and it may require several years' work to arrive at that point of interest which the collection of Dr. Hodgson had established. The co-operation of all that are interested is earnestly sought to make up for the loss of that material, which will undoubtedly receive publication by the London Society.

Explanation of Terms.

An important precaution should be stated regarding the use of terms in the Journal for denoting the various types of phenomena recorded. There are three terms which are commonly taken as terms of explanation, but which are really and only descriptive terms. They are Telepathy, Clairvoyance, and Premonition. They will be used in the record of incidents merely as classifying or descriptive terms and not in any sense as implying a specific cause or explanation of the facts. Telepathy will be a name for coincidences between the thoughts of two or more persons that suggest a causal nexus of some kind, though we may not be able to define this cause. Clairvoyance will be the name for the alleged acquisition of physical knowledge not previously acquired by the subject in a normal manner and not referable to telepathy. Premonition will be the name for those incidents which claim to forecast future events in some specific manner not explicable by chance or guessing, or ordinary prediction. The three classes of phenomena are somewhat distinct in their character and even if they be ultimately referable to a common cause they will probably have subsidiary hypotheses associated with their explanation. But in the meantime we can only classify the facts, and the terms used for this purpose must be employed only in the descriptive sense defined. They will not be in any sense explanatory.

The American and London Societies.

The reorganization of psychic research in this country may suggest to many persons a misconception of the motives at the basis of it, and hence the idea that it is to be a rival affair. If any such conception of the matter should arise it is proper to disillusion those who entertain it. While it was the original purpose of Dr. Hodgson and those who were interested in the Institute ultimately to merge the American Branch with the Institute it was not to be done in any way that would involve unnecessary friction with the apparent body. The American Branch had its own funds and was in no way helped for years by the English body and it was deemed necessary to seek financial assistance in this country. This required that local responsibility should exist for their use. Dr. Hodgson's death interrupted this plan, and it was the purpose of the Institute to abandon the organization of an independent body unless the English Society dissolved the American Branch. The subject is one in which rivalry of any kind would be at least unfortunate, if not fatal. Hence it is and was desired that there be no sense of rivalry in the organization and work in the field. It will be the policy of the American Society to encourage all who are able to remain members of the English Society while they are asked to join the new American Society. Both Societies have the same object and merely occupy different fields in which it is more convenient to do the work independently than in union. There is to be no competition in their organization and investigations. All that are interested and have the means should support both of them, as it is financial assistance that is most needed for conducting their work rightly. With this understanding there need be nothing but good will and a co-operative spirit in carrying on the investigations for which they exist.

Dr. James J. Putnam of Boston, and Dr. Minot J. Savage found it necessary to resign from the Board of Trustees of

A New Departure—Revival of the Old.

For years churchmen scouted the idea of what is best known as magnetic healing, or the removal of disease by the "laying on of hands," but the cures have gone on just the same until state governments have been compelled to concede the justice of the claim, and have abandoned its former practice of fining and imprisoning practitioners as impostors.

The church claimed the power to cure the sick, the decrepit and the blind, all of which were prerogatives Jesus bestowed on his disciples by virtue of belief in him; that the days of miracles had long since passed, and the ability to "lay hands on the sick and they shall recover" were lost. And yet those miracles were daily performed by unbelievers in Christianity, and even by those who had no belief in Jesus. But lo, the change!

Now an innovation. The Back Bay Episcopal church of Boston, at their church on Newbury street, have begun forming classes in mental healing. Sixty-five patients from youth to the aged were in attendance, most of whom were of the feminine gender. But it seems they are not confident of success by simply "laying on of hands," as is represented to have been the practice of their Master, so they have "two physicians, well known local neurologists," who examine applicants for treatment and mingle medicinal remedies with mental suggestion.

And that is the way the miracles of "our Savior" are revived in these last days, to the discredit of Christianity. But the rector, imitating the practice of quacks, is reported as saying: "A little later we shall have experience meetings when you can tell how you have been helped."

What Might Have Been.

Suppose the Catholic emigration from all parts of Europe to America, with their posterity, had retained the church views they brought with them, and those views had been transmitted to each successive generation since, then this country would be overwhelmingly Catholic at this time. Popery in the ascendent, it is not improbable the government itself would have remained a monarchy subordinate to the Roman See, and contributing to it.

Roman Catholicism is nothing but reconstructed Roman Paganism, her lesser gods having been canonized and now figure as Christian saints. The more deeply one is read the more positive he is of these facts.

But the progeny of European emigration, by the second generation at least, has lost respect for the church of their immediate ancestors. After being educated in public schools where sectarianism is not taught, they imbibe toleration for all faiths; and if their attention is turned to science the chances are they will fall away from the parent religion, and embrace more liberal views, possibly take a position away from all churches.

The hope of the future is, that with universal education, and a better knowledge of the teachings of Nature the narrow conceptions of all religions will disappear, and the Golden Rule, originally promulgated 500 years before the Christian era by the Chinese philosopher Confucius, "Do not to others what you would not others should do unto you," shall be a guide to faith and conduct.

People may outgrow natural ignorance, but ignorance carefully cultivated, polished, propagated, and called divine truth, can rarely be outgrown, because it paralyzes the power of growth.—Moncure D. Conway.

He who is afraid of asking is ashamed of learning.—From the Danish.

Jail to the witch! If wise and true.
Oblivion to the fake!

A Subject for Thought.

Pat Crowe, the kidnapper who extorted $25,000 from Cudahy as a ransom for his son, who was threatened with death unless the money was forthcoming; who by his own confession has been an all-around bad man and thief, setting the law at defiance, and who was discharged by an Omaha jury for his gravest crime for want of proof, is now posing as a reformer, and volunteering advice to parents and judges of courts, telling them how to make good boys out of bad ones.

Pat's advice may be good. It is possible the greatest criminals may become the wisest teachers; but a long life of worthy conduct is the best proof of such a fact.

Can he who has stolen himself rich; who has secreted his ill-gotten wealth until his term of service to the state has expired, then, when released from imprisonment, recovers the stolen plunder to fatten on the proceeds, be an exemplary reformer? Crowe was acquitted by a jury. Possibly he may have added perjury to his kidnapping crime to gain a favorable verdict, we don't know. Has he returned any part of the plunder? That would be well enough to know before giving him credit for sincerity. And the question must be answered in the affirmative before any confidence can be placed in his word.

"He who seeks equity must do equity." When Crowe shall surrender the last dollar gained by wrongdoing; shall have toiled with honest hands for his support to the close of life; shall have shown contrition for criminal conduct and by meritorious example has proved himself a true reformer, then when death has come to his relief, there may be placed on his head stone with propriety: "A Reformed Kidnapper, and general bad man, with some good traits of character, but not a worthy practical teacher."

Reply to Critics.

Objections are made to the exposure of the errors of the Bible, and of the doings of the churches, because say the objectors, we can make more converts to Spiritualism by silence on these subjects. They seem to desire to engraft our philosophy on the rotten and disintegrating creeds of the church for policy purposes.

There is just where we take issue with such propagandists. The evidence is positive, that Christianity is only an ingraft on Roman paganism. And Roman paganism is an inheritance of Grecian, Egyptian and Babylonian cults, interblended with the religions of India. Indeed Rome borrowed from all the religious systems which had taken root in countries subordinate to her arms. It was the amalgamation of those cults, somewhat revised, that made the Christian system possible. Each successive advance did exactly what our critics wish Spiritualists to do, built on the ruins of predecessors, just as the Bible translators followed in the deep rut made by earlier translators.

Ours is a new revelation, made in an age of advanced science and critical thought. It rests on an entirely different foundation from any of the older religions. It devolves on us to remove the crumbling, fallen, and obstructing ruins of ancient faiths, and lay our foundation on bed rock; and thence build skyward of wholly new and indestructible material. If we construct wisely, we shall rear a habitation which will reach cloudland; whose stately magnificence will endure forever; alike indifferent to the tempests' roar, the nightnings' flash, the tornadoes' shock, the rending of earthquakes, or the corroding tooth of time; whereas were our structure built on the shifting sands it would meet the deserved fate of all its predecessors.

An Endless Chain of Prayer.

Churchmen have a good hold on heaven at last. They have devised a "chain of prayer," by which they hope to frighten everybody, his wife, sisters and brothers, yes, and cousins, into praying for the advancement and grorification of the church. Street laborers, their employers, stenographers and clerks are embraced in the list, as well government officials. Those receiving a copy of the prayer, failing to use it, or to send it on during the next nine days after its reception, are warned that some terrible calamity will befall them because of such neglect. The postoffices are already reported filled with these importunities to heaven. As the chain lengthens, and the ears of the recipients enlarge, it is hoped the refrain will reach St. Peter, and he will kindly open his gates to welcome every son and daughter of this praying band to his pearly courts, not leaving a single soul to be tortured in eternal flames by his Satanic Majesty.

But a query: How much superior are these manufactured prayers to those propelled by wind or wave in Buddhistic countries, each revolution of the praying machine being a repetition of the prayer? Indeed, was not the idea of a "prayer chain" borrowed from this Oriental method of asking favors from the Supreme?

Met Them With Truth.

Now the announcement that the Rock River Methodist Conference District has organized an Aggressive Evangelist Institute, for the purpose of keeping alive the aggressive spirit in the church. The first session commenced at Joliet Dec. 10.

The Methodist church has always been noted for its disregard of the direction of the Master to "put up thy sword," hence by a special organization, under the immediate supervision of two bishops of which Rev. R. H. Pooley is presiding elder, it will be well to "look a little out" for the consequences.

Spiritualists, however, will gladly meet the "Aggressors" at any time and anywhere with the sword of Truth.

Still Exciting Wonder.

A pretended "find" of a box of papyri by the Egyptian Exploration Fund, at Oxyrhynchus, of date from the second century before our era to the sixth century, with lost Greek originals of the Acts of St. Peter, of which we gave an account in these columns upwards of a decade ago, is still circulating through the press as something new.

It is a positive fact that matters published by the writer in his own paper, more than fifty years ago, are still doing service as news items in the public press. Frequent repetition will make these exaggerations as "true as the Bible" after awhile.

I would rather be poor, with a little sympathy in my heart, than to be rich as all the mines of earth and not have that little flower of pity in my breast.—Ingersoll.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Gelett Burgess.

The Great Work.

There is now in process of publication a book which is likely to create deeper interest, thought and possible agitation than did "The Great Psychological Crime."

This new addition to the Harmonic Series is also by the author of the book just named, and if we can trust the prospectus the author has kept his promise to tell the world what he knows of the "Independent Method of Spiritual Self-Development."

A New Book in the Field That Points Out the Way to Independent Spiritual Unfoldment.

Modern Spiritualism has been in existence some 58 years, and during that eventful period it has excited agitation in every part of the inhabitable globe, and has been instrumental in causing a beneficial change in many respects in nearly every religion in civilized countries. It has to a certain extent banished hell, improved heaven, and so modified the Providence of God that it has many pleasing aspects among critical minds. The sentiments or sermons expressed from the various pulpits no longer smoke with the fumes of hell, or agonizing wails of infants emanating from the sulphurous regions of dark despair, and this change is owing almost exclusively to the benign influence exerted by the spirit world through various mediums.

There is not a church in the land to-day that has not to some extent felt the exhilarating effects of Spirit Return; in fact, most marvelous spirit manifestations have occurred in the Catholic church in this city.

Spirit Return did not come exclusively to those who are designated as Spiritualists—no one has a patent on the glorious truth, as often said before, and when Spiritualists say, "Our Cause exclusively," they shoot far from the mark; neither should one allude to Spirit Return as belonging solely to the great body of Spiritualists scattered through the world. Even the National Spiritualists' Association does not in any sense of the word pretend to confine the various manifestations to the ranks of those whom it represents. The all-diffusive and potentially soul-elevating character of Spirit Return takes the phenomena entirely outside of THE DOMAIN OF HUMAN CONTROL. At the same time, however, the National Association has become a most wonderfully efficient factor in giving special importance, value and significance to the phenomena constantly transpiring in our ranks as well as outside of the same. It does not, however, assume to crystallize the multitudinous phenomena into a creed—it does, however, propagate the same as a GRAND TRUTH, illustrating the inspiring fact that spirits CAN AND DO RETURN and communicate with the mortals of earth, and it desires to convince the whole world of the fact, and in every way protect those who are honest intermediaries between the two realms, and in that respect it IS DOING A MAGNIFICENT WORK, a work for which it is entitled to the gratitude of all progressive minds. Its mission is a comprehensive one, and it should be well sustained in its laudable efforts.

Realizing the full beauty and sublime grandeur of Spiritualism, and the great good it has accomplished for the world, and fully appreciating the grand and noble intermediaries between the two worlds, spiritual and material—the angelic mediums to whom we owe so much for the advancement of our cause—realizing this in full, we ask, is this the ultimate, the present status of our Cause? Has it reached the apex, the crowning point in this great movement, in the method of communicating with spirits? How does the first steamboat constructed by the immortal Fulton compare with the mighty leviathan of the sea to-day? How does Franklin, the early electrician, compare with the great Edison, the electrician of this date? How does the first clumsy locomotive compare with the one that crosses the continent in a few hours, as if by magic?

It is not to be supposed, under any circumstances, that the subtile process by which spirits communicate with mortals, has reached the end of improvement, or attained the climax. The method of communication at the present time is mostly of a subjective character; that is, for the time being, the spirit takes exclusive possession of the medium's organization, and controlling it, expresses his views from his own spirit plane or standpoint. For the time being, the medium is held in complete abeyance, entire submission to the controlling influence. The medium is the instrument, the subservient subject, while the operator manifests himself as he sees fit, at times giving expression to the loftiest thoughts imaginable, in philosophy, in poesy, in all that is grand, beautiful and soul-elevating in all the departments of life. One personality is the dominant factor, the supervising intelligence, for a time the ruler, while the subject is simply an instrument used for a special purpose—that and nothing else, and those instruments have brought light and immortality to the world, and illuminated it as never before, and so far we reverence them, for in so acting, in so far sacrificing themselves, their time and body, they have brought forth a knowledge that has sent forth its influence to the uttermost parts of the earth?

But has not the ERA OF SUBJECTIVE MEDIUMSHIP, OF KINGSHIP, OF CONTROL, OF SUBJUGATION, about reached the end of its mission; or is not the present time the beginning of a new era?

However beautiful, however timely the subjective process of mediumship may have been in the past, or however beneficial it may be at the present time, is it not likely that some other potent method is being foreshadowed at the present time, and is it not, as it were, just rising in the horizon of progress to commence shedding its beneficent rays on the earth?

We have lately had the pleasure of carefully examining the advance sheets of a most remarkable book, by the author of the "Great Psychological Crime," a book that created an immense amount of interest throughout the ranks of Spiritualism two years ago, in this country and Europe, and started a vibration in our ranks never before witnessed. We think that his present book, the title of which is will cause a new wave of potent thought to sweep over the entire ranks of Spiritualism. What to us has added special interest in the work, is the spiritual growth and wonderful unfoldment of one of the students of the author. While presenting nothing externally indicating his unparalleled spiritual advancement—nothing indicating that he is in any sense of the word a psychic, yet when once in his sphere, and hearing his explanations in reference to matters spiritual you then sense the greatness of the man. As to his personality, we are not permitted to give his name at the present time; we will say, however, that he is a Mason of high degree, and has often lectured before Masonic lodges. He is also a physician with an exceptionally large practice, and a surgeon of remarkable skill, and a frequent lecturer before medical societies, and often consents to meet inquiring minds in this city, at his home, to explain his psychical experiences. This man's experience reads something like a fairy tale. He has been led on an ascending plane of spiritual unfoldment, and this, too, without the least passivity of his intellectual faculties. His spiritual growth is in no sense of the word abnormal, in no sense caused by the action of spirits, or the passivity of darkness or mild twilight. It has for its basic foundation or superstructure A RIGID ETHICAL STANDARD, and from that standpoint alone fruitful results have followed as naturally as the beautiful flower springs from the parent bud or stem.

Thus we discern very clearly and distinctly something new on the spiritual horizon—something that indicates an onward step on to a higher spiritual plane where the atmosphere is clearer and where nature's plan in some respects is unrolled like a scroll, and one sees a new superstructure on which to stand to observe the grandeur of God's vast universe. From week to week this matter will be considered, and a new order of things unfolded to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, in connection with "THE GREAT WORK."

Crystals a Stepping Stone to Life.

Prof. Lehmann, in his laboratory at Karlsrhue, Prussia, is reported by the Psychical Research Society of Columbia University, with having actually generated life by artificial methods, though the Professor, say they, hesitates to announce the fact to the public.

That life in the minutest and humblest form, under favorable conditions of light, heat, moisture and electricity, in the long eternity that precedes us, was generated by Natural methods, is earnestly believed by this writer; and all the higher forms of life, however variant and gigantic, in the slow processes of millions on millions of years, and by interblendings, have been developed and evolved from such rude intermingllings.

Life is scarcely more difficult to imagine than is the formation of the crystal which is evolved under the watchful eye, aided by a powerful microscope, in modern laboratories. We know the germ of all life, including man himself, was but an infinitesimal microscopic object at its beginning; that nurtured by the mother during its embryotic period, many years of after growth and development were necessary to perfect its being and fit it for an independent existence.

Mental and Physical Wreck.

It is sad, but doubtless true, John Alexander Dowie, of Zion City fame, has become a physical and mental wreck. His wild schemes of personal aggrandizement, combined with extravagant habits and notions of life, were the cause of his ruin. It is stated that Zion City is to be abandoned, and that Overseer Voliva, the new Moses, will lead the chosen forth to found a new city elsewhere.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

Fame is not got by seeking it. All such pursuit is vain. It may very well come about that a man will succeed through tact and various artifices in making for himself some sort of name. But if there is no inner worth, all will prove empty and ephemeral.—Goethe.

Something Startling!

Two Leading Minds to Start a New Vibration Among Spiritualists and Thinkers Generally.

The Erudite Col. Olcott, the great Theosophist, and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of our leading inspirational speakers, will both entertain our readers on the "Dangers of Psychism," from diametrically different standpoints. The lecture by the distinguished Colonel will be answered by Miss Harlow in her own inimitable way, both constituting something of great value to Spiritualists. Now is the time to send in your subscriptions, with an additional subscriber, and thus keep up with the advancing procession instead of following in the rear.

The Progressive Thinker is a THOUGHT-PROMOTER. It leads its readers constantly into new fields and ENRICHES THEIR MINDS with something they never thought about before. In fact, those who do not peruse THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER week after week are not posted in regard to the general trend of our Cause in SPIRITUAL AND OCCULT MATTERS, hence so far as accurate information is concerned, they must take a rear seat.

In order to illustrate more fully Occult Matters, we had a lecture by COL. OLCOTT, on "THE DANGERS OF PSYCHISM," reported in full expressly for The Progressive Thinker, and also a reply thereto by the versatile and eloquent ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Col. Olcott is the one great man among Theosophists. India and Its Occultism are an open book to him, he having lived there for many years and become familiar with the Mahatmas, and his address on the "DANGERS OF PSYCHISM" will excite very great interest among Spiritualists everywhere, and particularly will the comprehensive and exhaustive reply thereto by ELIZABETH HARLOW AWAKEN A PLEASANT VIBRATION ALL ALONG THE LINE!

The interest in The Progressive Thinker is becoming more intense all the time, and all the prominent speakers and mediums in the land have apparently selected it for their official organ, ignoring almost without exception the Organ of the Fakes in Chicago—an organ that exploits all the dishonest mediums, whose notices are carefully excluded from our columns. Honest mediums and speakers know full well that their names would be soiled if used in connection with Elsie Reynolds, the materializing medium, and the creator of bogus spirits, with artificial toggery; if used in connection with Fullis, the exposed spirit artist; with Winans, whose bushel of trick-spirit-paraphernalia was captured at Hot Springs, Ark.; with the Nichols Sisters, with their bogus spirits, and many others of like ilk, who are exploited in their special organ, the Light of Truth. Are not honest mediums and speakers defiled by having their names mentioned in a paper that exploits such a class? Are not the meetings in this city and elsewhere condoning fraud to a certain extent when they seek the columns of that paper, for their reports, thus aiding in its support? There is not, we repeat, one promient, widely-known lecturer in the land, but what would shrink from having his name mentioned in that paper, feeling it would be defiled thereby. A word to the wise is sufficient.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER

We Remind you that the SPIRIT OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER NEVER SLEEPS! There is need of a WATCHMAN and WE ARE IN THE TOWER and ON DUTY for the best interest of TRUE SPIRITUALISM!

Another Announcement!

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

J. Ruegg, Milwaukee, Wis.; S. J. Grubb, Carbondale, Colo.; E. J. Hay, Arkansas City, Kansas; Joseph A. O'Donahue, Portland, Ore.; Dr. Loretta Mann Hammond, Rosedale, Kansas. Dr. Hammond writes:

"You may enroll me as a subscriber to the complete works of A. J. Davis. My mother bought his complete works when they first came out, and loaned them until they never came back. Then she purchased them again, and loaned again with the same results; but she never regretted it, and only hopes they are circulating yet. I can only account for their going out of print, on the ground that they have been so extensively plagiarized, and even when the exact words have not been used the idea and spirit have been stolen. Then it was for the interest of the 'lesser lights' that the greater light should be extinguished. In his little work on Healing (I have forgotten the exact title) may be found every true principle that has ever been enunciated by the Christian Science, Divine and Mental Healers; and his book was published before Christian Science was ever heard of. Indeed, his was the first book that proclaimed the power of mind over matter through love as well as will. Previously we had mesmerism through will. Also he claimed that spirits helped in healing. The latter claim is not held by the mental healers. Otherwise, I consider his book the real source of inspiration for the new cult. Let them be reprinted, and thus credit be given to whom it belongs."

INDIANA STATE ASSOCIATION.

A Five Days' Meeting to Be Held at Richmond, Ind.

The Indiana State Association of Spiritualists will hold a five days' mass-meeting at Richmond, Ind., from December 19 to 23 inclusive.

E. W. Sprague and Will J. Erwood will be the speakers, and we will also have good messages and good music.

Richmond is a thriving city, and there are hundreds of Spiritualists there, but at present they have no organized society, and out of this series of meetings we expect to organize a good strong society.

The Indiana State Association is moving steadily along, and our state missionary, Will J. Erwood, is doing excellent work, all his time being engaged up to the Holidays; in fact, he has more calls than he can fill. Wherever he has been they are asking for return dates, and some places have already arranged for two or three days in each month.

Any society desiring his services after the holidays had better write him or the secretary at once, as his dates are rapidly filling up. Address Mr. Erwood, 216 Main street, Peru, Ind.

Sec'y Indiana State Association.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

the American Institute for Psychical Research. Dr. Savage resigned because of his ill health, and Dr. Putnam had other reasons for not continuing in its service. Dr. R. Heber Newton was willing to resign in deference to an unfounded prejudice against clergymen on such Board. His resignation, however, was laid on the table at a meeting of the Board and it is hoped that circumstances will arrive that will make it wiser to withdraw his resignation.

This misunderstanding on the part of many persons about the work of the Board makes it advisable to explain it more clearly. It has been the impression that the Board of the Institute is an investigating body. It is in fact nothing of the kind, and so does not require professionally scientific men to do the work. It is desired that the Board shall be constituted of men having a national reputation so far as that is possible that it may be the custodian and disburser of the funds contributed to the investigations and practical work of the Sections. The Councils in the separate Sections are to supervise the scientific aspect of the work and the general Board of Trustees will do nothing more than inspire confidence in the care and use of the endowment which the Institute seeks and expects. The Institute is modelled after the Carnegie Institute in Washington. The Board of that Institution is not primarily a scientific body and does not require to be. The scientific men are the receivers of subsidies. It is intended that the work of the American Institute shall conduct its work in the same way. The independent Sections shall be responsible for the scientific features of the work and it is these that must have scientific men for their members. Section "A" will be for Psychopathology or Abnormal Psychology, and Section "B" for Psychic Research or Supernormal Psychology. The Board of the American Institute will simply stand for the importance and respectability of the work, and will be responsible for the care of its endowments. That will be the only service expected of it.

The present Board consists of the Incorporators and Dr. R. Heber Newton and Mr. Charles Griswold Bourne. The The Incorporators will resign when the Board has been completed. They are serving only as a working body until the proper persons have been elected. It will be a matter of some difficulty in the present state of things to secure the men desired. In this country the work of abnormal psychology and psychic research has not yet received the open support that it obtains in Europe. There it has received aristocratic endorsement and scientific men lose nothing by manifesting an interest in it. Patience and hard work will give it the standing which it deserves and which it has received in other lands.

In answer to many inquiries which come to us from various sources it may be well to state that Mrs. Leonora Piper, who was so long the subject of investigation and experiments by Dr. Richard Hodgson, has recently gone to England under the auspices of some of the members of the English Society for Psychical Research. She will remain at least for the year in England, and no other assured plans have, at present, been arranged for the future.

Apropos of this circumstance it may be well to announce that some recent experiments have revealed another case which might be made as useful to science as that of Mrs. Piper had we the endowment fund to protect it and to enable proper experimentation to be carried on. It is the case of Mrs. Smead (pseudonym), the wife of a clergyman, and never at any time a professional. An article representing some experiences and experiments in connection with her was recently published in the "Annals of Psychical Science." The experiments which have since then been conducted under more favorable conditions for scientific importance have shown that it is a case which we cannot afford to neglect. It is hoped that a report of these experiments can be published in an early number of the "Proceedings." In the meantime we can only present the opportunity for scientific investigation in the case to all those who may appreciate the nature of such an undertaking.

The Fay Performances.

The public is very generally acquainted with the entertainments of persons calling themselves the Fays and these performances have been constantly reported to me as "remarkable," and as illustrating mind-reading of a very extensive type. Being a public affair I never had any interest in them as matters having any scientific importance. But the constant reports to me of facts that certainly mystified the audiences and which could not be easily explained as reported made it necessary for me to witness the entertainment that I might say to people, who were always asking me whether I had seen them or not and advising me to go, that I had seen them. I felt that I had no right to express an "a priori" judgment about them, no matter how certain I might be regarding their actual or possible explanation, and that my judgment would have more weight if I could report from experience. It was enough for me personally that the performance was the stereotyped one to make it scientifically worthless, even if it was what it appeared to be to observers interested in the supernormal. But I saw no reason for depending upon conjecture in spite of the fact that the performances belonged to the class which has had the run ever since Houdin or Cagliostro. I knew well enough that the performances were not reported to me rightly. At least I felt quite certain of it, but would not allow surmises to regulate my statements, though the time will soon come when it will not be necessary to witness such entertainments in order to express a judgment of their real character.

The consequence was that I took the first opportunity in New York to go and see the performance. It was at the Alhambra. It may surprise some readers if I say that, so far from interesting me as mind-reading, the performance bored me. It was not at all what was reported to me. People had told me that the mind-reading was remarkable and the description of the phenomena certainly made them so appear. But there was not the slightest superficial evidence of such a phenomena in the performance, taking the question of conditions into account in the matter. In order to confirm my impressions and in order to secure definite evidence of what the explanation was I went a second time and took a stenographer with me for reporting certain statements of Mr. Fay that were of importance in proving that reports of such entertainments are rarely correct. The consequence was that I confirmed the view which I had taken of the first entertainment.

The first thing to be said in justice to the Fays is that they actually make no pretense of doing what the public usually reports as being done. This fact struck me as one of the most astonishing that I ever observed. It is such a good illustration of mal-observation on the part of the people reporting on such phenomena. Mr. Fay prefaced the performance with remarks about it. He stated that he and Mrs. Fay did not pretend that there was anything supernatural about the entertainment, but that what they did was done by perfectly natural means. He said, however, that he did not pretend to explain it and that the audience could draw their own conclusions. There was a slightly oracular air about his evidently prepared statements that was calculated to mislead careless observers. He was quite willing to leave upon his hearers a mystified impression, though his language did not require any interpretation implying more than the traditional prestidigitator's illusions. He reiterated several times his disclaimer to the supernatural and there was no excuse on the part of the audience for thinking the performance anything more than what can be seen with Hermann and Kellar. In perfect justice to the Fays, therefore, it should be said that their performance is a perfect legitimate entertainment for those who go to witness juggler's tricks of that sort. Men are themselves to blame if they imagine that it is anything else, for the Fays are careful to exculpate themselves from the accusation of being frauds. If the audience would simply observe what it is told it would see that the whole thing is an illusion and that it has no right to cry fraud until it has eliminated its own illusions. The only criticism which can be made of the Fays is that the language of Mr. Fay is studiedly vague and is well calculated to deceive the unwary listener. That is the art of the juggler to help in the impressiveness of his performance. Hermann and Kellar used it, but with no intent to deceive anyone in an illegitimate way. It is often necessary to put the mind in a condition to appreciate the mystery about the performance and so to increase the difficulty of explaining it easily. But this is no reason why the observer should assume a credulous attitude toward phenomena that have an oracular claim to a supernormal interest.

I am not going to enter into any detailed account of what the tricks are or how they are performed. As I am not entitled, after the explanatory remarks of Mr. Fay himself, to accuse them of fraud, it is neither necessary nor just to make such an accusation any more than we would accuse a professional prestidigitator of it when he is mystifying us by his tricks. But it will be permissible to call attention to an interesting historical fact which will explain both the short memories of the public and its careless judgment of such phenomena.

The performance of the Fays which I witnessed contained two parts. The first was what is called a physical phenomenon in the parlance of psychic research. Mrs. Fay permits a committee —two men in what I witnessed—to tie bands about each wrist and then to tie her hands to a post or board behind her back. The details I need not give, as I am concerned only with the appearance of security in the case. In this condition a sort of cabinet is drawn up to cover her from the sight of the audience, and she then throws objects placed on her lap out through an opening in the shielding curtain, or a glass placed on her lap is found held in her teeth, or a box is placed around her and a tambourine is thrust about. To the ordinary spectator the phenomenon seems inexplicable.

But I would remark two important facts. First the very presence of the cabinet and concealing curtain proves that it is not what it appears to be. There is no excuse for this concealment, but the fact that the trick cannot otherwise be performed without betraying its method, which is very simple. Secondly, there is no assurance that the committee does not actually consist of confederates, who do the tying to suit the emergency. Confederates are not at all necessary for this performance, as it can be carried out very easily without confederates of any kind except Mr. Fay, and with "green" hands it can be done without his complicity. I refer to these circumstances because they are so usually neglected by spectators in the formation of their judgments or in their experience of mystification. These incidents are presumably negligible circumstances when as a fact they can be the secret of a perfectly simple explanation. The form in which they are presented is calculated to disarm our suspicion as our attention is concentrated on other matters in the performance. What we need to learn in such cases is the habit of careful observation of all the facts and of recognizing that the very circumstances which we are disposed to disregard are the important supernormal character was as questionable thirty years ago as ones, at least in many or most cases.

But there is a more interesting fact which should be remarked in regard to his physical performance. It is fully described and explained with illustrations in Truesdell's "Bottom Facts of Spiritualism." Curious enough the performance in all the details of the present Fays—who have no connection with the original Annie Eva Fay, save that Mr. Fay is represented as her son—is precisely that which I mention. It was a trick of the original person after a little practice. It is strange that such performance could be received at this day without newspaper discovery and exposure. But here is the same old trick exciting the interest and credulity of the public and the newspapers do not know enough of history to recognize the phenomena.

Of course, to begin with, no one should take such performances seriously. They no doubt do so for reasons that did not apply in the last generation. The existence of anything whatever of a supernormal character was as questionable thirty years ago as the belief in fairies, and only the serious claim on the part of psychic researchers that telepathy is a fact could revive a disposition to think that there "must be something in it" when a juggler makes claim to the supernatural.

When a man discovers some new phenomena in physical science and proves his case satisfactorily to the scientific world he can then turn to public exhibitions and illustrations of his discoveries. This is what has occurred with Xrays, with wireless telegraphy, color photography and similar matters of public interest. It is then quite natural, when the claim of mysterious agencies is made, that the public should throw aside its natural skepticism and listen patiently and credulously to such performances. But while it is natural it is not intelligent to do so. Such claims have not been satisfactorily proved to the scientific world and hence the duty of the public is to respect scientific method and conditions until the existence of "supernatural" phenomena has been proved. It can then be a passive spectator to the exhibition of them. I am not implying that they ever will be proved to the satisfaction of anyone, but I am emphasizing the point of method which is so essential to keep in mind when witnessing claims of the kind under consideration. There is no excuse in assuming the possibility of such things and suspending our skeptical judgment in the presence of public performers. Such performances are prima facie jugglers' tricks until they are proved otherwise, and they will never be proved otherwise in such a public way.

Readers will be interested to know that some persons who had been in the employ of the Fays appropriated some of the material and devices used in their entertainments to set up a similar business of their own. The Fays brought suit for an injunction and the defendants aver that the performances, in which they were themselves accomplices, are tricks. It is not our place here to discuss the merits of either side to such a controversy, but it is clear from the affidivits made and from the evidence on file in the New York Courts that the phenomena exhibited by the Fays have no claim to serious consideration by intelligent people. A complete copy of the documents on file in the New York Courts is in our possession. It is not necessary to publish these. Their existence is sufficient to show the folly of scientific interest in such performances.

I shall not give any explanation of the "mind-reading" performance of the Fays as I witnessed it. I shall not treat a perfectly legitimate entertainment and amusement as a fraud. My object here is only to say that the public must defend itself and that it can easily do by looking at the matter as it would an entertainment by Hermann and Kellar. Enjoy it and admit that you do not see the secret. It is not easy to see exactly what the trick is in all cases. The fact is that no one method is employed, or need be employed in the performance. I have very good evidence of what parts of it are, but do not care to expose them until serious claims have been made that they are supernormal. I desire only to emphasize the fact that persons interested in psychic research should not form their conceptions of what some of us are interested in by any such performances. They must learn that there is but one simple fact to be constantly kept in mind regarding the claims of the supernormal. It is that the conditions under which phenomena are produced must be under the control of a responsible scientific man. They must not be determined by the subject exhibiting the phenomena. With that criterion one need never be exposed to illusion in the formation of his judgment, no matter how illusory his sense perception may be. Just assume that it is all an interesting trick and laugh at your own discomfiture in not discovering it. The serious consideration of such phenomena must be stopped except as education in delusions.

THERE WILL BE NO INTELLIGENT PROCESS IN PSYCHIC RESEARCH AS LONG AS THE PUBLIC RUNS AFTER SUCH PERFORMANCES AND FORMS ITS IDEAS OF WHAT SOME SCIENTIFIC MEN ARE SEEKING BY SUCH MANIFEST AND SIMPLE TRICKS. THE FACT IS THAT THE PERFORMANCE WILL NOT COMPARE IN INTEREST WITH THE ENTERTAINMENTS OF HERMANN AND KELLAR, AND THESE DO NOT PROFESS TO BE MORE THAN DELIGHTFUL ILLUSIONS.

There is another way of stating the last point made. It is that the demand for public illustrations of the supernormal always leads to the adventurer's method of simulating it. If the public would only cease seriously to consider such performances as either interesting, save for the production of illusions, or illustrative of the supernormal, the exhibition would die of itself. It will live just so long as people wish to be humbugged in that manner, and when the performers are shrewd enough to tell the audiences that they are only entertaining them the spectators must have themselves to blame if they go away astonished. If we are to have genuinely interesting psychic phenomena let the demand be for really scientific conditions and the production of them under circumstances not resembling such performances as are here under notice. It ought not to be necessary in this day to say this. It would not have been necessary if the scientific world had done its duty the last quarter of a century in sifting from illusory phenomena having a genuine interest and if it had educated the public up to the means of discriminating the genuine from the false. Unfortunately the scientific men have allowed the public to discover the genuine and then to believe with it the fraudulent simulation of it. Consequently the blame for the present public credulity and hasty judgment must be shared by those who should have been the leaders and educators. But whoever is to blame there is no reason to exercise that demand which results only in humbugging ourselves. Demand that scientific work be done and pay one-fourth as much for that as you do for fraud and illusion and you will find something worth while. It may not be all that you expect to start with, but it will be enough to throw light upon the nature and destiny of man. This will never come from public exhibitors. It is in private life and in the application of scientific method that we may expect to find genuine phenomena whatever their meaning.

JAMES H. HYSLOP.

Visions of the Dying.

There is a group of psychic phenomena which are well worthy of a most searching investigation. I refer to the alleged visions which many dying persons are said to have had of friends who have passed away before them. In some cases they seem to have coincidental importance that may give them some scientific value, if well enough attested as facts.

It would be natural to suppose that the crisis of death would often be attended by all sorts of hallucinations. We know how disease and accident lead to deliria in which all sorts of hallucinatory experiences occur; and narcotics and anaesthetics evoke similar phenomena in various degrees. They are but illustrations of influences which disturb the normal activity and functions of the organism, so that the non-co-ordination of central functions results in the simulation of realities by all sorts of phantasmal forms. Death is a particularly disintegrating process and we should expect similar mental disturbances in its progress. Usually the motor functions are so paralyzed by it that we should expect little evidences of sensory phantasms. One way of indicating what dying experiences are in any clear manner seems possible and that is by speech. When this occurs the subject must retain enough of his normal motor activity to give expression to his mental experiences. Indistinct indications may be given by motor action in the eyes. But what we should discover from ocular movements of a dying person would be doubtful and possibly capable of various interpretations. It would be the same with hearing. But when speech is retained enough may be uttered for us to ascertain the nature of the experience of the dying person, and occasionally dying persons utter intelligible sentences which convey unusual information. It is such that ought to be the subject of a very careful investigation. I propose here to suggest that a census of them might easily be collected and made the subject of statistical study and psychological analysis.

The interest which such phenomena may have for science will depend upon a variety of considerations. The first is that we shall be able to attest their existence and their nature. The second is that we shall have some reason to believe that they have a selective character pertinent to their apparent significance. The third is that we shall have some means of distinguishing them from those capricious and kaleidoscope phenomena that are classifiable as ordinary hallucinations. The fourth is that their characteristics shall suggest some coincidental incidents not referable to chance and at the same time distinguishable from others possibly due to subjective causes. It will not be an easy task to conduct such an investigation, but it is possible by long efforts and perseverance to accumulate facts enough for some sort of study and analysis. The method of effecting this object will be the subject of discussion later in this article. We must first describe the phenomena to which attention needs to be called.

The phenomena which I have in mind are a type of apparition. Whatever their explanation they have one charactoristic which distinguishes them from ordinary deliria. They represent the appearance of deceased persons to the vision, imagination, or other source of sensory representation, of the dying person. If we should find that they bear evidences in any case of supernormal information they would become especially significant. But one of the most important things to study in them would be their relation to instances of hallucination under the same circumstances that had no coincidental value. That is, we need to study their statistical aspects which would require a comparison of the really or apparently coincidental cases with those which are unmistakably hallucinatory and subjective in their origin. For this a large collection is necessary and this can be made without any presumptions regarding their explanation. I shall illustrate the kind which are particularly interesting and suggestive. They are as described above, instances in which dying persons seem to see previously deceased friends claiming in cases to be present for the purpose of aiding in the passage of death. When this claim of assistance in the crisis of death is made it is through mediums and it is sometimes or generally made when there has been no evidence at the death scene that such a presence was remarked. I shall give a few illustrations of both kinds.

The following instance I received from a correspondent whose testimony I have no reason to question:

"I called this afternoon (May 14, 1906) upon a lady who buried a nine-year-old boy two weeks ago. The child had been operated upon for appendicitis some two or three years ago, and had had peritonitis at the same time. He recovered, and was apparently quite well for a time. Again he was taken sick, and from the first the doctor thinks he did not expect to get well. He was taken to the hospital, and operated upon. He was perfectly rational, recognizing his parents, the doctor, and the nurse, after coming out from under the influence of the anaesthetic. Feeling that he was going, he asked his mother to hold his hands, until he should be gone. He had, I forgot to say, been given strong stimulants after the operation, which, I suppose, made his mind very active.

Soon he looked up and said, "Mother, dear, don't you see little sister over there?"

"No, where is she?"

"Right over there. She is looking at me."

Then the mother to pacify him, said she saw the child. In a few minutes, his face lighted up full of smiles, and he said:

"There comes Mrs. C—— (a lady of whom he was very fond who had died nearly two years before), and she is smiling just as she used to. She is smiling and wants me to come." In a few moments:

"There is Roy! I'm going to them. I don't want to leave you, but you'll come to me soon, won't you? Open the door and let them in. They are waiting for me outside," and he was gone.

No, I forgot to tell about his grandmother. I gathered the impression that he did not know his maternal grandomther, but may be wrong.

"As his mother held his hands, he said: "How small you are growing. Are you still holding my hands? Grandma is larger than you, isn't she? There she is. She is larger, isn't she? Her hand is larger than yours. She is holding one hand and her hand is larger than yours.

"Remember that the boy was but nine years old. Did he really see spirits and recognize them? Or was it the result of the highly sensitive condition of the brain caused by the medicine?"

The mother confirms this narrative and inquiry brings out the following facts. The boy had never known his grandmother who had died twenty years ago. His sister had died four years before his own birth. Roy is the name of a friend of the child and he had died about a year previous.

It will be apparent that the instance is not in any respect an evidential one. There is no way to displace the assumption that the phenomena were hallucinations until better indications of their real nature can be obtained by further investigations, if that can ever be done. It is natural to suppose that the critical condition of the mind and body would give rise to these and similar phantasms, especially in certain kinds of natures. The natural assumption may not be the right one, but it is the only one that science can tolerate until its credentials are better satisfied by evidences of the supernormal. There is nothing in this instance that can be verified as not a natural and subjective effect of the conditions associated with dissolution, unless it be the systematic group of deceased persons involved. For the physiologist and the psychologist this goes without saying, and the mention of it here is only to emphasize for the general reader the confident opinion which science would entertain regarding such incidents. Science might not have better evidence that this special case is hallucination than the believer in its reality has for this character, but the mass of facts in human experience connected with abnormal mental and physical conditions associated with disease and death would predispose any cautious person in favor of the scientific interpretation as either more probable or more safe as an assumption than the one in favor of the other.

Other cases of a similar nature have come to my attention, but I have not yet been able to have a first-hand account made for me. I remember that my step-mother told me that her mother, while dying, saw an apparition of her husband who had died many years ago. Such incidents are probably relatively numerous, but as they are not recorded or examined carefully they can only be subjects of skeptical consideration.

But I have a group of incidents which are much more suggestive of something unusual and possibly quite significant. Some of them involve a record and confirmatory support that gives them importance. The first of this group is one dictated to me and taken down verbatim by the two persons who knew the facts. They are both intelligent and trustworthy witnesses, not more liable to errors in such things than all of us. It involved circumstances which give peculiar value to the incident as the story will vouch for itself. I quote the narrative as I took it down.

"Four or five weeks before my son's death Mrs. S—— was with me—she was my friend and a psychic—and a message was given me that little Bright Eyes (control) would be with my son who was then ill with cancer. The night before his death he complained that there was a little girl about his bed and asked who it was. This was at Muskoka, 160 miles north of Toronto. He had not known what Mrs. S——had told me. Just before his death, about five minutes, he roused, called his nurse for a drink of water, and said clearly: "I think they are taking me." Afterward seeing the possible significance of this I wrote to Miss A—— and asked her to see Mrs. S.—— and try to find why the word "they" was used, underscoring it in the letter, as I always supposed the boy's father would be with him at death. Miss A—— went to see Mrs. S——, and did not mention the letter. When I saw Mrs. S—— more than a week later we were having a sitting and Guthrie, my son, came and told me how he died. He said he was lying on the bed and felt that he was being lifted out of his body and at that point all pain left. His first impulse was to get back into his body, but he was being drawn away. He was taken up into a cloud and he seemed to be a part of it. His feeling was that he was being taken by invisible hands into rarified air that was so delightful. He spoke of his freedom from pain and said that he saw his father beyond."

The intimate friendship of Mrs. S—— with Mrs. G——, the mother of the boy, makes it possible to suppose that hints or suggestions may have been unconsciously conveyed to the boy before his death or that something was said at the experiment which might deprive the incidents of that importance which they superficially seem to have. I have, however, observed that the two ladies are as careful in their account as we should expect, and while I cannot give the narrative as much scientific weight as may be desirable I think there is reason to believe that the main incidents are correct. The boy's experience of a strange girl at his bedside, and the allusion to the plural of the pronoun are quite possibly correct accounts of the facts. A record of the latter sitting would be necessary to be assured that the allusion to the father was not in response to a suggestion. But in any case the incident is better than, or at least appears to be, superior evidentially to the first one quoted, and it indicates what may be done to assure ourselves of significance in such phenomena.

I quote next a well authenticated instance on the authority of Dr. Minot J. Savage. He records it in his Psychic Facts and Theories. He also told me personally of the facts and gave me the names and addresses of the persons on whose authority he tells the incidents. I am not permitted to mention them. But the story is as follows:

"In a neighboring city were two little girls, Jennie and Edith, one about eight years of age, and the other but little older. They were schoolmates and intimate friends. In June, 1889, both were taken ill of diphtheria. At noon on Wednesday, Jennie died. Then the parents of Edith, and her physician as well, took particular pains to keep from her the fact that her little playmate was gone. They feared the effect of the knowledge on her own condition. To prove that they succeeded and that she did not know, it may be mentioned that on Saturday, June 8, at noon, just before she became unconscious of all that was passing about her, she selected two of her photographs to be sent to Jennie, and also told her attendants to bid her good-bye.

"She died at half-past six o'clock on the evening of Saturday, June 8. She had roused and bidden her friends goodbye, and was talking of dying, and seemed to have no fear. She appeared to see one and another of the friends she knew were dead. So far it was like the common cases. But now suddenly, and with every appearance of surprise, she turned to her father, and exclaimed, 'Why, papa, I am going to take Jennie with me!' Then she added, 'Why, papa! Why, papa! You did not tell me that Jennie was here!' And immediately she reached out her arms as if in welcome, and said, 'O, Jennie, I'm so glad you are here.'

As Dr. Savage remarks in connection with the story, it is not so easy to account for this incident by the ordinary theory of hallucination. We have to suppose a casual coincidence at the same time, and while we should have to suppose this for any isolated case like the present one the multiplication of them, with proper credentials, would suggest some other explanation, whatever it might be.

I shall turn next to two instances which are associated with the experiments and records of Mrs. Piper. They both represent the allegation of deathbed apparitions, and statements through Mrs. Piper purporting to represent communications from the deceased showing a coincidence with what was otherwise known or alleged to have taken place at the crisis of death. The records in these cases are unusually good, having been made by Dr. Richard Hodgson. I quote his reports. The first instance is the experience of a man who gives only initials for his name, but was well known to Dr. Hodgson. It occurred at a sitting with Mrs. Piper.

"About the end of March of last year (1888) I made her (Mrs. Piper) a visit—having been in the habit of doing so, since early in February, about once a fortnight. She told me that a death of a near relative of mine would occur in about six weeks, from which I should realize some pecuniary advantages. I naturally thought of my father, who was in advaned years, and whose description Mrs. Piper had given me very accurately some week or two previously. She had not spoken of him as my father, but merely as a person nearly connected with me. I asked her at this sitting whether this person was the one who would die, but she declined to state anything more clearly to me. My wife, to whom I was then engaged, went to see Mrs. Piper a few days afterward, and she told her (my wife) that my father would die in a few weeks.

About the middle of May my father died very suddenly in London from heart failure, when he was recovering from a very slight attack of bronchitis, and the very day that his doctor had pronounced him out of danger. Previous to this Mrs. Piper (as Dr. Phinuit) had told me that she would endeavor to influence my father about certain matters connected with his will before he died. Two days after I received the cable announcing his death my wife and I went to see Mrs. Piper, and she (Phinuit) spoke of his presence, and his sudden arrival in the spirit world, and said that he (Dr. Phinuit) had endeavored to persuade him in these matters while my father was sick. Dr. Phinuit told me the state of the will, and described the principal executor, and said that he (the executor) would make a certain disposition in my favor, subject to the consent of the other two executors when I got to London, England. Three weeks afterward I arrived in London; found the principal executor to be the man Dr. Phinuit had described. The will went materially as he (Dr. Phinuit) had stated. The disposition was made in my favor, and my sister, who was chiefly at my father's bedside the last three days of his life, told me had repeatedly complained of the presence of an old man at the foot of his bed, who annoyed him by discussing his private affairs."

The reader will remark that the incident is associated with a prediction, but it is not the subject of important observation at present. The chief point of interest is that the prediction is connected with a reference to a will affecting private business matters, that the sister reported a number of visions or apparitions on the man's death-bed, and that subsequent to his death, not known apparently to Mrs. Piper, the statement was made by Phinuit that he had influenced or tried to persuade the man in reference to these matters. The coincidence is unmistakable and the cause is suggested by the very nature of the phenomena and the conditions under which they occurred. But we should have a large mass of such incidents to give the hypothesis something like scientific proof.

The next case is a most important one. It is connected with an experiment by Dr. Hodgson with Mrs. Piper, as was the previous one, and came out as an accidental feature of the sitting. The account is associated in his report with incidents quoted by him in explanation of the difficulty and confusion accompanying real or alleged communications from the dead. It will be useful to quote the Report on that point before narrating the incident itself as the circumstances associated with the facts are important in the understanding of the case, while they also suggest a view of the phenomena which may explain the rarity of them.

"That persons 'just deceased,'" says Dr. Hodgson, "should be extremely confused and unable to communicate directly, or even at all, seems perfectly natural after the shock and wrench of death. Thus in the case of Hart, he was unable to write the second day after death. In another case a friend of mine, whom I may call D., wrote, with what appeared to be much difficulty, his name and the words, 'I am all right now. Adieu,' within two or three days of his death. In another case, F., a near relative of Madame Elisa, was unable to write on the morning after his death. On the second day after, when a stranger was present with me for a sitting, he wrote two or three sentences, saying, 'I am too weak to articulate clearly,' and not any days later he wrote fairly well and clearly, and dictated to Madame Elisa (deceased), as amanuensis, an account of his feelings at finding himself in his new surroundings."

In a footnote Dr. Hodgson adds an account of what this Madame Elisa communicated regarding the man. I quote this in full. Referring to this F. and Madame Elisa, he says:

"The notice of his death was in a Boston paper, and I happened to see it on my way to the sitting. The first writing of the sitting came from Madame Elisa, without my expecting it. She wrote clearly and strongly, explaining that F. was there with her, but unable to speak directly, that she wished to give me an account of how she had helped F. to reach her. She said that she had been present at his death bed, and had spoken to him, and she repeated what she had said, an unusual form of expression, and indicated that he had heard and recognized her. This was confirmed in detail in the only way possible at the time, by a very intimate friend of Madame Elisa and myself, and also of the nearest surviving relative of F. I showed my friend the account of the sitting, and to this friend a day or two later, the relative, who was present at the death bed, stated spontaneously that F., when dying said that he saw Madame Elisa, who was speaking to him, and he repeated what she was saying. The expression so repeated, which the relative quoted to my friend, was that which I had received from Madame Elisa through Mrs. Piper's trance, when the death-bed incident was of course entirely unknown to me."

The apparent significance of such a coincidence is evident and though the entire number which I have quoted are not sufficient to afford alone the proof of survival after death they are indicative of events which demand a most careful investigation. If there be such a thing as a transcendental spiritual world and if we actually survive in our personality after death we might naturally expect some connection between the two sets of cosmic conditions, at least occasionally, supposing, of course, that the chasm between them is not too great to be spanned. The existence of a large mass of facts alleging such a connection, though these facts are relatively few in comparison with the cases of silence regarding the beyond, is a circumstance which would suggest searching for incidents during the passage of death that might represent a rare connection between the two worlds in this critical period. We could not expect them to be frequent a priori but we should not expect two worlds, closely enough related for the individual to retain his identity, to wholly exclude communications in articulo mortis. If anything like it actually appeared to occur we should endeavor to ascertain how much evidence exists for the credibility of the occurrence in sufficiently numerous cases to establish the truth of the actual connection, or to confirm other types of incident pointing toward the same conclusion. The phenomena are too suggestive in many ways to leave their occurrence unnoticed and uninvestigated.

WONDERFUL SUCCESS OF "ACTINA"

In the Treatment of

Afflictions of the Eye

Every person with impaired eyesight or suffering from weak or diseased eyes should write for our latest free booklet, entitled "Positive Evidence."

The records of phenomenal cures by the "Actina" treatment, as described therein by grateful patients themselves—names and addresses given—will satisfy the most skeptical that "Actina" is not only a remarkable, simple and harmless invention, but effects cures after specialists have pronounced the cases incurable.

Following are a few of the successes produced by "Actina," described in our free booklet, "Positive Evidence."

A Chicago gentleman, after suffering 12 months with inflammation of the iris, used "Actina" a few weeks. He says he can now see as well and as far as anybody.

An Iowa lady writes that after being under treatment of specialists for 15 years, "Actina" completely restored her eyesight and she no longer uses glasses.

Astigmatism and granulated lids impaired the eyesight of a Hartford (Conn.) lady. Specialists failed to cure. As a last resort, against advice of friends, she tried "Actina." She writes: "For many months I have written almost daily without glasses. No pain in my eyes and drooping eyelid is restored."

"Actina" removed a cataract from the eye of an Oklahoma lady; relieved the closure of a tear duct for a well known Chicago lady, and in scores of instances people have been able to discard eyeglasses through the faithful use of "Actina." To get an idea of the enthusiasm of our patients the entire letters should be read.

"Actina is built on common sense principles. Its simplicity, effectiveness add lasting qualities will appeal to any one that will investigate. Let us send you one on ten days' trial. Use it as often as you please and if you are not benefited, or for any other reason are not satisfied, send it back and no charge will be made. Write today. Address New York & London Electric Ass'n. General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The Song Cards for sale at this office at $4 per hundred, are the help you need in society work.

J. C. Craig, formerly a prominent lawyer and Spiritualist of Clyde, Ohio, and a medium of rare powers, has removed to Los Angeles, Cal., and has taken up his residence at No. 203 W. 50th street. He will practice law, and and lecture on subjects connected with the Harmonial Philosophy.

Prof. J. MacLane now resides at No. 746 W. Madison street. He will answer calls to lecture and give messages. He is an interesting talker and a good message bearer.

Juliet H. Severance, M. D., will lecture for the Social Science League Sunday evening, Dec. 23, at Room 412 Masonic Temple. Her subject by special request, will be "Radical Reminiscences." The Social Science League is unique in that it has held meetings for three years, and yet has no constitution, by-laws or list of membership. A chairman or time-keeper is the only officer. The platform is absolutely free to every subject. It is a great educator.

Izetta B. Sears, spiritual evangelist, will hold services Sundays, at 7:30 p. m., in Aarcade Hall, 7 Park Square, Boston, to be aided by musicians, speakers and other good talent.

Mrs. Mary B. Hill writes: "The regular meeting of the Band of Harmony occurs on the 20th of December, in room 512, Masonic Temple, this being the last meeting of the old year. We hope to see all members and friends present. We would thank The Progressive Thinker and friends who helped us make the bazaar a decided success."

Samuel A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant street, Mrs. F. S Sheriff, president. Sunday services, Dec. 9. The president presided at both sessions, with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. The afternoon circle proved interesting, with short addresses by Mr. G. L. Baker of Boston, and Mrs. Carter of Malden, after which considerable time was given to message work. Mr. Geo. L. Baker of Boston occupied the platform in the evening, giving a very interesting address on the subject, 'I Wonder if We Are All Doing the Best We Can.' Mr. Baker's addresses are all permeated with that strong sympathy which appeals to the heart. The speaker, after finishing his address, devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many messages. Our ex-president, Mrs. Alice M. Whall, will occupy our platform on Sunday evening, December 16."

Alice M. Sexsmith writes: "On Sunday, Dec. 9, at the meeting of the Christian Spiritualists Society, both afternoon and evening, was well attended. In the evening we had as speaker Prof. Gilray, who has just returned to the city after an absence of two years. He is a very forcible speaker and one that is out for the truth of Spiritualism. Messages were given by Mrs. Nellie Kusserow and Miss Thomas. Remember that on Sunday evening, Dec. 23, Dr. Geo. B. Warne will again be the speaker, and as he always draws a crowded house, you had better come early in order to get a seat. We are expecting also to have with us Mrs. Ella J. Bloom on that evening, and many others who will be able to bring you truthful messages from your loved ones. Meetings every Sunday afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 o'clock, at Conway Hall, Western avenue and Lake street. Open door; all welcome. Good speaking and messages given at all meetings."

W. J. Elmo writes: "The Spiritual Alliance Society, holding meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., in Vincennes Hall, 1514 Vincennes avenue, corner Cottage Grove avenue, is having excellent services. The audience is greeted each Sunday evening with new speakers, always followed by Mrs. May Elmo with plenty of splendid tests and messages. We invite mediums to take part in our afternoon services. Our social and dance is held every Saturday evening, and is most pleasant—a gathering of Spiritualists, and all enjoy the evening. All are welcome."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

The Ladies' Lyceum Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., every Wednesday.

The Ladies' Industrial Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, every Thursday.

E. T. Oden writes from Perry Okla.: "Rev. Alice Baker of Dallas, Texas, state missionary for Oklahoma, has just closed a very successful series of lectures here, organizing a strong society at the close of the meetings. We began our meetings in the court house, having no building of our own; but we soon outgrew that, and used the opera house for the last three nights. Mrs. Baker is a brilliant exponent of the philosophy of Spiritualism, and her work here has made many friends for the cause. Only a little over one year ago we had our first lecture here on the claims and principles of Spiritualism, at which time our audience was composed of some ten or a dozen persons; but our immense crowds now go to show that people are beginning to do some thinking and investigating. We hope to soon be able to secure a regular pastor and be able to accomplish much for the cause of truth in this little city."

Harry J. Moore, well and favorably known in this section of the country, writes from San Diego, Cal.: "I united in marriage Miss Mary Alma Gleed and Mr. Walter F. Johnson, on Monday evening, Dec. 3, at the home of the groom. The newly wedded pair went to Washington on their wedding tour, but are expected home within two months."

Secretary writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club will have a dinner in the Assembly Hall, Fraternity Building, 70 East Adams street, on Christmas Eve, beginning at 6 o'clock, after which there will be dancing, cards and other attractions. The admission fee will be 25 cents, which includes dinner, and an additional 25 cents for dancing or cards. Everybody is cordially invited to attend, and we pledge you a hearty welcome on the threshold of a Merry Christmas. The tea party will be held on the afternoon of Dec. 31, in Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Bldg., between the hours of 2 and 5. There is no admission fee, but the small sum of 10 cents pays for a cup of tea and entitles one to a reading by one of our mediums. This being our last meeting of the year, we earnestly urge each member to be present and extend our hospitality to all friends."

G. L. Willms writes: "The members of the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, had the pleasure of greeting quite a large audience last night, Dec. 9, Sister C. Mueller gave a fine lecture, which was very interesting and instructive, and brought many a fallen soul nearer to God. Bro. Vanderhoogt also gave a short lecture. Sister C. Mueller gave readings of articles, which were well received. The rapidity and correctness with which these messages were given was something exceptional, and many a tear was wiped away, and sunshine brought instead. The Progressive Thinker was on hand again for the evening, and all taken up."

Mrs. E. A. Newton writes: "The Psychical Society of Spiritualists, M. B. Little, president, holds meetings every Sunday, and is doing a fine work for Spiritualism in Glens Falls, N. Y. Mr. Little occupies the platform. No speakers from out of town are available. For many years we have had Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds every November and April, and this November has again brought her to us. Every time we note with pleasure a growth, and this season it has manifested a marked change in force of expression and power. The audiences have increased each week. The Thursday evening meetings are larger than ever before. Many who heretofore came through curiosity became interested. Spiritualism has become one of the respected 'isms,' and the thinkers and business people interested. We look forward to the coming of Mrs. Reynolds from autmn to spring with eager longing. She finished her labors with us this Thanksgiving day. We bid her God-speed, knowing her work has been well done and appreciated, and hope that April will add still greater good, and bring back to us our friend and sister. Mrs. Mabel Witham of Boston, will be our speaker for the coming three weeks."

Mrs. M. E. Kratz writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "I find the Chase-McCoy combination have again been brought to light. How they could have kept up their gauzy exhibitions these years since I met them at Summerland Camp, Ohio—some seven years ago—is a mystery. I attended a seance. I noticed Mrs. McCoy had been partaking of onions, and failed to conceal her breath. My guide manifested, and lo! he, too, must have dined at the same hotel, and I felt never to excuse him for it. Well, I told several about it, and found that she and Chase left hurriedly. Some penalty ought to be given these persons for allowing bogus spirits to appear at their seances, for they were surely of earthly origin, and never saw the spirit spheres."

An Appeal for Names of Spiritualists in the State of Washington.

J. R. Burton, engaged in the defense of mediums in Washington, would like the names and address of all the Spiritualists in the state, with whom to communicate. Address him at No. 1613 Fourth avenue, Seattle, Wash.

Esther H. Blinn writes of the First Spiritual Union, Norwich, Ct., "This society is particularly fortunate in having among its members no 'fair weather' Spiritualists. Although it snowed all day, excellent audiences were in attendance at both services on Sunday, Dec. 9. The services opened as usual with organ voluntary by Prof. Charles A. Dowsett and invocation by our regular speaker, Albert P. Blinn. After a hymn by the quartette, Mr. Blinn gave brief addresses; in the morning upon 'The Mission of Spiritualism,' and in the evening upon 'Apparent Contradictions,' and was followed by Wellman C. Whitney of Springfield, Mass., as message bearer. Mr. Whitney's work was done in a dignified, impressive manner and made an excellent impression upon our people, it being his first visit to our city. Though not sensational in any manner, some of the messages were splendid demonstrations of psychic power, and gave great satisfaction to the friends who received them. Our young people are busy rehearsing the drama, 'Above the Clouds,' to be given next month, and the gentlemen of the society are devising ways and means to make the 'Turkey Supper' to be given by them January 3, the event of the season. We also hope to have with us early next month, Rev. May S. Pepper for an evening seance."

D. G. Hill writes: "Your correspondent wishes through the columns of your valuable paper to call the attention of its readers, and especially those of the West Side to the success that is attending the efforts of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, to establish a lyceum in connection with its other work. On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9, the little folks gathered at the meeting-place in numbers that were a surprise to all who were present, and several new faces came to give their names as members and workers under the leadership of the young lady, Miss Ethel Munger, and her assistants. The little folks as well as the older people, seemed pleased with the lessons given, and the other exercises, that awaken and keep up the interest of the coming man and women. Our thanks are given to the little lady, Miss Munger, that she has accepted the position as so many of us were untutored in the work. After the lyceum, services moved on the usual interesting way, with our esteemed brother, J. E. Coe, and our loved sister, Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, as speakers, and our sisters, Mrs. Addie Clybourn and Mrs. Alice Sexsmith, as message bearers. In the evening a large audience greeted our associate pastor, Dr. J. H. Randall who held the closest attention of his listeners. After the lecture the messages came from those very capable sisters, Mrs. Dr. Caird and Mrs. Susie Thompson. Their work was most satisfactory. Bear in mind that the 'open door plan' is our motto. All welcome at O'Donnell College Hall, South Paulina street, between Washington and Park avenue, Sunday afternoon and evening. Our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, spoke for the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., Dec. 9. Our speaker for Sunday evening, Dec. 23, will be Mrs. Nora E. Hill and for Sunday evening, Dec. 30, the Hon. Charles Hughes. Our annual meeting for the election of officers of official board, will be held at 705 W. Madison street, on Saturday evening, January 5, 1907. To all who are members this meeting is of importance."

Mrs. Alice Baker, state missionary for the State Spiritualist Association of Oklahoma, came to the city Saturday last to deliver a few lectures. Through the kindness of the management the opera house was given without charge for the use of the lecturer. A good crowd was present each evening and her lectures were soul inspiring to all present. The crowds increased each evening, showing the increased interest taken by her hearers. Mrs. Baker is an impressive and exceedingly interesting speaker. She holds her audience in silence and extreme attentiveness. The writer, who is not a Spiritualist, was very favorably impressed with her as a public speaker.—New Era.

Grand Christmas Festival, Concert, Tests, etc., given by the First German Spiritualists' Society, Sunday, Dec. 23, 1906, at Gartelman's Hall, corner 13th street and Ashland avenue, commencing at 2 p. m. Admission 25 cents. Evening dance. This festival is for the benefit of the Old People's Spiritualist Home.

At Billings, Montana, a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Selbrede, on Tuesday evening November 27. The contracting parties were Mr. Chas Lux and Miss Louisa Cooley of Miles City. The ceremony was performed by Mrs. Eva McCoy, and a number of guests were present to witness the beautiful services of a Spiritualist wedding. After congratulations were offered the happy couple, a very harmonious circle was formed, and Rev. Love spoke beautifully under control, and Mrs. McCoy followed with messages. A lunch of ice cream, cake and coffee was served later in the evening.

Mrs. S. H. Slosson, one of Chicago's oldest and best known mediums, is going to spend the winter in Florida with Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, who has a cottage at Lake Helen. On her way Mrs. Slosson will stop at Indianapolis where she will meet old friends and new, at the Claypool Hotel, Jan. 3, 4 and 5, and she will be at the Bennett House in Cincinnati, Jan. 6, 7 and 8, which will no doubt be welcome news to her friends in these cities. Mrs. Fixen, whose lectures are always interesting and instructive, and full of impressive points, exceptionally well made, will lecture at various parts in the South.

Mary L. Brennen writes: "The Oriental Spiritualists Society of Pittsburg, Kansas, is doing well. Meetings are held every Sunday night in the A. O. U. W. Hall on East Third street. On the first Sunday of this month we had a treat by the visit of Rev. Sarah C. Scovell of Galena, and Mrs. Fannie Paul of Joplin, who did excellent work for us, and interested many investigators. The society at the last business meeting elected Mrs. Mary L. Brennen first pastor of the society, in recognition of her long and valued service to Spiritualism. We now have Longley's beautiful songs, and are organizing a choir. At all our meetings free literature is distributed which is eagerly accepted by investigators. If any one will send us some French spiritual literature, it will give great pleasure to our French brothers and sisters as they do not read English readily. Any friends donating papers for distribution here will be assisting in missionary work that will produce good results. Address Mary L. Brennen, 207 East 8th street, Pastor Oriental Spiritualist Society."

Mrs. E. A. Nicholson, a most excellent medium of Seattle, Wash., gives her views of the work being done by The Progressive Thinker: "The dear Thinker is a valuable acquisition to any home. It comes regularly each week, and is always filled with the grand good things that bring peace and comfort to the sorrowing hearts, and gives strength, courage and new inspiration to the weak, weary and hungry ones. It is a very effective remedy for all ailments peculiar to the human mind, and should be taken by every family in the land. Surely, Mr. Editor, yours is a God-given mission, and my prayer is that the angel world may guard and guide you in the future, as it has done in the past keeping your paper spotless, and pure, and a fit representative for the grand truth it so nobly espouses. Wishing you the greatest of success in your effort to spiritualize the Spiritualists of the country, and with kindest regards to yourself and Mrs. Francis, I am, yours for progression."

Ezra Beckwith writes: "Mrs. McDonald Winn, of Norristown, Pa., a gifted medium, has been holding meetings for several months in Utica, N. Y. The consensus of opinion by large and intellectual audiences, is that she is the best medium for platform work that ever visited Utica. The press has reported her work with much credit to the cause she represents."

Mrs. Garber, a prominent Spiritualist, formerly residing at Des Moines, Iowa, has removed to Walla Walla, Wash.

Carrie L. Hatch writes: "9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass. The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual, but owing to illness in her home, the president, Mrs. Allbe, was unable to be present. The vice-president presided at the meeting. The sale of aprons proved quite a success, and a neat little sum was added to the treasury. The evening, Mrs. A. S. Waterhouse was the first speaker. She said she felt it was time to protest against mediums using the Indian as a plaything. Many of them 'pow-wowed' in a manner that was disgusting; that the Indian came to earth as a power, with dignity and strength, for the good of humanity, and she for one rebelled against many of the manifestations professing to be Indians. Mrs. Steinen then gave communications which were recognized. Mr. Backstron gave quite an address upon the Indian, his characteristics, etc. Mrs. Shirley spoke upon the same line as did Mrs. Annie Chapman. She followed with tests, which were recognized. Miss Adelaide Creighton gave a beautiful original poem. Mrs. Lovering presided at the piano."

To the Friends of the Lyceum.

May I once again call your attention to the need of united effort and support of the most important work of Spiritualism? We hope to issue a Lesson Quarterly for our children, but must have some interest shown to warrant it. The Quarterly would contain lessons for each Sunday, responsive readings, gems of thought, and order of exercises. It could be issued for ten cents a quarter. How many do you want?

We have also pretty lyceum pins, costing but five cents each; $4 per hundred, or $2 for fifty. Each member should wear one.

The N. S. A. authorizes me to offer three banners to be given to the three schools showing the best record during the coming year. No matter how small your lyceum may be now, you have a fair chance to earn the lovely banner if you show progress during the year.

All lyceums desiring to compete for the prize, send not later than January 15, the number of pupils enrolled, average attendance, general conditions, and names of officers; these will be duly filed, and we will advise your secretary thoroughly regarding the duties of competitors. Let me have your hearty sympathy and support that we may make this work beneficial to old and young children.

Yours Fraternally,
ANNA L. GILLESPIE.
321 S. Highland Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

Attention—Massachusetts State Association.

The annual meeting will be held in Berkley Hall Annex, 3 Berkeley street, Boston, on Tuesday, Jan. 1, 1907, at 10:30 a. m. Only members are admitted to the meeting, as only the annual business of the year, with election of officers, will be attended to. All members are urgently requested to be present at this meeting. The business meetings should be of more importance than the social meetings, so please all congregate at that hour at the above place.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office

MINNESOTA, ATTENTION!

An Urgent Appeal From the President of the Minnesota State Spiritualists Association.

Don't all speak at once, but the city or town outside of Minneapolis or St. Paul, that gets busy first will have the first call for one of these grand love feasts.

At the National Convention held in Minneapolis, 1905, the following recommendation was adopted:

"We recommend that at least ten mass-meetings be held throughout the United States between this date and June 1, 1906; the N. S. A. to bear the whole expense of the same and endeavor at these meetings to secure contributions to the treasury of the N. S. A. That correspondence should be held with societies or Spiritualists in the cities selected to secure their co-operation, and to avoid conflicting with local or state association meetings."

The above recommendation being called to the attention of the S. S. A. of Minnesota, in convention assembled, 1906, in the president's report, the Committee on President's Report, article 7, reads, and was adopted, as follows by the convention:

"We endorse the recommendation of our president in regard to mass-meetings, and feel that this convention should take some action looking to the holding of mass-meetings by the state association, also in co-operation with the N. S. A. during the ensuing year."

The president and board of trustees are now ready to perfect arrangements with the N. S. A., and to hear from localities that would like to have one of these three days' meetings. What will be required is the co-operation of the Spiritualists in the city, asking for the mass-meetings, with the state officers, and a grand success is assured you in your own home towns.

Now, let us get together, one and all, and plant the banner of Spiritualism on the wall, that all may see and know the Glad Tidings the spirit world would bring.

Write to J. S. Maxwell, president, 83 N. 17th street, Minneapolis, or F. E. Irvine, secretary, 904 Hastings avenue, St. Paul, Minn.

ALMOST A MIRACLE.

Buried Five Months Yet Lives.

Denver papers print this story: "After being buried alive in the family vault at Kansas City from January 9 to the middle of May, Frederick J. Harvey, one of the wealthiest men in Kansas City, came back to life Tuesday, Sept. 4; married his Denver sweetheart, Miss Lily Godfrey, who was instrumental in restoring him to life, Sept. 5; departed on his honeymoon the same day and will arrive here next week to visit relatives."

From Billings, Montana.

By your kindness I will send you a few more lines for your delightful paper, to let the Spiritualistic reading people know we are not asleep, if we are away out here.

No, indeed, we have been enjoying a spiritual feast; last week the Rev. G. C. Love was with us, and delivered some fine lectures and gave some good tests.

This week we have Mr. and Mrs. Moses Hull; it is not necessary to say anything about their work, as all lovers of true philosophy of Spiritualism know what a treat has been given us by their presence.

Our dear friend and co-worker, Mrs. Eva McCoy, has returned from the East and has been selected by the Board to fill our pulpit for the coming season, having filled the same last season, endearing herself to the hearts of the church by her gracious disposition and noble work.

Now, last, but not least, I wish to say we have been trying to organize an "Individual Developing Class," myself as instructor, under Dr. Lucas, now teaching in Santa Barbara, Cal. Some here have opposed the class; going so far, I learn, as to write you in regard to Dr. Lucas. I understand from the reply you have made (I have not seen it), that you do not know of Dr Lucas.

I will say, he has a class at present in Kansas City, Kansas, Rev. Mrs. Ella Baldwin Instructor, there; also a class in Denver, Col. His classes and lessons are on the Limitless Life Individuality, as the name states. None are forbidden, sect or creed, but all are welcome, who wish to live and learn to enjoy this life that they may be better prepared for the one to follow. Spiritualists should be broad enough to embrace all these noble teachings.

Hoping this finds all well with you, I thank you for your kind note, received sometime past and beg to remain yours for truth.

DR LAPPONI'S DEATH FORETOLD BY PATIENT.

Physician to Pope Dies at Exact Time Predicted by Man on Death-bed.

Rome, Italy.—Dr. Lapponi, physician to the pope, died at 7 o'clock Dec. 7. He had been seriously ill for some time of cancer of the stomach, and pneumonia setting in he could not, in his weakened condition, withstand its ravages.

The following curious and interesting incident regard Dr. Lapponi, is being recalled here to-night: On Sept. 6, Dr. Lapponi, while visiting a patient in a hospital in Rome, said to the man, "Unless complications set in, you will recover in a couple of days."

After the doctor had gone the patient said to his nurse:

"Dr. Lapponi is mistaken or he wishes to deceive me; I will die in a month, and Dr. Lapponi will pass away in three months."

The prophecy of the patient has been fulfilled. He did die two days later, the nurse died a month later, and Dr. Lapponi expired exactly three months later. The doctor related this prophecy to his friends, including the Pope. The pontiff laughed at it, but Dr. Lapponi, who was a confirmed Spiritualist, remarked that it was possible for a human being to receive inspiration and unconsciously foretell the future.

The Pope has given orders that the funeral of Dr. Lapponi be at the pontiff's expense.

Band of Harmony Bazaar.

The Annual Bazaar of the Band of Harmony (auxiliary to The Church of the Soul) held on the 6th inst., was in every way a great success.

Fine weather, good lunch and supper, pretty booths, pleasant attendants, and an almost endless variety of things to buy; cheerful and liberal purchasers, happy boys and girls, and lots of fun and candy. Nothing more could be desired. Too much praise cannot be given to those who had charge of the whole, and of the several departments. Mrs. Rolston, of the Apron booth very soon had sold out her entire stock, and it seemed a large one.

Mrs. Peet was radiant in disposing of the numbers on two quilts, and in the evening they were drawn by delighted recipients.

The "Fancy Articles," under Mrs. Druliner and Mrs. Ellis, went like hot cakes, and those purchasing seemed more than pleased.

Mrs. Goodrich had any quantity of toilet articles and made large sales.

Mrs. Richmond's hand-painted pieces were all disposed of, and the larger pieces went by numbers. Mr. J. R. Francis, having the lucky number on the "Butterfly" piece. Mr. Edward Janse got the picture of a scene in Ouina's world, and Mr. Howey drew the pansy piece. Masters Dhuliner, Dexter, Garner, and Rohrbach, were busy with candy and grab-bags, and auctions.

The greatest success, and the most work was that of serving lunches from 11 to 1:30 o'clock and from 5 to 7:30, under the able management of Mrs. A. W. Bloom. She, with her volunteer assistants certainly wrought wonders in feeding hungry people who came in droves, just as if they knew where to get something nice to eat. Lots of "Eastern Star" ladies were rushed in to lunch at noon, by a friend who knew all about it.

In fact the net proceeds were better than last year, or several preceding years.

Mrs. Nichols added to the zest of the occasion by donating a very wee jacket knitted by herself and selling numbers to all the bachelors and widowers present. In fact she and Mrs. Turbett made things lively for everyone by selling "numbers" on all the things left.

Mrs. Hill did good service giving readings in the corner, curtained off for mystical and occult things.

Those detained until nearly the close were happy in hearing one of Mrs. Nichols' fine songs.

Long may the Band of Harmony live. COR.

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

PSYCHIC RESEARCH.

The object, therefore, in calling attention to the incidents which I think impressive enough to urge an organized effort to certify a larger number of them, if this be possible. What is urged, therefore, is that efforts be made to report for record all the death-bed visions and utterances that may possibly bear upon the issue suggested in such as we have quoted. I would propose that all members of the Society report or ask to have reported all such experiences as have come under their notice. In this way a census of them can at least be initiated. To this method I hope to add some means of inducing physicians in their private practice to be on the watch for them and to report them to the proper persons. We may ultimately induce physicians in the hospitals to instruct nurses and officers to make observations and to record all experiences of a hallucinatory character or otherwise. In any case they will be rare, but on one side or the other of the issue there is no other way to give our convictions a scientific character.

The cases which I have mentioned show interesting coincidences and are too suggestive to disregard the opportunity to collect similar instances with a view to their study in detail. We must expect the largest number of them to be non-evidential, that is, to represent facts which are not verifiable in respect of the other side. But if they can be obtained in sufficient numbers to exclude chance in respect of the persons said to appear in such apparitions we may have a scientific product. To exclude chance we need to compare them with visions that do not represent the discarnate as thus appearing, but that may be treated as casual hallucinations. Hence we shall want to take account of all types of dying experiences as observed by the living. It will be especially important to have records from those who were thought to be very ill or dying and recovered who may describe peculiar experiences in conditions bordering on death. It is therefore hoped that members and readers will call attention to any such cases that may have come within their knowledge and to aid in securing a record of them. The extension of the inquiry to hospitals and asylums will require time and such interest as physicians may be induced to take in collecting data for study. But a good beginning can be made independently of the more organized effort to obtain records. The present article is simply an appeal for assistance in an important investigation. The interesting incidents quoted seem to be inexplicable by chance and a large number of similar cases would more certainly exclude it from consideration.

JAMES H. HYSLOP.

A Visual Experience.

The following experience is especially interesting because it does not superficially suggest its explanation. It is from a young lady whom I know personally as well as the other members of her family. There can be no doubt about the trustworthiness of the lady's statements regarding her experience as she remembers it. What its source is may be left to any one who wishes to conjecture it. The contents of it do not place it beyond a hallucinatory production of her subconscious mental action. Her studies had included the matter which was thus reproduced, and the interesting circumstance is the resourcefulness of the subliminal consciousness, if such it be, in recalling and reproducing in this hallucinatory manner knowledge which could not find recall in the ordinary way. An important point of interest is the fact that nearly two years later the lad suddenly developed automatic writing of a most interesting character.

"July 1, 1905.

"One day in the fall of the year 1903, I went into Roman History class at school without having looked at my lesson. I was not in the habit of bluffing, so when the teacher called upon me to answer a question I rose to my feet and commenced to say; 'I do not know my lesson to-day,' when suddenly on the black board behind me appeared in red letters the answer to the question. I hesitated and then read aloud what was written on the board. It proved to be the correct answer. The red letters did not look like chalk, but like ink. This occurred several times during the year, but only in this one subject, Roman history.

"In the spring of the year 1905 in Virgil class I was sent to the board to translate fifteen consecutive lines of Virgil. Now I knew only the first five lines. So I commenced bravely. At about the fifth line I hesitated. I did not know what to write next, and there seemed to be writing on the board below, so to gain time till the dismissing bell should ring, I asked the teacher if I might erase this writing: I said, 'May I erase the board clear?' She answered: 'There is nothing there. It is clean. Go on with the translation.' I looked at her astonished. 'The writing,' I said, pointing to it. She said: 'Don't be silly, there is no writing there.' The girls were beginning to smile and look at me, so I said nothing more, but turned to my translation. I finished the fifth line. The queer writing was in the way. I stared at it. It seemed to be a translation of the next ten lines of Virgil which I was supposed to write, but did not know. The writing looked like white chalk and was in a very slanting hand. Now I wrote a decidedly back hand at the time. I took my own chalk and traced over this writing. Then at last the teacher seemed to see the writing. She read over the translation, said: 'You are improving, Anna,' and added: 'Why didn't you write it all alike? It looks terribly. The first five lines are back hand and the rest slant towards the right.'"

Cases of Amnesia.

Whenever I take a long ride in the open air, if it is a new experience in comparison with my indoor and sedentary habits, the ride makes me very sleepy and if I am free to do so I allow myself to take a restful nap. But I am sometimes in a position where courtesy requires me at least to try to keep awake. To-day (August 4, 1906) I was coming from Westport to Hurricane in the Adirondacks on a stage with a lady whose acquaintance I had made a few hours before on Lake George, both happening to be going much of the way together. We were talking about psychic research matters and as usual I became very sleepy. I did not feel free to let myself go off and though I was not in any way bored by my company, I resolved to arrest all temptations to even feel sleepy. But it was in vain. My eyelids became so heavy that, to rest them, I closed them and when I opened them again in a few moments, perhaps not longer than five or ten seconds, I found that I could not recall the subject about which I was talking and had to stumble about with general remarks to avoid discovery. This occurred three times. An interesting feature of the experience was the fact that I did not really go wholly to sleep during these few seconds. I was perfectly conscious of having my eyes closed, of the surrounding country, and of myself as in the midst of conversation. My introspective and inner consciousness was perfectly wide awake, and the closing of my eyes, instead of tending to put me into a deeper sleep, seemed rather to tend to help keeping me awake. But there was total amnesia of what I was talking about and I could not recall the incidents for some time and only after great effort.

Apparently in these circumstances the thoughts which occupied my mind and conversation were of the visual type and any interruption of the normal visual centers threw the mental images into oblivion while the main central consciousness remained active and normal. The fact, if thus rightly interpreted, may throw light upon the relation between a general stream of consciousness and its inability to recall at pleasure the sensory experience which may be necessary for manifesting its rationality.

JAMES H. HYSLOP.

Hurricane, N. Y., Sept. 3, 1906.

While talking with a friend to-day, I became again very sleepy and not feeling the duty to resist it so vigorously as in the case narrated above I closed my eyes as in the previous experience. It was but for a moment and the amnesia which I experienced before was repeated, but I did not remain distinctly conscious during the short moment of sleep which this time occurred. The amnesia, however, did not remain long. I actually slept for a few seconds and on awakening I could recall in a few moments what I was thinking about. The dissociation of my thoughts was not so complete as in the instance of August 4; and probably this was due to the fact that there was real sleep for a few seconds. Consequently the waking state enabled me easily to recall my previous thoughts, as the break with attention was not so distinct as in the earlier case and as the different sensory functions were probably not dissociated as they were when I retained consciousness and allowed the visual functions to suspend their activity. This, of course, is largely conjecture, and I tolerate it only to suggest a problem at psychological analysis.

Pseudo-Clairvoyance.

The following is an incident which would probably have been taken as an instance of clairvoyance unless the circumstances under which it occurred had not been at once determined. I had asked my secretary yesterday to address a number of envelopes and then to make out some bills. While writing out the bills she wrote the name J. B. Jones and without turning over the paper wrote the next name, Charles S. Florence, which was concealed below the first sheet of paper and was not visible in any way. I carefully examined this at the time, and found it impossible to detect the slightest trace of the name or letters through the sheet by normal vision. But if we were to suppose that the phenomenon was due to anything like supernormal vision we should do so without recognizing a most important circumstance which would have been quickly forgotten had not notice been taken of it at once, when my secretary called attention to the coincidence at the time. This circumstance makes it necessary to show that the description of the phenomenon as given above is not exactly complete.

When I asked that the envelopes be addressed it was my intention that the bills should be made out afterward and enclosed independently. But after a number of the envelopes had been addressed it occurred to me that it would save time and confusion if the bills were made out simultaneously, as the same names were concerned. I therefore suggested that, before going any farther with addressing of the envelopes, the bills should be made out for those addressed.

The result was that the cards from which the addresses were taken were simply turned upside down to take them in the same order in which the addresses had been written. The consequence was that when the name J. B. Jones was written memory could easily influence the recall of Charles S. Florence. The second writing of the two names was but half an hour later than the first writing. The lady did not notice that memory had figured in the phenomenon, but recognized that this was its explanation. It was probably a subconscious act which left no traces in the normal consciousness of the influence which gave the act an apparently clairvoyant character. Had not my attention been called to it immediately and had two hours elapsed when I could not have examined the exact conditions of its occurrence it would have been or appeared inexplicable by any ordinary means.

Modern Popery Is Ancient Paganism.

In the first issue of the now well known magazine, "The Forum," in March, 1886, there was an article by Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., the famous minister. The article supposes a certain group of persons to be visiting Rome—the group consisting of "Ecclesiastic," a papal priest; a Broad Church Episcopalian minister; a disciple of Ingersoll, called "Philistine;" and an Egyptian resurrected from his sleep of many centuries, and called "Pagan." The article is headed: "Is Romanism Baptized Paganism?"

The office of the Mass interested Pagan greatly, and from time to time he interjected in respectful whisper his comments on the proceedings. "The Thibetan Buddhists and the Chinese Buddhists used musical bells in their sacred services, very much as you are doing here. * * Most of the ancient temple services saw these same censers, swinging clouds of aromatic incense before our altars * * Your altar, too, stood in our temples, though sometimes we called it the table."

At the conclusion of the office, Pagan talked at considerable length upon the ancient sacred rite to which the Christian Mass he said, bore so remarkable a resemblance. "I could almost again fancy myself back at our ancient mysteries. Altar and chalice and paten, sacred bread and wine, the sacramental feast—all these we initiates knew quite as well as you know them. In India the primitive Vedic religion had its sacred Soma, which made a new man of the initiate; from which he was reborn; which gave the divine power of inspiration and developed a spiritual nature.

"By this sacrament man obtained union with his divinity. Thibet had a sacrament of bread and wine. Our own Egyptians, in celebrating the resurrection of Osiris, commemorated his death by a sacred meal; eating a wafer after it had been consecrated by the priest and had become the veritable flesh of his flesh. This bread was regarded as the body of Osiris, so that our worshipers believed that they ate their God. Mithraism had also its eucharist, with ceremonies quite similar to your Christian mysteries. This resemblance even extended to such a minute feature as your round wafer; which in the Mithraic Mysteries was an emblem of the solar disc or Mizd—a possible hint of the etymological key to your term Missa.

"When the worship of Mithra was introduced into Rome, this sacrament of bread and wine was celebrated in the world's metropolis. The Greeks also had their mysteries in which there was a sacramental supper, the most august of all their ceremonies, wherein Ceres, the goddess of corn, gave men her flesh to eat, as Bacchus, the god of wine, gave them his blood to drink. The consecrated cup was handed round, just as was done here this morning among your clergy. We had even the same sacramentalism which Ecclesiastic evidently cherishes, as I saw by his attitude during your Mass. Do you not remember how Cicero exclaims in one place: 'Can a man be so stupid as to imagine that which he eats to be a god?'"

Observing the uneasiness of Ecclesiastic, Broad Churchman interposed at this point, saying, "This is a delicate subject for our priestly friend. He would much rather that you should have observed the judicious silence of the scholarly presbyter who wrote 'Monumental Christianity'—in all other matters so entirely frank, but here so prudently reticent. But if he slides quickly over this thin ice, others seem less careful.' Of course so unsound a writer as Renan does not weigh heavily, although he does refer in his 'Hibbert Lectures,' delivered under the shadow of Westminster Abbey, to the fact that Mithraicism 'had a eucharist—a supper so like the Christian Mysteries.' But Ecclesiastic may perhaps even now recall the dreadful pages of the learned Mosheim, in words utterly sound opinions we were both so well schooled in our alma mater of theology, but who for once forgot that silence is golden. "The profound respect that was paid to the Greek and Roman Mysteries, and, the extraordinary sanctity that was attributed to them, induced the Christians of the second century to give their religion a mystic air, in order to put it upon an equal footing, in point of dignity with that of the Pagans. For this purpose they gave the name of Mysteries to the institutions of the gospels, and decorated particularly the 'Holy Sacrament' with that title; they used the very terms employed in the Heathen Mysteries, and adopted some of the rites and ceremonies of which those renowned mysteries consisted."

At the conclusion of the Mass, as our little company left the church, Ecclesiastic—who it must be confessed had from time to time turned away his ears in holy horror when Pagan had been talking thus sacrilegiously, a horror that seemed intensified when his own brother churchman stooped to act the part of "chorus" to this blasphemous monologue—felt moved to improve the opportunity and speak a word in season to the poor benighted heathen, which might perhaps convert him so far as to make him anxious to avail himself of the rites of the One True Catholic and Infallible church, while he was out for an airing from Tartarus. The notes of this character of the Catholic church, the miraculous origin of its rites, the supernatural powers of its priesthood, the efficacy of its sacraments as the one means of entering upon eternal life, and the infallibility of its oracles, were unfortunately lost, but they can easily be reproduced from the pages of well known ecclesiastical writers, or heard repeated in most of our cathedrals. At the end of this unctuous harangue, which had gradually risen into the orthodox orotund, Pagan quietly asked: "If all this be so, what do you make of this remarkable resemblance, to say the least, between your ecclesiasticism and our ancient paganism?"

Ecclesiastic, being a thorough-going churchman, who, with the true invincibility of faith, however he might strain at a gnat, was always ready to swallow a sound camel, replied unhesitatingly: "Good Abbe Huc's 'Travels in Thibet' should never have been placed on the 'Index.' Your pagan rites were certainly, as he affirmed, palmed off upon mankind by the ingenuity of the devil in order to bewilder men—satanic imitations of the One Divine Institution. The holy church ought not to have gone back upon him in such a fashion. The venerable fathers, by whom all good churchmen swear, anticipated his courageous utterances. Justin Martyr, in speaking of the Mithraic rites, observed, 'which things indeed the evil spirits have taught to be done out of mimicry.' Tertullian with the same boldness of faith, declared: 'The devil, whose business is to pervert the truth, mimics the exact circumstances of the divine sacraments in the mysteries of idols. Let us acknowledge the craft of the devil. There is no other way of defending the claims of the church in the face of these facts.'"

Whereupon Pagan, shrugging his shoulders, smiled and quietly observed, "So much the worse for the Catholic church. It is not usual for parents to borrow the goods of their unborn children. If the devil thus imitated the rites of the One True Church, he must have had a most singular prescience to have been able to anticipate their exact form, centuries before the true church arose. The fact is plain," he continued, "that your Catholic church shares the sacred 'properties' of religion which were common to all lands and all ages. These rites were indubitably in existence long before Christianity was born. The only natural explanation is, that Christianity adopted them from Paganism. The church may have found it impossible to dispossess these traditionary usages and forms."—"As some of the fathers confess," put in Broad Churchman—"or she may have found in them fitting symbols of her own truths, but, whatever be the interpretation of the fact, a fact unquestionably it is, that ecclesiastical Christianity is our old Paganism rebaptized."

He turned for confirmation of his views to Broad Churchman, appealing to him if this was not the recognized view of scholars even in the church? Broad Churchman frankly rejoined that this was undoubtedly the judgment of dispassionate Christian scholars. "As an Egyptian," he observed, "you will be gratified to learn what Mr. King, a fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge, declares in his work on 'The Gnostics': 'There is very good reason to believe that as in the East the worship of Serapis was at first combined with Christianity, and gradually merged into it with an entire change of name, not substance, carrying with it many of its ancient notions and rites; so in the West a similar influence was exerted by the Mithraic religion.'

"Our friend Ecclesiastic would not question the authority of such a scholar as Baronius, yet he writes: 'It is permitted to the Church to use, for the purpose of piety, the ceremonies which the Pagans used for the purpose of impiety, in a superstitious religion, after having first expiated them by consecration, to the end that the devil might receive a greater affront from employing, in honor of Jesus Christ, that which his enemy had destined for his own service.' The learned Mosheim, after the words already quoted, went on to say, 'This imitation began in the eastern provinces, but, after the time of Adrian, who first introduced the mysteries among the Latins, it was followed by the Christians who dwelt in the western part of the empire. A great part, therefore, of the service of the Church in this—the second—century, had a certain air of the Heathen Mysteries, and resembled them considerably in many particulars.' Our own Dr. Lundy's great book rests upon the fact of the Pagan source of our Christian symbolism. The very highest authority on the subject of Christian symbols testifies: "Their origin, without doubt, must be traced to Paganism."

(Conclusion.)

TO PHOTOGRAPH SPIRITS.

Prof. Lockwood, the Scientist, Declares It Can Be Done as Consistently as Photographing the Invisible Planet.

One of the deepest thinkers in this country is Prof. W. M. Lockwood of Chicago, and as an investigator of psychic phenomena probably no man in America is better known. He lectured at the Spiritualist Temple, Prospect avenue and Jersey street, last night, and this fact probably accounts for the large audience that filled the house. There was not an empty chair in the building.

Many among those who were in attendance are prominent in professional, business and social circles of the city. One gentleman said that he counted some thirty doctors in the congregation.

The professor, at the outset of his lecture, stated that he accepts nothing in Spiritualism that cannot be substantiated by facts. The believer in this philosophy has accepted it because facts have convinced him its teachings are true. There is no such thing as "faith" in Spiritualism. Those who base their belief in Spiritualism simply on faith are by no means Spiritualists in the real sense of the term. It is thought and investigation that makes men and women of to-day champions of this philosophy. This is the incoming era of thought.

Spirit photography was discussed at considerable length by the speaker, who is a photographer as well as scientist of note. Photography is one of the sciences that has been instrumental in making a Spiritualist of Prof. Lockwood. According to him, it is just as sensible to deny any well known physical law as to deny spirit photography.

"'Can you take the photograph of a spirit, an invisible form?' you ask. I do not say 'believe we can,' but I say most emphatically 'I KNOW we can.'"

The speaker then told of his experiments in photographing the invisible, and of the astonishment his discoveries had caused among some eminent scientists of the world. He declared that under proper conditions it is as easy to photograph the invisible as the visible. And this phenomenon, like others, is based on natural principles, such as the relation of color motion to chemical action.

When he first undertook this series of experiments, it was not long before he found that the lens of a camera is able to discover the presence of phenomena which the naked eye cannot see, even through the most powerful telescope. This he accounts for through the sensitiveness of the film of the photographic plate to the action of invisible color motion.

One of the great proofs of these data is that certain cosmic nebula not visible to the eye, is reflected upon the plate as is noted in the experiments at the Lick astronomical observatory in California. Physicists and astronomers tell us that these reactions of color motion take place through 32,000,000,000 miles of space from this earth. Scientists and astronomers of the old world, as well as of America, were amazed at the results obtained.

Then came the pictures of spirit forms. When it was announced that these could be photographed, the world scoffed and the uninitiated still scoff, but the professor says that the truth of his statements can be easily demonstrated to the satisfaction of anybody who has the patience and disposition to investigate as he did.

"These investigations," said the speaker, will prove that we mortals are very closely related to the invisible, and reveal to the investigators the wonderful truth that there is an intelligence about us that will aid us if we only attach ourselves to it. It is our duty to do this. We should strive with all our might to be brought into higher accord with the infinite. Let us study the higher life and strive for higher conquests."

The speaker admitted that he had never witnessed a spirit materialize a solid body, but he had witnessed its etherealization. Still, he was not prepared to say that spirit materialization of a body apparently solid is a fraud. Spirit forms can be photographed only when the proper chemicals are brought into use, and spirit materialization is equally impossible should there be an opposing mode of psychic motion when the medium is endeavoring to produce this particular phenomenon.

"If the Bible is true, Christ materialized," said the professor. "And Thomas, you know, doubted the return of the spirit until he had thrust his fingers into his side. Jacob, you will remember, wrestled all night with an angel, a longer wrestling bout than we have on record in these latter days."

Prof. Lockwood delivers another one of his interesting lectures at the Prospect Avenue Temple next Friday evening. His object in giving these talks, he says, is to contribute his mite toward extending the boundaries of intellect by setting men and women to thinking.—Buffalo Enquirer.

Three Times Infinity.

Many million persons believe in the Holy Trinity, though no one knows that such a union exists. It is, however, known that the Athanasian doctrine of the Trinity is largely a mass of contradictions. The recently revised Presbyterian creed contains a fatal error in saying that the three persons in the Trinity are all of equal power. If all of equal power, each must be either finite or infinite. If finite singly, they must be finite collectively also, for no number of finite powers can make one that is infinite. To make an Almighty Godhead, each person would have to be almighty rightly, because an almighty person is one who has greater power than all other powers combined.

As there cannot be two powers, each of which is greater than the other, omnipotence must reside in a single person or being. If the three persons were of equal power, they would be equal in authority also, and there would be no reason why any one of them should ever pray at all. Moreover, one omnipotent person or being could accomplish as much in any and every direction as could be done by a greater number.

When anyone can tell us how much three times infinity, or one-third of it is, it will be soon enough to believe in the doctrine of the Trinity. J. E. S.

Wanderings of the Hull Pilgrims.

"I'm a pilgrim, I'm a stranger,
I can tarry, I can tarry but a night."

I doubt whether the two Ms ever entered upon a pilgrimage with so much reluctance and so many misgivings as they did this fall. Only the fact that it was their duty to go, and the other fact that they were too cowardly to leave a plain duty undone, got them started.

We had very little preaching to do in the summer, the result was that we stayed at home, made and enjoyed our garden including a wilderness of flowers, painted and made other improvements in our house, and made our home so much of a paradise that we felt like saying with the disciples of old, "Lord, it is good for us to be here." Add to all this that our school, students, teachers, house, school buildings and all, were in such a good condition had such an effect on us that we hated to leave home for the work afield. However, when we consider the importance of the work in the world, we with all the courage we could command, packed our trunks and grips, locked up our house and became way-worn wanderers.

Our school is growing and the students each day becoming more interested; should we have as great a change next year as we had this year, we would not be under the necessity of making another six months trip on its behalf, we could work in the school instead of in the outside world for it.

The work for the school becomes easier every year. The opposition to the school has about worried itself into its grave. People are more willing to hear the claims of the school, than they have been in the past; they see more and more its importance than they ever have in the past, and consequently are more willing to assist in staying up the hands of those who work for it.

We left our home November 13, filled with all the hope which two invalid preachers could carry, for we were both invalids. I had not as yet recovered from the gentle stroke received at Ryo, Wisconsin, while I was trying to open the people's eyes on political matters, and Mattie was yet, and is still suffering from her headlong plunge down stairs.

We are now about fourteen hundred miles from home; we are at Billings, Montana, our fourth stop; our courage grows. The first two places we stopped we went to make up for my failure to fill my political appointments made during the political campaign. Of course I preferred to not go, and stated that, as the political campaign was now over they had better let the matter rest. The answer, that with Socialists the campaign is not ended and will not end until victory perches upon our banners, and they must have the speeches now. Ours is a campaign, not particularly for votes but for education, and it will not end while "gross darkness" covers the people. The result was that I delivered three speeches on Scientific Socialism in Augusta, and one in Humbird, Wis.

In Augusta, also, Mattie and I each delivered a speech on Spiritualism; the weather was indeed very bad, but those who attended were glad they came out to hear. The road that leads from Socialism to Spiritualism is as straight and direct as the road that leads from Spiritualism to socialism. It is hard for one who is blessed with extraordinary good sense to hold to either Socialism or Spiritualism and not take the other. I went to Humbird also and delivered one lecture before a large audience, on Socialism. There I was privately asked several questions about Spiritualism. I promised at a later date that I would try to go there and tell them what Spiritualism is.

On Tuesday morning, November 2d, we left Augusta for Minneapolis and St. Paul. There we seemed to take the people by storm, or at least, if we took them at all we took them by storm. The day we spoke there was one of the hardest rains and snows we have encountered in a long while. We had larger meetings in every hall than we supposed would turn out in such weather. We held four meetings that day; Mattie attended the Lyceum, in Minneapolis, and the Spiritual Alliance meeting in St. Paul. Besides that, she assisted me in a three o'clock meeting of the North Side Society. This society is presided over by a Mr. H. Courtney, who seems to hold the people together in a manner worthy of the cause. A Mr. H. Heggadahl, is the regular speaker; not having seen any of his work I can express no opinion concerning it. All of the societies in Minneapolis and St. Paul seem to be in as prosperous a condition as could under the circumstances be expected.

The New Thought Spiritualist Society was organized by Mrs. F. E. Wheeler, formerly of Wisconsin, and her son, H. E. Wheeler, assisted by the husband of Mrs. Wheeler, the father of H. E. Wheeler, the son. I believe the son graduates in the Minnesota University next June. This young man delivers all the discourses. These discourses are spoken of as learned, logical, and eloquent. They publish an advance program each month. These programs are handed out in advance. Mrs. Wheeler gives readings and messages after each discourse. These messages are generally, so far as I could learn, satisfactory to those who receive them. Those I heard were all satisfactory—much better than is generally given from the rostrum.

Platform messages are generally calculated to do at least as much harm as good, some of them are a positive damage to the cause they represent. Silly talk, bad English, and worse guessing is always an injury to the cause they are supposed to represent. Mrs. Wheeler gives nothing of this kind. If all mediums will give as good, straightforward and wise messages as those given by Mrs. Wheeler on the occasion when I heard her, then Spiritualism will stand higher in the estimation of the world than it does now.

We were invited to other societies in Minneapolis, but could not attend them. We promised the Band of Peace Society, that next time we go to Minneapolis we will one of us at least try to visit that society. We have forgotten the name of the president of that society, but we will try to find him when we return. Indeed we have promised, at our earliest convenience, to try to spend at least one month in the "Twin Cities."

President J. S. Maxwell, of the Minnesota State Association, seems to be about the right man in the right place. He attends all of the societies, as occasion requires, and does what he can to build all of them up. He has a profound interest in Spiritualism, not alone in one part of the state, but in every portion of the country. He regards the work as a whole, and that which assists in one place assists in others.

On Tuesday morning, November 27, Mrs. H. and I left the home of our granddaughter, Mrs. Woodbury, and started for Billings, Montana. We had promised when here last May, and also promised Mrs. McCormick, at the N. S. A., convention, last October, to put in two Sundays, and the week between them here.

When we got here we learned that Mrs. McCormick was somewhere in the east, but her friends did not know where. They somehow supposed that she was with us; the result was that no arrangements had been made for meetings. All had depended on Mrs. McCormick, who is president of the State Association, and of the local society here to do the work. Each one of the Spiritualists here, most of whom are women, seemed to think that it was the duty of someone else to take the lead in the matter of securing a hall, and advertising the meetings, and doing the other preliminary work of giving the meetings a start. The result was that the meetings were not well started until they were more than half done.

Mr. F. D. McCormick, the husband of the president, and the owner and manager of the hotel, "Cottage Inn," where we sojourn while here, is a Spiritualist to the backbone, and has done all he can, as have others, to make the meetings a success, but having to have the entire charge of the hotel which is full of people, besides owning and having management of a ranch, several miles out in the country, he found himself crowded with more work than he could do and attend to the work of making the meetings a success. He, however, did all he could. The very first thing he did was to address the ministers through the Daily Gazette, especially those who attacked Spiritualism in the past, and tell them that I was now in the city and would be glad to meet any of them and answer their objections against Spiritualism. It was their duty now, while Mr. Hull was here, to present their deadliest arguments against Spiritualism, or to forever hold their peace. Of course the ministers, "dumb dogs,' Isaiah calls them, (See Is. lvi,16,) are silent. So in a few days Mr. McCormick wrote them again. This letter the daily refused to publish; the church was his friend, in fact he depended upon all the churches and so he said he dare not publish it. The Times, a weekly paper, however, spread it in a conspicuou place on its pages. Here it is:

PUT UP OR SHUT UP!

That Is What the Rev. Moses Hull of the Spiritualistic Church Says to the Ministers of Billings—A Chance to Make Some Easy Cash.

Rev. Moses Hull, in his discourse last Friday night, said if ther is any proof of a life beyond this mundane existence outside of Spiritualism, it had not yet been discovered. I wondered if that astounding statement was true, and questioned him concerning the matter. He said it was, and he defied any minister or scientist in Billings or in the State of Montana to present an argument which would prove immortality that would not at the same time prove Spiritualism. I asked him if he was willing to debate the matter with any of our able clergymen.

He said: "Yes; with any of them, or with all of them." I now want some of our learned ministers, either Catholic or Protestant, to meet the Rev. Mr. Hull on a proposition embodying that issue. I will give the minister $50 who will meet Mr. Hull and prove immortality without proving Spiritualism. Besides this, I will pay any of the able ministers of Billings $5 an hour for every hour he spends in debate with Mr. Hull in open debate on Spiritualism and the bible.

It will not do to ignore Mr. Hull, as some of the ministers of this city have done. Mr. Hull has been too long before the public and is too well known in every State in the Union and too universally acknowledged as a ripe biblical scholar and a logician to be ignored by any minister in this community.

Now, ministers, some of us are in earnest in this matter. Either step into the arena or hereafter hold your peace.

In behalf of the Montana State Spiritualist Association and the First Church of Spiritualists of Billings.

F. D. McCORMICK.

Of course this heading was placed there by the editor; it makes but little difference. Mr. McCormick's offer was read and not accepted by the ministers who were so bold when there was no one here to defend Spiritualism.

We say nothing of the gentlemen we have here, of the masculine persuasion, but we do say that like most other places, the best men the Spiritualists have here are women. Mrs. A. P. Smith, and Mrs. McCoy are among the best helpers good workers can find in this city. They have even served as janitors; have carried coal and wood to the hall. Besides this, Mrs. Smith played for most of the singing, and Mrs. McCoy gave messages at many of the meetings. In fact they did their best to make the meetings throughout a success.

Mrs. McCoy has been here near two years, and is very popular. People do not simply like her mediumship, but they like her as a woman, and since we have been here she has been re-engaged by the society to the close of the season, in May.

Brother G. C. Love, of Portland, Oregon, closed a ten days' meeting here the day we arrived. The reports of his meetings and his mediumship are good. From here we start to-day for Seattle, where we remain a week, more to visit two brothers, Hiram and Daniel, than to talk to the people, though it is not improbable that we may hold two or three meetings during the week.

We are supposed to arrive in Portland on the 19th and remain until January 1, when we start to San Jose, Cal. There we remain until February 1, if not longer. Our address will be, from December 19, until January 1, 311½ Stark street, Portland, Oregon, then until January 30, 230 N. Sixth street, San Jose, Cal. Those wishing our services south of San Jose, in California, or on route home, on the Santa Fe route, should let us know as soon as convenient, so that we can arrange accordingly.

I cannot close this without saying Billings has done well for the school. The Progressive Thinker is a welcome visitor, as we dodge from place to place, not only to us, but to all who speak of it.

Farewell, until I get to SanJose.

MOSES HULL.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price, 15 cents.

The World Has Never Seen the Like!

At Great Expense we have secured the copyright of Mr. Ghandi's translation of the "Unknown Life of Jesus Christ." It is to be sent forth as a gift to our subscribers, as set forth in the following:

It is an absolute fact. We are enabling our subscribers to form a valuable library at a nominal cost. One of them writes:

"I have your THIRTEEN premium books, which if I had bought in the open market at the usual price would have cost me at least $15. Sending each year for one copy at the cost of 25 cents, the whole thirteen volumes have cost me exactly $3.25. As you paid the postage thereon, which amounts to not less than $1.40, all you receive for the Thirteen copies I have, is exactly $1.85, causing you to lose in the aggregate each year a large amount of money in order to benefit your subscribers."

The above is an accurate estimate. All we have received for the thirteen premium books when they have been ordered one at a time for thirteen consecutive years, is approximately $1.85, a little more than the price of a single book.

We now offer as a GIFT OUTRIGHT, one of the most valuable books of the present age—THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST. In order to obtain this book, you must send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay the postage thereon, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year. Your library is not complete without this remarkable book. Every Spiritualist should have it for study and reference. Every orthodox Christian should read it, and thus learn the whole truth in regard to Jesus. Remember it is a GIFT to you on the TERMS MENTIONED above. We expect to distribute at least Twenty Thousand copies as GIFTS.

A GLORIOUS RECEPTION.

It Is Extended to the Venerable Dr. J. M. Peebles, in London, England.

The Two Worlds has the following:

Availing ourselves of the presence of the Doctor when he called upon the Editor, we resolved to at once subject him to the ordeal of an interview. He very genially consented when the project was placed before him, and at once seated himself beside the editorial desk, and submitted to be questioned in the interest of our readers.

The Editor—First, Doctor, how fares our health, and how do you stand the incessant wear and tear of travel and lecturing?

Dr. Peebles.—"I am first rate, never better, sound in wind and limb, and not afraid of work. No, I have no special secret about it; all there is say about it is I have behaved myself, by living a sober, clean and temperate life."

Q.—"I see you have visited various camp-meetings in America this year, and have, of course, traveled much to do so. You have also recently visited Canada. Now, briefly, Doctor, what is your opinion of the present outlook and future prospects of Spiritualism in the States and in the Dominion?"

A.—"My goodness, that is a tall question! Yes, I visited camps at Chesterfield and Vicksburg, and found them vigorous, and filled with large throngs running into thousands every day. I lectured, of course, and the audiences were very large each time. I declined more than a dozen other camp invitations, as my plans for revisiting the old world would not allow me time to reach them. I am a Yankee, right out, but I like British Spiritualism—it is solid, spiritual, religious. You do not seem afraid to say God right out in meeting! You treat Jesus respectfully. Your congregational singing is fine—I like it; it means harmony; it unites the people; it is good. Spiritualism in my country is too phenomenal, too much seeking for the sign, rather than the thing signified. We need more thinkers, more of the philosophical, across the water. Generally, the Cause is in a fair state, but to me it appears to have entered upon a transition period. I wish that the best of the writings of both my dear friends, Andrew Jackson Davis and Hudson Tuttle, were more studied; I am sure it would help us if they were. In Canada the Cause is growing."

Q.—"Well, Doctor, at your age most men are thinking about settling down and taking life quietly, but here you are starting out upon a twenty-four thousand mile trip. Why have you undertaken such a task?

A.—"Ah! My answer is that I travel as the compelling of the angels of the Summerland impel. So, once again, I fare forth. Also, there is the need of change of conditions; while I need a warmer clime for the winter months. But one thing is, that I hope to meet some exalted Hindoo adepts, and from them gather more information concerning their gifts and practices, to be embodied in further literary work. I intend to do all I can to extend our knowledge of Hindoo psychology and its relation to our Spiritualism. I have also, let me say, been appointed World Missionary of the National Spiritualists' Association of America, so I travel for the good of the Cause under national sanction. I may probably visit Fiji to meet a celebrated occult student there, who is named Wilson; I shall also spend some time at Honolulu, if I reach America across the Pacific Ocean homewards."

Q.—"Where else are you likely to visit Doctor?

A.—"Well, it is rather difficult to say definitely, as my route is not determined as to its details. I expect to call at New Zealand and lecture in all the large cities there. I shall also go to Australia and renew my acquaintance with Melbourne and Sydney. Roughly, my course is from London to Marsailles, sailing thence, on December 7, for India, then Colombo, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, Honolulu, San Francisco, and so back to my home at Battle Creek."

Q.—"You have had a busy time since landing, Doctor?"

A.—"Yes, I have been kept busy. I have lectured in London, for the Marylebone Association, have spoken some to the London Alliance, am to attend the Fulham Society, and give my final Sunday lectures in London for the Spiritual Mission. Your pages have told the people of my labors in Scotland and elsewhere. On Sunday next I pay my only visit to Wales, speaking at Merthyr Tydfil, and on December 3 I deliver my last address before the Psycho-Therapeutic Society, of London."

Q.—"Truly, a busy time, Doctor. Now tell me, in conclusion, my dear friend, have the passing years deepened your faith in angel ministry, and do you feel that when the time of parting comes that all your faith and confidence will reap fruition?"

A.—"Yes, my friend. I never waver in my faith, never doubt the knowledge I have of spirit ministry. As years go I am an old man now, but I am youthful in spirit, as youthful as ever. I know the angels walk with us; at times I feel their presence near me, and I confidently await the time when the purple mantle will fall upon my mortal form; the time when my eyes will open to the golden splendors of the heavenly worlds, and I shall meet those grand souls who have preceded me. I have no fears, no doubts, am quite sure I shall find the ripened fruit upon the Hesperidian trees in the glades and vales of the sweet Summerland."

A warm hand clasp, a smile, and a kindling light in the eyes, a cheery good morning, and the tall, erect, but venerable form was gone, and we were alone with the memories of the past.

Reception to Dr. J. M. Peebles.

The Light of London has the following:

On Friday afternoon, November 16, there was an interesting gathering at 110 St. Martin's Lane, of the Members and Associates of the London Spiritualist Alliance, to meet Dr. J. M. Peebles, who is passing through London on his fifth journey round the world. After nearly an hour had been spent in pleasant conversation, the President, Mr. E. Dawson Rogers, said that he was pleased to meet his old friend Dr. Peebles once again and to congratulate him upon having attained so good an old age in such excellent health, both bodily and mentally. Mr. Rogers then related how, more than five and thirty years ago, an invalid lady, whom he had been accustomed to mesmerize, while looking at a crystal, saw and minutely described an unknown gentleman; but some months later Mr. Rogers met Dr. Peebles and invited him to visit his lady patient, who, when she saw him, instantly recognized Dr. Peebles as the person she had seen in the crystal, and described to Mr. Rogers. Hence, the question, how was it that Dr. Peebles, of whose very existence he did not then know, was seen in the crystal and described to him months before they met on the physical plane? The only explanation which occurred to Mr. Rogers was that they had probably already become acquainted on the spiritual plane, while their bodies were asleep. He did not know a man who had done more for Spiritualism than Dr. Peebles, and on behalf of the Alliance, he warmly welcomed him and wished him God-speed on his journey. (Applause.)

Dr. Peebles said that he was deeply moved by what Mr. Rogers had said, and it did his heart good to see the familiar faces of London friends and feel the clasp of their warm, friendly hands. He believed that while the body sleeps the spirit sometimes leaves it, temporarily, and goes far in the spheres, and probably, as Mr. Rogers had suggested, they HAD met on the other side. He further believed that our lives are, in a sense, mapped out for us by the angels. He was conscious every day that there were Indian spirits with him who gave him strength, and above these there were others who influenced him in his travels, both to learn and teach. After referring to his recent lecturing experiences in Scotland and Manchester, he said: "I used, when I was orthodox, to talk about help and faith, but I wavered while I said it; now I KNOW—I know that life is everlasting, and that no wanderers will be finally lost. I could not live without this knowledge, and I sometimes think Spiritualists are not enthusiastic enough—enthusiasm means, life, zeal, harmony! If we cannot see just all alike, we can have charity, brotherhood, and freedom—for are we not all human souls journeying on to the same goal? Let us live sweetly and glorify God by doing good to all mankind." (Loud applause.)

In response to a question, Dr. Peebles said that he was going to India to lecture, and to write. He had been told by three different mediums that he was being impressed by a band of Hindu spirits who wished that Spiritualism might be proclaimed in their land, as Theosophy had been. Through Mr. Spriggs he had had corroborative testimony and learned that the leader of these spirits was Babu Chunder Son, and he was going to India because he felt that he had to go, and quite expected to come to London again.

D. Abraham Wallace expressed his pleasure of meeting Dr. Peebles again, recognized in him a fellow countryman, for although born in America he had Scotch blood in his veins. He was glad that Dr. Peebles had large audiences in Scotland, where they appreciated enthusiasm, and hoped it would not be long before he came back to this country. (Applause.)

The Rev. J. Page Hopps said that to hear him speak one would imagine that Dr. Peebles was quite a young man, and he could not help thinking that it was a kind of miracle that this "old man eloquent" should be again starting off on another journey round the world and talking of coming back again. There was a sort of revelation in what Dr. Peebles had said about the wonderful people on the other side who made him strong and well. He himself had been definitely consigned to death by medical men. Sir Morell Mackenzie about ten years ago had given him up, yet he had been getting better ever since. Six years ago an American medium told him that there were three sturdy Indians who were keeping him alive to do their work, and possibly that accounted for the fact of his present good health. He had been trying to realize how a man might die without dying, and had imagined how, with his wonderful vitality, Dr. Peebles might have changed the rate of vibrations, and have gone on talking, and yet have become invisible; he thought that it was possible to obtain such command of one's body as to make it appear and reappear at will; it was all a matter of vibrations.

Thinking of the work that Dr. Peebles had done, the things he had seen, the people he had met, the millions of pictures that must have been impressed upon his mind, he could not realize that such a man could die; he felt he MUST continue to live, and that we should all live, and he hoped that Dr. Peebles, when he reached the other side, would help to prepare a place for him. (Laughter and applause.)

Dr. Berks T. Hutchinson briefly referred to his former association with Dr. Peebles at Cape Town, recommended those who were interested in his work to read "Seers of the Ages," and expressed his pleasure at meeting him once more.

The proceedings then became informal and refreshments were handed round.

The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity.

By J. C. F. Grumbine, B. D., Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature and Arts, London, England. This system is a science which makes practical and demonstrable all of the hidden, psychical powers of the soul.

What is taught is pre-eminently a system—not a theory or a doctrine—but a scientific, practical method of doing the things which mediums do and the prophets did.

Most mail courses are merely books which read like romances or text books which are loaded with dry matter, but which contain little useful and practical knowledge. They also cost from $10 to $100 for ten to twenty lessons. Mr. Grumbine's System is first of all a revelation, and secondly, a science which any person, old or young, can grasp and apply. It consists of over fifty lessons and numerous experiments not found elsewhere.

Mr. Grumbine is the pioneer of his work. His college was organized in 1893. Since then thousands all over the world have not only profited by what he taught but copied him and so proved that imitation is the sincerest flattery.

This System will unfold your psychical powers so that you can see clairvoyantly, hear clairaudiently, feel clairsentiently, see and commune with spirits and without, losing your self-control or consciousness; and it will teach you how to be successful, prosperous and well.

A special series is on the Divine Science of healing.

There will be no interruption in your business, but there will be interruption in hard times and miserable living and a new life and world will be yours. Remember; you can pay cash or instalments. When you finish this System you need study none other. It is therefore less expensive because it comprehends all other systems on Theosophy, Spiritualism, Christian Science, Mental Science and Magic. "Right Living." By Susan H. Wixon. The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principle of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in Children's Lyceum. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. Price, $1.

NEW THOUGHT MOVEMENTS.

They Are Rapidly Gaining Recruits, While Orthodoxy Is Constantly Losing.

The orthodox clergy in the West, are alarmed over the poor attendance at their services, and at several recent meetings of ministers in this and other Pacific coast cities, the subject was discussed: "How shall we reach strong men and induce them to attend church?"

One minister said, "Tacoma has a population of 100,000, but more than 60,000 do not attend religious meetings."

"I know of an Episcopal church in a California town from which fifty members dropped and went to Spiritualist, Christian Scientist, Theosophical, New-Thought or other liberal meetings, or stopped going to any religious meeting altogether.

There may be many reasons why thinking men and women are no longer to be found in the pews of the orthodox churches, but the principal one is because they have ceased to believe in an infallible bible, a cruel, revengeful and changeable God, an endless hell, a personal ubiquitous devil, the blood atonement, and the resurrection of the physical body. These doctrines, and many others that the people no longer believe, are still in the creeds and confessions of faith in the churches, and the clergy are compelled to subscribe to them when they take ordination vows. Occasionally a minister is honest enough and bold enough to repudiate the old dogmas, but he takes great risk of being thrown out of the church as a heretic. In the Protestant churches the laity are broader that the clergy, and thousands of the more courageous and more intelligent have abandoned the church. This is going on so steadily and so rapidly that the clergy are nearly panic-stricken over it. They succeed still in holding the women and children pretty well, but they want men,—"strong men"—so declared a pastor of a Tacoma church recently.

Entire sessions of the "Ministers' Associations" are frequently devoted to the discussion of this important matter. One prominent minister in the state, in discussing the steady and increasing desertions from the church, declared that in his opinion "the preachers do not preach the old-fashioned hell energetically enough nor often enough." But that sort of preaching will not fill his empty seats. Intelligent people can no longor be frightened by the story of the "Fall"—"that in Adam we sinned all," that God demanded the cruel death of his son as a condition on which he would save a portion of the human family from endless torment.

The theologians fail to see that about sixty years ago, we entered upon a new era or cycle. Inventors startled the world by their marvelous inventions; discoveries of inestimable benefit to the world were made; old methods and antiquated ideas were turned down and new ones were adopted; everything went forward by leaps and bounds except theology. That has advanced somewhat—was pushed forward by the momentum of other progressive movements.

The clergymen should have kept step with the inventor, the scientist, the physician, the statesman, the school teacher, but he did not, except in rare instances. He might have kept his jaws filled, but he did not, for he was found hard and fast to the teaching that all wisdom was given to the world in the distant past and there was nothing more to learn. Because of this non-progressive policy and practice, hundreds of thousands of his flock have come out and have gone over to the liberalists and are marching on.

The Christian Scientists, though more "orthodox" than other liberal sects, yet denying every cardinal doctrine of orthodoxy, has grown into robustness from the great multitudes who came to her from both the Protestant and Catholic churches.

Mrs. Baker-Eddy's church is rapidly taking the cream of the orthodox laity They are building magnificent church-houses in both Europe and America, and are spreading "like a green-bay tree." While it was a long step from orthodoxy to Christian Science, yet it was as far as the dissatisfied churchman dared to go.

Others, still less orthodox, and more progressive, went to the Spiritualists, the Theosophists, the Unitarians, and other New Thought societies.

The orthodox clergy are becoming panic-stricken, hence the efforts everywhere to stop desertions from the church. Many of them are instituting in their houses of worship all sorts of amusements and entertainments. Some of them propose billiards, and ninepins, and theatrical shows, etc.

Now, this is the sensible thing for them to do. I advise them to stop short off preaching old Jewish paganism, and turn their meeting-houses into social halls, and reading and lecture rooms, invite the poor, and homeless, and friendless, and not only amuse and instruct them, but when necessary, feed and clothe them, and assist them in obtaining honorable and useful employment.

In your lectures drop out the old bloody Jewish Jehovah, discard the immoral and pagan doctrine of the blood atonement which encourages bad men to believe that they can escape just punishment for wrong doing, by consenting to let Jesus pay the debt; teach the youth that he must reap as he sows—that God is spirit, an impersonal, Infinite Intelligence, and that the most acceptable service to God, is our service to our fellow-men.

God needs no beseeching, nor flattery, nor worship on our part.

God's laws are eternally just and right, and it is our business to discover and obey them.

"As a man thinketh, so is he." If we think good, uplifting, loving thoughts, we shall grow to be good, kind and loving, and angelic spirits of the invisible realms, will assist and strengthen us. If we think unkind, hateful, malicious, and degrading thoughts, we shall, ourselves, become that, and inharmony, unrest and misery, will sometime, somewhere, overtake and enshroud us, and punish us, until we, like the Prodigal Son, arise and go back to our father's house.

What I have written herein was not said in any spirit of unkindness toward my orthodox brethren. I feel sorry for those who still think they ought to cling to the ignorance, superstition and paganism of the distant past. I bid them to "about face," to remember that they live in the most enlightened day of the world's history. I ask them to believe that theologies and church creeds must be subjected to investigation and criticism as well as the teachings of science, medicine, law and philosophy. The church must keep step with the progressive movements of the age, for if it does not, it will inevitably dwindle away and go out of existence.

No book nor creed is so sacred as to be above investigation and criticism. There have been revelations in the past, but there will be greater ones in the future. Science and inventions are in their infancy. Every human soul has a divine parentage. Every child has within him the latest powers of a mighty God. Every human being is a part and portion of the infant One. God could not be infinite if one individual soul were "lost" or blotted out.

He is the greatest teacher, who shows us how to unfold our innate God-powers.

There is no death, or if so, it is as necessary and beneficent as birth. There could be no birth without death, so-called. The illimitable universe is ceaselessly throbbing with life. All things tend upward. Infinite wisdom is at the helm of things. "All discord is but the fragment of a scale which had we the power to comprehend, would be replete with harmony divine." We are not "poor, miserable worms of the dust who deserve to be endlessly damned," as stated by the orthodox creeds. On the contrary we are children of Infinite Intelligence, love and wisdom, in each of whom reside the unfolded powers of mighty arch-angels.

We are embodied here for a little while in physical bodies, to be taught some needed lessons. If we are apt students we shall, on leaving this kindergarten—this caterpillar state; be promoted to a higher grade in the school of the Infinite Father. If we are incorrigibly truant, refractory, and disobedient, we shall be put into the basement of the spirit school and kept there until we learn the lessons we neglected to learn here.

DIES HOUR AFTER CHILD SAYS DEAD MOTHER CALLED

"Father, Mamma's Calling You," Cried Boy. "I Heard Her Voice in the Steam of the Tea Kettle."

A. F. Hill of Boston, sends the following from the Boston American:

Brockton, Mass.—"Papa, mamma's calling you. She says, 'Are you coming, Isaac?' I heard her voice in the steam of the tea kettle."

Terror-stricken, little four-year-old Raymond Wilkinson rushed to the bedside of his dying father in their home at No. 191 North Warren avenue, screaming this strange message. Then he went into hysterics.

Within an hour the father died. Mrs. Wilkinson died a few weeks ago.

When questioned afterward the boy said that while he was playing in the kitchen he suddenly heard his mother's voice and that it sounded as if it came from the cloud of steam that poured from the nose of the tea kettle on the stove.

A Remedy for Fake Seances and Other Evils.

To the Editor:—For the advancement of the truth of Spiritualism, we make this suggestion:

If we are earnest in our desire as Spiritualists to advance its truth, its realities, its love for humanity, it becomes as now to adopt such methods as will banish all public seances. This can be accomplished only by a drastic measure.

Let Spiritualists in each state unite as a society, or individuals in a petition to the judiciary thereof, for a prohibition of all public seances. No seances in any case whatever, excepting those that are held privately, at which those only are present, as are known as Spiritualists.

We cannot command the respect of the inquiring minds nor the unthinking public, but we must be as Spiritualists looked upon with scorn and derision. There should be that unity of purpose in the knowledge and faith we possess, to place an emphatic disapproval upon all things that counterfeit our cause, and make Spiritualism a foundation for fakes.

A Psychic Investigating Society has been founded in the city of New York, having for its purpose the elimination of fraud by so-called hypnotists, spiritual mediums and mind readers who ply their vocations for money.

There are fraudulent practitioners making between $20,000 and $30,000 a year by deluding people.

Thousands of people, particularly women, whose honesty of purpose deserves all the guardianship the state can throw about it, these spiritualistic, can throw about it, consult these spiritualistic, clairvoyants, etc., advisers.

It is suggested that for the possibilities of the good or the evil that these practitioners should be examined, and if worthy, licensed, just as the state licenses physicians, dentists and lawyers.

This is a step in the right direction, we will receive the commendation and respect if we adopt similar repressive measures.

"The Magician."

While sitting alone, by the fire, one evening, I felt the pressure of an unseen hand. Upon asking: "Who is there?" I was answered, "Poe, get your pen." Reaching for a pencil I wrote the following:

Though the midnight hours are dreary,
and the sobbing night-winds roam,
And the sea-birds softly calling, o'er the leagues of wind-swept foam;
There he sits, while dying embers weave their ghosts upon the floor,
Frosted head, in life's December, delving in his mystic lore.

And the rattling of the shutter is a message he receives;
And a tale the night-winds utter as they shout beneath his eaves,
And the shadows gather 'bout him, on the long procession sweeps.
Though the busy world may doubt him, still his midnight tryst he keeps.

Makes Catechism on Darwin Plan.

Famous English Scientist Offers Faith That Welds Knowledge and Tradition—Other Worlds Greater—Man Not Highest Form of Life, Says Sir Oliver Lodge; His Future Existence Part of His Theory.—Special Cable Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, from London, England.

London, Dec. 15.—Sir Oliver Lodge has issued the text of a scientific catechism which was read before a gathering of non-conformist ministers in London, and which is designed for the use of teachers interested in the education of the young. In a preface Sir Oliver says:

"From the viewpoint of the teacher and the trainer of teachers the following clauses have been drafted by me as affording a partially scientific basis for future religious education:

Q.—What are you? A.—A being, alive, and conscious upon this earth, my ancestors having ascended by gradual processes from the lower forms of animal life and with a struggle, and suffering, become man.

Q.—What, then, is meant by the fall of man? A.—At a certain age of development man became conscious of the difference between right and wrong, so that thereafter when his actions fell below a normal standard of conduct he felt ashamed and sinful. Nevertheless, the possibility of the fall marks a rise in the scale of existence. Creatures below this level are irresponsible, feel no shame, suffer no remorse, and are said to have no conscience.

Q.—What is the distinctive character of manhood?—A—That he has responsibility for his acts, having acquired the power of choosing between good and evil, with freedom to obey one motive rather than another.

DEFINES DUTY OF MAN.

Q.—What is the duty of man? A.—To assist his fellows, to develop his own higher self, strike toward good in every way and open his powers generally to seek to know the laws of nature and obey the will of God in whose service alone can be found that harmonious exercise of the faculties which is synonymous with perfect freedom.

Q.—What is meant by good and evil? A.—Good is that which promotes development and is in harmony with the will of God. It is akin to health, beauty, and happiness. Evil is that which retards or frustrates development and injures some part of the universe. It is akin to disease, ugliness, and misery.

Q.—How does man know good from evil? A.—His own nature when uncorrupted is sufficiently in tune with the universe to enable him to be well aware in general of what is pleasing and displeasing, a guiding spirit of which he himself should be the real, effective portion.

Q.—How comes it evil exists? A.—Acts and thoughts are evil when below the normal standard attained by humanity. The possibility of evil is a necessary consequence of the rise in the scale of moral existence, just as an organism whose moral temperature is far above the absolute zero is necessarily liable to damage by deadly cold, but cold is not itself a positive or created thing.

Q.—What is sin? A.—Sin is a deliberate, willful act of a free agent, who sees better and chooses worse, and thereby acts injuriously to himself and others. The root of sin is selfishness, whereby needless trouble and pain is inflicted on others. It is akin to moral suicide.

Q.—Are there beings lower in the scale of existence than man? A.—Multitudes. In every part of the earth where life is possible we find it developed. Life exists in every variety of animal of earth, air, and sea, and in every species of plant.

MAN NOT HIGHEST IN LIFE'S SCALE.

Q.—Are there beings higher in the scale of existence than man? A.—Man is the highest of the dwellers on the planet earth, but the earth is only one of many planets warmed by the sun, and the sun only one of a myriad of similar suns which are so distant we hardly see them and group them indiscriminately as stars. We may be sure that in some of these innumerable worlds circulating about distant suns there must be beings far higher in the scale of existence than ourselves. Indeed, we have no knowledge which enables us to assert the absence of intelligence anywhere.

Q.—What caused and what maintains existence? A.—Of our own knowledge we are unable to realize the meaning, origination, and maintenance. All we can accomplish in the physical world is to move things about by means of our bodily organisms and leave them to act on each other, but we conceive there must be some intelligence supreme over the whole process of evolution, else things could not be as organized and beautiful as they are.

Q.—Is man helped in his struggle upward? A.—Man has not brought himself into existence, nor can he unaided maintain existence or achieve anything whatever. There is certainly a power in the universe vastly beyond our comprehension. We trust and believe it to be a good, loving power, able and willing to help us and all creatures, and guide us wisely without detriment to our incipient freedom. This loving kindness surrounds us every moment; in it we live and have our real being. It is the mainspring of love and joy and beauty. We call it the grace of God, and it is it that sustains and enriches all the worlds. It may take a multiplicity of forms, but its essence and higher meaning are specially revealed to dwellers on this earth in the form of the divinely human, perfect life of Jesus Christ, through whose spirit and living influence man may hope to rise to heights at present inaccessible.

ONE ETERNAL BEING OVERRULES.

Q.—How may we become informed of things too high for our own knowledge? A.—We should strive to learn from the great teachers, prophets, poets, and saints of the human race whose writings are opened to us by education. Especially should we learn how to interpret and understand the bible, which the nation holds in such high honor.

Q.—What, then, do you reverently believe can be deduced from a study of the records and traditions of the past in the light of the present? A.—I believe in one infinite, eternal being, a guiding, loving father in whom all things exist. I believe the divine nature is specially revealed to man in Jesus Christ, who lived, and taught, and suffered in Palestine 1900 years ago and since has been worshiped in the Christian church as the immortal son of God and savior of the world. I believe the holy spirit is ever ready to help us along the way to goodness and truth and that prayer is the means of communion between man and God, and it is our privilege by faithful service to enter a life of eternal communion with God,

Q.—What is meant by the life eternal? A.—Whereas our terrestrial existence, our temporary and real existence, continues without ceasing in either the higher or lower form according to our use of the opportunities by means of grace, and that fullness of life ultimately attainable represents a state of perfection at present inconceivable to us.

Q.—What is the significance of communion with the saints? A.—Higher and holier beings must possess in fuller fruition those privileges of communion which already are foreshadowed by our own faculties, the language, and sympathy, and mutual aid, and just as we find our power of friendly help not altogether limited to our own order of being so I conceive an existence of mighty fellowship of love and service.

PRAYER OF REAL EFFICACY.

Q.—What do you understand by prayer? A.—That when our spirits are attuned to the spirit of righteousness our hopes and aspirations exert an influence far beyond their conscious range and in the true sense bring us into communion with our Heavenly Father. By this power or that petition called prayer we are encouraged to ask anything we need as children ask their parents, in a spirit of trust and submission, and we may strengthen our faith in the efficacy of prayer by pleading the example and merits of the Lord Jesus.

Q.—What is meant by the kingdom of heaven? A.—The kingdom of heaven is the most essential feature of Christianity. It signifies a harmonious condition or state in which the divine will is perfectly obeyed. It represents the highest state of existence, individual and social, which we can conceive. Our whole efforts should, directly or indirectly, make ready its way in our hearts, lives, and in lives of others. It is the ideal state of society towards which reformers are striving. It is the ideal of a conscious existence toward the said aim.

Sir William Ramsay, criticising the new catechism, contends that Lodge starts with wrong premises.

"Science has nothing to do with faith nor faith anything to do with science," he says. "They are quite distinct. Therefore the suggestion so freely made that they are in some undefined way antagonistic, in my opinion is wholly wrong. It follows I don't regard any effort to unite science and faith on the basis of a catechism can be much good."

HIS VIEWS COMMAND ATTENTION.

Sir Oliver Lodge is one of England's leading scientists. Recently his utterances on various topics of religious belief and dogmas have attracted wide attention. His attitude, which expressed the attitude of many other liberal scientists in England is defined in the following paragraph in an article he contributed to the reviews:

"Assertions are made concerning material facts in the name of religion. These science is bound to criticise. Testimony is borne to inner personal experience; on that science does well to be silent. Nevertheless many of us are impressed with the conviction that everything in the universe may become intelligible if we go the right way to work, and so we are coming to recognize, on the one hand, that every system of truth must be intimately connected with every other, and that this connection will constitute a trustworthy support as soon as it is revealed by the progress of knowledge; and on the other hand, that the extensive foundation of truth now being laid by scientific workers will ultimately support a gorgeous building of esthetic feeling and religious faith."

TRENCHANT QUESTIONS.

They Are Directed to Spiritualists, by a Medium Who Wants the Truth. Only.

To the Editor:—There are a number of questions I would like to ask, and let anyone so disposed, answer them. All in the spirit of good will. These things puzzle me, and I would be glad to gain more knowledge.

Why are we not warned against sitting in the dark? We have been told there are no evil spirits. If all is good, what harm can darkness contain? If our guides, having been described to us by the best mediums and seers in the country, as able, advanced, powerful and wise, request us to sit in a darkened room, why should we not do so? When they have given us abundant proof of their powers for good, why should we not trust them? If we do not obey our own guides, whose should we obey?

Why do we hear speakers relate the story of Hydesville and the "tiny raps" with such evident satisfaction, and yet hear those manifestations called "physical" condemned?

What proof is there that we have higher inspiration to-day than ever before? Advanced spirits tell me that the currents set in from earth toward the sensitive, especially when facing an audience, more often than otherwise. That being the case, why is the phase known as Inspirational Speaking held up as the highest.

There are contradictions in plenty given us from the rostrum. Why so tolerant of that fact, and ridicule the writings of the mediums and prophets of old, because they contain contradictions?

We have repeatedly heard warm praises from the rostrum for Paine and Ingersoll. Why is this? Those essays of the former on dreams and visions were silly things to found a religion upon, do not stamp him a Spiritualist. The latter ridiculed Moses, a medium, and many of the manifestations recorded of the Spiritualism of that time. Is there any proof existing that he had any more respect for the Spiritualism of this day.

There was One who spake as never man spake before. Were not those wise men from the East, who, led by a spirit light, traveled far to worship Him, Spiritualists? If all Thomas Paine wrote is sound sense, then those were not wise, but foolish men, and the prophets who proclaimed Him divine, were all false.

If he was a mere man, and the greatest of all mediums as stated by Modern Spiritualists, why say that all trumpet work is Diakka, when He said: "And I will pray the Father, and He shall send His angels with a loud sound of the trumpet to gather the elect together from the four winds of the earth and from the uttermost parts of the heavens?"

If any medium is to be believed, why not believe the greatest?

We are admonished to seek the truth. Where shall we seek?

I commend your attitude toward all fraud. Three years ago I thought there was very little fraud, and that very much enlarged upon. I have changed my mind. There is a great deal of fraud; and not all on the part of "physical" mediums either. Lately I have been much discouraged with the outlook for Spiritualism, but I was shown in a "vision by night" that we are really starting to CLIMB THE HEIGHTS. I hope it is true.

Yours for truth.

A LULLABY SONG.

Dear little baby, too tired to creep,
Dear little eyes, too tired to peep,
All snuggled up in a little limp heap—
Mother is singing her baby to sleep.
Lullaby baby, sleep, baby, sleep,
Mother is singing her baby to sleep.

Where are you going, my baby dear?
Mother is singing for baby to hear.
Dear little eyes that hardly can peep,
Tell me that baby is going to sleep.
Lullaby baby, sleep, baby, sleep,
Dear little baby is going to sleep.

Where are you going, my baby dear?
Mother sings low lest baby shall hear.
Tight little eyelids, so baby can't peep,
Tell me that baby has gone to sleep.
Lullaby baby, sleep, baby, sleep,
Dear little baby has gone to sleep.

Where is my baby gone? baby dear, say:
Gone where the Slumberland fairies play.
Angels of goodness my baby will keep,
Resting in Slumberland, fast asleep.
Lullaby baby, sleep, baby, sleep,
Lullaby, lullaby, sleep, baby, sleep.

Who Are the Infidels?

Abstract of Lecture by Dr. George A. Fuller, of New York, Delivered Before the Worcester Association of Spiritualists.

"The word Infidel has been applied to every teacher and reformer down through the ages. Anyone who has given new ideas to the world, whose thought was in advance of the time in which he lived, has been termed infidel. The Christian church has hurled the word at the greatest thinkers, the greatest reformers, the world has produced—a synonym seemingly representing all that was evil in human life.

We as Spiritualists have been termed infidels by the Christian church for many years, and I for one am proud of the title. I believe we are in goodly company.

Many of us can remember those wonderful lectures that were given to the world by that galaxy of noble men, William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Charles Sumner, all deemed heretics in their time, a Spencer, a Huxley, a Tyndall, and yet these so-called infidels have been the saviors of the world.

Whe are the Infidels? The word Infidel means to doubt, a lack of faith. Where do we find the most infidelity to-day? I say to you there is more infidelity to the square inch within the ranks of the orthodox church than is found elsewhere; a lack of faith, skepticism and disbelief prevails and to a great extent throughout the other religious denominations of the world.

Humanity is seeking for truth, no longer satisfied with faith and hope, but requires knowledge. The old question still comes ringing down the ages: "If a man die, shall he live again?" and the answer comes to every human soul who has wandered in darkness and doubt, "Turn your faces toward the light of Spiritualism, and knowledge shall be yours." You say to me, "Have you no doubters in your ranks?" and I answer, "Most assuredly we have, but I am not in sympathy with them." I am in sympathy with the investigator at all times, but these people (and we have many of them) who have been investigating for thirty and forty years, and have not come to any conclusion, ought to be born again, with brains enough to come to some conclusion in the face of the accumulated evidence that presents itself.

When the first cable was laid under the ocean, thereby seeking to hold communion with the land beyond the sea, the wise ones shook their heads and cried "Impossible!" A voice was heard and then the cable broke, and the world said humbug! illusion! But another cable was laid, and what was the result? There is not a child over ten years of age in our public schools today but knows the cable message to be an established fact. If we can hold communion with the inhabitants beyond the sea, why can we not hold communion with the denizens of the spirit world as well? We turn to physical science and the teacher points to the laboratory, to demonstrate its claims; when we turn to Spiritualism we point to the seance room for evidence of the truths we present to the world, the foundations upon which we stand. The evidence is presented day by day, both in private and in public.

But right here allow me to say, that which is of the greatest importance to our movement has been allowed to slip away, and that is the Home Circle. Rarely, if ever, do we hear of them in our midst to-day, and yet many of our greatest mediums have come out of our home circle. Speakers traveling through the country twenty-five years ago, arriving at their destinations Saturday night, would be invited to enter the home circle which would invariably be held each week in the home of every Spiritualist in the land. I remember one earnest soul who lived in the town of Leominster, who did much for the Cause of Spiritualism in the years past and gone, by securing speakers and mediums each Sunday to present the truth to the people. There was one room in her house sacred to the home circle, with an altar dedicated to the truths of our glorious philosophy. Within that room on Saturday night she called her little family together, and whoever was a guest in her house, and herself entranced, there fell from her lips some of the most beautiful thoughts from those wise and loving souls "out there," and messages of love and consolation from the dear ones gone before.

It was my privilege to be present on many occasions of this kind. One occasion I well remember. There was present an agnostic. After the seance was over he arose and with tears streaming down his face, he exclaimed, "I have been to heaven to-night as near as I ever expect to be in this material life. I have to-night secured evidence which proves beyond the possibility of a doubt that my friends still live—evidence of immortality."

My friend, until we establish the home circle again in our midst we cannot hope to bring out the highest unfoldment of mediumship, for in the home circle the best results are obtained.

A few days ago a prominent clergyman of your city attacked Christian Science, calling it a humbug and delusion, and stated its followers were all insane. I am not a Christian Scientist, but when an attack of this kind occurs, I believe every thinking mind should protest against it. In the ranks of Christian Science we find some of the ablest jurists, doctors and thinkers; in the ranks of Christian Science we find culture, education and refinement. We as Spiritualists have felt the lash in the days past and gone, and we can truly sympathize with this new cult which has attracted to its ranks some of the most brilliant thinkers in the world, and which is doing a great work for humanity.

In the city where I now reside, the attendance at the Baptist churches is constantly decreasing. To create renewed interest, one of the clergymen of that denomination has introduced vaudeville, employing a whistling soloist to take part in the Sunday services. What would Jesus of Nazareth think if he were in our midst to-day. Think of a whistling soloist in the place of the simple teachings of the Master.

Upon one occasion in England there was a meeting of the high church dignitaries of the land to discuss the ways and means of checking the growth of skepticism and unbelief within their ranks. The bishop and priest came down from London, the Rev., most Rev., very Rev. men, with all the letters of the alphabet attached to their names, and all the titles the Church of England could bestow upon them, met together to solve this problem. Some of them handled it very gingerly, while others met it equally face to face. One good bishop remarked, "Why is it that the name of no noted scientist appears upon our membership roll? We have some scientists to be sure, but none of the great scientists, those that have made a name for themselves are found in our denominations, and why? Simply because we have nothing to offer them. What have we to offer a Spencer, a Huxley, a Tyndall, and unless some of us are bold enough to investigate this new heresy called Spiritualism we have no knowledge, no facts, to present to the world."

He was one of the brilliant lights of the Church of England. While he was criticised on every hand there were a few present who were in sympathy with the thoughts he expressed.

However, no one has ever heard of them accepting his advice, they neither affirm nor deny the claims of Modern Spiritualism; but have more than any other denomination let it entirely alone.

Down through the ages the attitude of the Church has ever been the same toward all the world's greatest thinkers and so-called infidels. After the law of evolution became an established fact and Darwin had long been an inmate of the spirit world, they removed his lifeless body and reburied it with all the pomp and ceremony of the Church of England.

What a farce! What blasphemy! Today ignored, to-morrow adored; to-day ridiculed, on the morrow honored and eulogized.

Some little time ago I was conversing with a clergyman and he said to me: "Come into our denomintion and preach and be respectable, and we will give you a fine church and a good salary."

I replied, "How can I? I do not believe the creed of your church."

He answered, "Oh! that makes no difference; you are not obliged to tell all you know; say nothing about it, preach the same as you are preaching now, only don't mention the word Spiritualism, and you will get along all right."

I said to him, "So you would have me become a hypocrite, would you? No, never! not for the sake of being respectable, not for the sage of a fine church or large salary. Keep on in your work if you will, you are making doubters day by day. Let them come over to Spiritualism and we will convert them and the light of Truth will shine across their pathway, all doubt will be dispelled in the sweet knowledge which is theirs."

The Salvation Army is doing a great work in our land to-day, in accordance with the teachings of the Master. A work that all our fashionable churches have failed to do. They are a faithful band of workers, honest and sincere in their beliefs, working for the upliftment of the poor and unfortunate in our midst.

Not long ago I was walking along the street in the city of Boston, and I heard the drum and cornet of the Salvation Army approaching. I decided to remain and listen to their services. It was a cold, dark night, a heavy mist was in the air, the pavements were wet and muddy, but there those faithful workers knelt and prayed, and pleaded with the hearers to lead better lives, to become better men and women, and then my spiritual vision was opened. I beheld a woman come floating down from the clouds, as it seemed, with hair disheveled, face pale and thin, tears streaming down her cheeks, with outstretched arms she hovered over that little band and I heard these words fall from her lips again and again: "Oh! save my boy! save my boy!"

For a moment the vision remained and then slowly faded from my sight, never to be forgotten.

I believe there are many mothers in the spirit world who can reach their sons and daughters in this life through the influence of the Salvation Army, and prevail upon them to lead better lives and in this way they are doing a great work for humanity.

Oh! ye Spiritualists of the world, let your light shine out and illumine the darkened places; do not keep it under a bushel, make no apology for the truth you possess, but show to the world by every act of your daily life the knowledge and freedom that is yours, a knowledge of the wondrous possibilities of the human soul in the eternities yet to be. And man, the highest expression of Deific life, possessing God-given powers which lie latent within, shall some day find the opportunity for large unfoldment. I believe that sometime, somewhere, perhaps when we reach the sphere of an arch-angel, man shall become a very God in himself, a maker and creator of other worlds. Out of the star-dust and the power of creative thought he shall call them into being. Such I believe the possibilities of the human soul in the eons yet to be. And in the coming years the light of Spiritualism shall illumine the world and its science, philosophy and religion shall become the savior of humanity

The Discovery of Democracy.

Brand Whitlock, Mayor of Toledo, Ohio, writing on the Discovery of Democracy, in the Times Magazine, has this significant paragraph:

"The realization of this democracy, which is the justification of America to the world, is to be accomplished by the men of America—not the good men, or the rich men, or the business men, or the respectable men, but by the men, and when I say men, I mean women, too; for women are included in democracy; they too, are entitled to their own personalities, and to have them count. Men vote because they are men; that is the only reason. Women should vote, that is, take part in democracy, because they are women; that is all. Man's humanity gives him this right, and woman's humanity gives her this right. The perfect democracy is a sphere, not a hemisphere, and every personality in it must play its part for good or bad."

The Aim and Scope of Hindu Spiritualism.

"We had so long been cutting the weeds and tilling the ground. Time has now come to sow the seed. What is Spiritualism? Usually it means the art of opening communication with the dead. What is Hindu Spiritualism? It is both a science and an art. As a science, it imparts a knowledge of the spiritual world. As an art, it teaches us how to make our life in the spiritual world happy and progressive. Hindu spiritual philosophy has three cardinal principles. One is that there is a personal God, whose love knows no bounds. The second is that, He created man for His eternal companion. The third, the highest object of existence, is to attain to His lotus feet. We say, Hindu Spiritualism is a science, because we shall base all our inferences upon established facts. No one will be asked to surrender his reason. As an art, Hindu spiritual philosophy teaches us the knowledge as how to make us happy hereafter, and this knowledge is based upon actual experiments. It is a thin veil which separates the spiritual from the material world. And it is earnest and sincere devotion which will enable a man to lift it."

Now to begin—

There are at least two worlds, the material world and the spiritual world. We say at least, for, there may be still another world, or other worlds beyond the spiritual world. In the material world live men, in the spiritual world live men who are dead. Man has his two parts, the material and the spiritual; so every substance has its two parts the material and the spiritual. The material part of man lives in the material world and his spiritual part is transferred to the spiritual world; so the material part of every substance remains in this world, and its spiritual part transplanted to the other world.

We say transplanted, that is not it exactly. The material part of man is cognizant of the material, and the spiritual part cognizant of the spiritual world.

The material world is the outward expression of the spiritual world. Everything in the material world has its counterpart in the spiritual. Every material substance has its soul, and these souls individualize material substances. That is to say, it enables us to distinguish one substance from another, because each has its distinct soul.

There are two men, A and B. Their bodies are made up of the same materials. A has his blood and bones, carbon and oxygen; so B has his blood and bones, carbon and oxygen. Yet A and B are quite distinct entities. Why? Because of their souls. The soul of A is quite distinct from the soul of B; so they are distinct entities.

In the same manner diamond and carbon are two different substances, though chemically they are the same. Diamond has its soul; so carbon has its soul. In the material world men deal with the matter of diamond, in the spiritual world the spirit of men deal with the spirit of diamond. (We, here, for the sake of convenience, make no difference between spirit and soul, though they are not identical). In the material world, men see the material of which a mango tree is composed. In the spirit world, the spirits of men see the spirit of the mango tree. In the material world men do not see the spirit of the mango tree; in the spiritual world, the spirits of men do not see the material part of the mango tree. In the material world, men eat mangoes; in the spiritual world, the spirits of men enjoy its taste. We have the scent here; we have the soul of the scent in the other world. We enjoy beauty here; but the soul of beauty, which makes it beautiful, is in the other world. In this world your host will put half a dozen of mangoes on a plate for you. In the spiritual world, they will precisely do the same thing but in another way—they will put the soul of the mangoes, on the soul of a plate before you, for you to enjoy.

The spirit of man, in short, sees the souls of things. Assume that a man can step out of his body, that is to say, he can, by some process, (there is such a process), make his soul leave his body and enter the souler or spirit world. What then follows? He loses sight of the material world; but the souls of things are unfolded, or the souler world is opened, and the material world closed to him. Two men, A and B meet, they gaze at each other, they exchange ideas. But suppose both of them step out of their bodies and then come face to face with each other. They find themselves now precisely in the same position they were when they had met, face to face, in the body. But suppose the soul of A comes out of his body and meets the soul of B, who is in body. He comes to know what he thinks; he gets an opportunity of controlling even the thoughts of B. A does not see the body of B, but sees his soul.

The man A sees B before him sick in bed. B is sick, and A being a medical man tries to find out the cause of his illness. He feels his pulse; he applies the stethescope; he utilizes other methods known to medical men to discover the seat of the disease of B. He comes to a conclusion; he is yet doubtful, he is not quite sure whether his diagnosis is correct or not.

Now suppose A gives up the ordinary method and tries the Hindu one of finding what B is suffering from. In short, he steps out of his body to examine the cause of the illness of B. As soon as A does that, the internal economy of B's body is unfolded to him. He at once, and unerringly sees and locates the seat of the disease.

Thus a clock is going wrong, and you put it into the hands of a clock repairer. He examines the clock from the outside; he suspects what is wrong but he is not quite sure. He removes the cover and then at once sees why the clock is going wrong. It is in this manner, diseases were diagnosed and drugs found by the aid of clairvoyance or the inner eye of the Hindu method.

Let us suppose that Andrew Jackson Davis is or was a seer. Which means he could step out, that is to say, bring his soul out of his body. In that state he examined his patients. Being out of his body, the internal economy of a patient's body was unfolded to Davis. He examined the lungs, liver, heart, etc., of the sufferer. The interior having been opened to him, he found no difficulty in ascertaining what organ of his patient was in an unsound condition. The Doctors, by an examination from outside found that, say, the lungs, had been affected. But the seer, having a clear view of the interior, is in a position to locate the seat of the disease in an unerring manner.

Thus, if an outside examination shows that it is the lungs that are wrong, an internal examination may show that the lungs are all right, but it is the heart that is unsound.

Thus when by internal examination a correct diagnosis of the disease is made, the treatment of the patient, which was an uncertain experiment before with delicate organs, becomes more certain, possibly an absolutely certain process. Indeed, when by an internal examination it is found that the heart of the patient is the seat of the wrong, and drugs are admininered accordingly, the work of healing becomes a more certain proceeding. A medical man, with his stethescope and thermometer, will say that he believes that he is right in the diagnosis of the disease, but a clairvoyant physician will tell you that he knows positively what he is about. Says Spirit, Phinuit, (Vide Hyslop's Science and Future Life, Pages 151-52), "I don't like the treatment. The physician gives him quinine, her system is full of it." The lady to whom this was addressed and the patient, her sister, "denied that she, the latter, had taken quinine," but it was subsequently ascertained that she had taken quinine without knowing it.

A can step out of the body, he becomes en rapport with the soul of B; he can locate his diseases if he has any; can read his thoughts and can try to influence him to commit a bad or a good act. Thus spirits enter into the body of men; read their thoughts and sometimes control them, and sometimes diagnose or treat their diseases.

The seer sees not with his material eye, but his spiritual eye; the seer does not see the external covers of things, but their souls which animates the latter. So the seer examines the patient, that is to say, not with a thermometer or stethescope, but the "Dibya Chakshu" (the internal sight), the internal economy of his patient.

Let us now come to the treatment. He sees, for instance, that the heart of the patient is failing and sufficient energy must be imparted to it to enable it to perform its functions. Now where the energy is to bad?

As he sees the souls of things he has not to grope in the dark, but is in a position to make a search with "open eyes." His opportunities enable him to ascertain at once the virtues of drugs. The "European," "the Western," "the scientific method, (they all mean the same thing), is to experiment, and find out the properties of drugs. Such a method of investigation is open to all, but it is tedious and uncertain, and scarcely sufficient for our needs. To find the properties of drugs by experiment is a herculean task. There are hundreds of millions of substances, from a grain of sand to a piece of charcoal; each has its distinct properties and to find them all would require the services of billions of men engaged to work for billions of years. Hence diseases are often wrongly diagnosed and wrongly treated.

But the Hindu method is to ascertain the properties of drugs with the help of the inner sight, the "Dibya Chakshu." As a vulture, with its keen sight and comprehensive view, can find what it is seeking in a moment, so a man, with his inner sight developed, has the opportunity of taking a comprehensive view of the properties of drugs with lightning rapidity, and with a keener eye-sight, which is infinite times more powerful than what he possesses while in body.

Our nation is not growing, so there is no progress. But our ancient books on medical science enumerates thousands and tens of thousands of drugs collected from the mineral, vegetable and animal world. The properties of each are enumerated in great details, and the stupendous nature of the work done by the spiritually developed Hindus of old days fill us with wonder. Thus the properties of the roots, leaves, bark and flowers of a creeper are elaborately described. They found that iron cured spleen, and gold most obstinate chronic fevers. They found in quicksilver a most useful and powerful drug. How could they find the properties of so many objects? By experiment? It would require, as we said before, an infinite age and infinite number of men to be able to do it. It would be impossible of accomplishment without the help of printing press, which did not exist when the properties of drugs were ascertained. Now the experience of one is availed of by the world, because the press makes the discovery public, but in those days, when the properties of drugs were enumerated, there were no such opportunities.

The men who enumerated the properties of drugs had, by Yoga, been able to separate their souls from their bodies. By this, the souls of all things were opened out to them. We supposed a case above of heart failure. The clairvoyant sees that the heart of the patient is failing and to save his life it is necessary to impart sufficient energy to it. Where to find it? He examines into the souls of things within range of his comprehensive view, now wonderfully developed by occult means, and at once sees their properties directly. With his vision, infinite times developed he finds himself in a position to take a comprehensive view of the souler world. A toad comes across his vision, and he finds that, from the eminences of its skin oozes out a white liquid, which has powerful stimulant properties, and has powerful action upon the heart. This is resorted to, and the man is saved. And thus, it is put down, that the white, milky juice that oozes out of the skin of a toad, is a powerful stimulant! Just fancy how impossible it would have been to find out the property of the exudation in the skins of toads by experiments!

A mad man is brought before another, whose clairvoyant faculties have been highly developed, for treatment and examination. He finds, by an internal examination of the man, the cause of his insanity. He then, examining the souler world, tries to find the drugs which will counteract the evil influences which had unbalanced the mind of the man. He finds it in the fat of a mad jackal!

As a matter of fact, when the heart is failing, the white substance which oozes out from the skin of the toad is a powerful remedy. And it is also a fact, that that fat of a mad jackal is a powerful remedy for insanity. Do you think it would have been possible for a man to find by experiment that toad had something in its skin which could impart energy to the heart or that the fat of the mad jackal would cure a man of his insanity? No, the properties of those substances were discovered by occult means.

We have thus far only tried to explain how the art of healing would never attain to the position of an exact science by dealing with the functions, but the energies which give life to the functions. Thus a complete revolution can be effected in the way of science is cultivated in the West by following the method described above. Scientists deal with the outward expression of the spiritual world,—material world. They deal with matter, and experiment with them. They either separate these matters or bring them together, and see the results. But the better way is to leave material objects alone and deal with their souls. If the souls of things are opened to your soul as their material covers are open to your material cover you will have infinite times better opportunities of obtaining a control over the material world than now. Let us understand the position clearly. When the soul steps out of the body, it comes en rapport with the souls of things. The soul then loses sight of the material world, and in proportion it loses sight of the material world, the souler world is opened out to him. Thus, when within the material cover he sees a rose. When out of it, he ceases to see the rose, but he sees the soul of the rose. The rose was a real thing to him when he was in his material cover, while its soul was unreal to him. But when he steps out of his body the rose becomes unreal, but its soul becomes real.

Let us then put down the general principle, namely, what is real man in a material body, is unreal to him, when he is out of it, and vice versa, and what is unreal to him when in the body, becomes real when he gets out of it.

It follows then, heat is partially unreal to him when he is in the body. So is light, so is electricity, and many other agents, some known, some partially known, some yet to be discovered. We now deal with heat, light, electricity, the X rays, and as they are not real to us in the fullest sense of the term, we have to do it in an uncertain manner. Now suppose electricity becomes as real to us as the steam now is. This means that we become the masters of heat, light and electricity which were hitherto our masters. But more of this hereafter.

Let us now come to another phase of the question. There are other agents only partially discovered and some yet undiscovered. When all these powerful, nay, irresistible energies become our slaves, do we not become the masters of the universe while we are only helpless slaves now? We are utterly helpless now, because the energies are our masters and we are their slaves.

Science has, of late, shown great progress in the West. Clever theories have been started, wonderful discoveries made, and the path paved for further and still more wonderful discoveries. But how are these theories formed, how are these discoveries made? Men, with a huge fund of imagination, apply themselves to explain a strange phenomenon of nature. The theory seems plausible and is generally accepted. But still it is only a theory. When lo! another comes forward with a better theory, and the older one is rejected, and the new one is accepted to be rejected in its turn by another still to come.

But men with a knowledge of the inner working of nature—men who have been permitted an entry into the workshop of nature—has not to depend upon imagination at all for the explanation of a strange phenomenon. For, he sees with his own senses,—inner senses,—senses infinite times developed, how nature brings the particular phenomenon, and he has no need to utilize the services of his imagination. Light has a theory of its own; so has heat. These theories no doubt proclaim the geniuses of the great men who conceived them. But still they are theories.

But to the man who has been able to develop his inner senses, light or heat is no longer an ethereal substance, but as real as any matter is to an ordinary man. For such a man handles light; smells light; he reduces it into powder; he mixes it with another substance; he puts it before him as a material object. He has, therefore, not to form any uncertain theory about heat or light or electricity. For he deals with them as he deals with any material substance. He has not to guess a theory; he has only to announce to his less favored fellow-beings what the real matter is with light, or electricity, or with heat.

Thus it comes that Hindu Spiritualism is not only an art, as in America, of opening communication with the dead, but is also a science. In short, science is founded in the West upon experiments, in India upon spiritual development!

Scientists thus make their discoveries accidentally. Being outside that is unaware of the energy that gives individuality and life to a material object, that is to say, having only knowledge of the material part of the substance, they have to experiment patiently. They put two things together, or they separate the component parts of a material substance, and watch the result. They mix charcoal, salt-petre and sulphur together and make powder. They make such a combination in a hap-hazard manner. When they mix the three ingredients a black powder is prepared. They do not know its value. Accidentall, however, a spark of fire comes in contact with that black powder, and this is followed by a blaze or explosion. And thus gun-powder is discovered. And it is in this manner that every discovery in the West has been made by accident!

It is, however, quite different with those who see the souls of things. They know beforehand what would be the result of a combination or separation. They have not to watch the result of every combination. It is not a case of accident with them.

It is claimed for Madame Blavatsky that she could create duplicates of material objects. This would be easy with those who are an rapport with the souls of things.

It was in this way that the Hindus cultivated science or acquired knowledge. They had no workshop, no scientific instrument, no professors generally to help them. What they did was to cultivate their spirituality. The Westerner acquired knowledge by experiments and the experience of others, and the Hindus by developing their own faculties.

Nowhere was education, spiritual and intellectual, so valued as in India. The people never devoted their energies to the extension of Empire or of trade; the highest object of existence of every man of the higher class was the cultivation of his intellect and his spirituality. The Hindus are an intelligent and ancient race. How is it then that the Western Science got very little help from Hindu labors?

There was a fundamental difference between the modes of researches of the West and the East.

The reason is this: The Westerners study matter; the Hindus studied spirit, because they knew that to know matter was not to know spirit, but to know spirit was to know matter, and something more. In short, they came to the conclusion that men's connection with matter was only for a short period; that the proper study of man was the soul; that the real education meant the development of the soul. They, therefore, left matter alone and studied the soul, which enabled them to know matter better than those who tried to know it by experiments.

In India, therefore, we have scarcely any books on science except those relating to the healing art and mathematics. Hundreds of thousands of authors have left evidence of their labors behind, and all their works refer to the soul, viz, the mental, the souler, the psychical and spiritual sciences. The professors developed their souls and taught their pupils how to do the same. As for a knowledge of the property of matters by experiments, they thought it was not necessary to those who have developed their souls which had opened out to them the workshop of nature.

Of those who succeeded in securing an entry into the workshop of nature, the highest were the saints, called rishis, the lowest, black magicians. There were others who utilized their knowledge not to serve any nefarious purpose, but the harmless one of making money, as for instance, the celebrated magicians of India. They exhibited their mastery over nature and made money. The next article headed "The Indian Magicians" will prove what we mean.

The Indian Magicians.

The exploits of the scientists of the 19th and the 20th centuries fill us with admiration, but those of the Indians of days gone by simply bewilder us. If we are to believe the Hindu books on Yoga, we are obliged to confess that they had absolute control over nature. But though we cannot prove that the Hindu rishis (saints) could perform all that the science of Yoga claimed for them, we can prove that the Hindu magicians performed wonders which are very much like miracles. Now who were these Hindu magicians? They were not rishis—the masters—men who had been able to develop their spiritual powers to an extraordinary degree, but they were men, who, somehow or other, had learned some of the minor secrets from the teachers and succeeded in performing miracles. These men exhibited their powers for money. As for instance, Hari Das, who allowed himself to be buried for months.

We know what the Western method is of divining the secrets of nature, that is to say, by experiments. We have described, to a certain extent, what the Hindu method is of doing it, that is to say, by developing the inner powers of men. We shall show that the Hindu method is infinite times better that the former by some of the exploits of the Hindu magicians, the disciples of the masters. Their exploits will simply bewilder the keenest intellect of the present-day scientists.

India is celebrated for its jugglers, because the people of the West have seen a few feats accomplished by the Indian magicians. Yet when the westerners came to India, the people had already lost the art, for brute force had disturbed Indian society. Conquerors had come and put the peaceful citizens to the sword, enslaved others, and plundered and burned their cities.

Baber, the Mogul, conquered India. His great-grandson, Jehangir, then the greatest sovereign in India, left a description of what he saw of Indian magic. That was four hundred years ago. He was a bigoted Mahomedan, and had thus no interest to speak deliberate lies in favor of the Hindus. He wrote his autobiography. That book was translated from the original under the auspices of the Government of India by Major Price. Let us now see what this monarch says of what he and his court saw:

"But to descend to matters of less serious importance. At the period of which I am about to speak, there were to be found in the province of Bengal performers in sleight-of-hand, or jugglers, of such unrivalled skill in their art, that I have thought a few instances of their extraordinary dexterity not unworthy of a place in this memorial. On one occasion in particular, there came to my court seven of these men, who confidently boasted that they were capable of producing effects so strange as far to surpass the scope of the human understanding; and most certainly when they proceeded to their operations, they exhibited in their performances things of so extraordinary a nature, as without the actual demonstration the world would not have conceived possible; such indeed as cannot but be considered among the most surprising circumstances of the age in which we live.

"First. They stated that of any tree that should be named they would set the seed in the earth, and that I should immediately witness the extraordinary result. Khaun-e-Jahaun, one of the nobles present, observed that if they spoke truly, he should wish them to produce for his conviction a mulberry tree. The men arose without hesitation, and having in ten separate spots set some seed in the ground, they recited among themselves, in cabalistical language unintelligible to the standers-by, when instantly a plant was seen springing from each of ten places, and each proved the tree required by Khaun-e-Jahaun. In the same manner, they produced a mango, and apple tree, a cypress, a pine-apple, a fig, an almond, a walnut, and many more trees, and this without any attempt at concealment in the operation; but open to the observation of all present, the trees were perceived gradually and slowly springing from the earth, to the height of one, perhaps two cubits, when they shot forth leaves and branches; the apple tree in particular producing fruit, which fruit was brought to me, and I can attest to its fragrance.

"The fact was not, however, confined to the apple tree alone, for having made the other trees appear in the manner above described, they said that if I thought fit to order it, I should taste of the fruit of every tree, which did not fail to increase the astonishment already excited. Then making a sort of procession round the trees as they stood, and invoking certain names, in a moment there appeared on the respective trees a sweet mango without the rind, an almond fresh and ripe, a large fig of the most delicious kind, and so with the pine, and every other tree of which they had set the seed, the fruit being pulled in my presence and brought to me, and everyone present was allowed to taste of it. This, however, was not all; before the trees were removed there appeared among the foliage birds of such surprising beauty, in color, and shape, and melody of song, as the world never saw before; and the more to confirm us in the reality, the birds were observed to whisper to each other, and to flutter, and contend with each other in playful indifference among the branches. At the close of the operation, the foliage, as in autumn, was seen to put on its variegated tints, and the trees gradually disappeared into the earth from which they had been made to spring. I can only further observe that if the circumstances which I have now described had not happened in my own presence, I could never have believed that they had any existence in reality.

"Secondly. One night, and in the very middle of the night, when half of this gold was wrapped up in darkness, one of these seven men stripped himself almost naked, and having spun himself swiftly around several times, he took a sheet with which he covered himself, and from beneath the sheet drew out a resplendent mirror, by the radiance of which a light so powerful was produced, as to have illuminated the hemisphere to an incredible distance round; to such a distance, indeed, that we have the attestation of travellers to the fact, who declared that on a particular night, the same night on which the exhibition took place, and at the distance of ten day's journey they saw the atmosphere so powerfully illuminated, as to exceed the brightness of the brightest day that they had ever seen. This also may be considered, I think, among the extraordinary things of the age.

"Thirdly. The seven men stood close together in a group, and without moving either lips or tongue, produced between them such harmony and sweetness of modulation, as if the whole seven had but one voice, and that forming the most delightful unison. It was at the same time distinctly ascertained that the mouth and tongue had not the slightest share in the operation. This also afforded subject of admiration.

"Fourthly. They made for themselves about a hundred air-bolts which they placed on an elevated spot at two bow-shot distance from the spot on which they stood, informing me that they would cause anyone, or as many of them as I chose to order, to explode or take fire, without stirring from their places, in my presence. This they accordingly did, and I do not question that they would have set fire to ten at once if I had thought fit.

Fifth. They placed in my presence a large seething-pot or cauldron, and, filling it partly with water, they threw into it eight of the smaller maunhs of Irak of rice; when without the application of the smallest spark of fire the cauldron forthwith began to boil. In a little time they took off the lid, and drew from it near a hundred platters full, each with a stewed fowl at top. This also may be considered among things extraordinary.

"Sixth. On a dry spot of ground they placed a particular flower, having danced round it three times successively, an ebullition of water shot up from the flower, and instantly a shower of roses fell on all below, while not a drop of moisture touched the ground. When this miraculous fountain had continued to play for more than an hour they removed the rose, or whatever else it might have been, and, and not a vestige of anything humid appeared on the spot where it had been placed. Again: they placed the same flower on the ground, and it threw up at this time, alternately water and flower-shedding fire, and this for nearly two parts of a watch of day.

"Seventh. One of the seven men stood upright before us, a second passed upwards along his body, and head to head, placed his feet upwards in the air. A third managed to climb up in the same manner, and planting his feet to those of the second, stood with his head upwards, and so alternately to the seventh, who crowned this extraordinary human pillar with his head uppermost; and what excited an extraordinary clamor of surprise, was to observe the first man, who thus supported on the crown of his head the whole of the other six, lift one foot as high as the shoulder, standing thus upon one leg, and exhibiting a degree of strength and steadiness not exactly within the scope of my comprehension.

"Eighth. One of the men stood upright as before; another took hold of him by the hips from behind, and so on to the number of forty men, each laying hold the one of the other by the hips in the same manner. The first man put forth his strength, and contrived to force the whole of the others in train along the field for some time—a degree of bodily strength which could not be witnessed without considerable astonishment.

"Ninth. They produced a man whom they divided limb from limb, actually severing his head from his body. They scattered these mutilated members along the ground, and in this state they lay for some time. They then extended a sheet or curtain over the spot and one of the men putting himself under the sheet, in a few minutes, came from below, followed by the individual supposed to have been cut into joints, in perfect health and condition, and one might have safely sworn that he had never received a wound or injury whatever.

"Tenth. They took a small bag, and having first shown that it was entirely empty, one of them put his hand into the bag. On withdrawing his hand again, out came two game-cocks of the largest size and great beauty, which immediately assailing each other, fought with such force and fury that their wings emitted sparks of fire at every stroke. This continued for the full space of an astronomical hour, when they put an end to the combat by throwing a sheet over the animals. Again they withdrew the sheet, and there appeared a brace of partridges with the most beautiful and brilliant plumage, which immediately began to tune their throats as if there were nothing human present; pecking at worms with the same sort of chuckle (kakkah) as they are heard to use on the hillside. The sheet was now thrown, as in the other instances, over the partridges and when again withdrawn, instead of those frightful black snakes, with flat heads and crimson bellies, which, with open mouth and head erect, and coiled together, attacked each other with the greatest fury, and so continuel to do, until, as it appeared, they became quite exhausted, when they fell asunder. The sheet was thrown over as before, and when finally withdrawn, there appeared not a vestage of the snakes or of anything else.

"Eleventh. They made an excavation in the earth in the shape of a tank or reservoir, of considerable dimensions, which they requested us to fill with water. When this was done, they spread a covering over the place, and, after a short interval, having removed the cover, the water appeared to be one complete sheet of ice, and they desired that some of the elephant-keepers might be directed to lead their elephants across. Accordingly one of the men set his elephant upon the ice, and the animal walked over with as much ease and safety as if it were a platform of solid rock, remaining for some time on the surface of the frozen pond without occasioning the slightest fracture in the ice. As usual, the sheet was drawn across the place, and being again removed, every vestige of ice, and even moisture of any sort, had completely disappeared.

"Twelfth. They caused two tents to be set up at the distance of a bow-shot the one from the other, the doors or entrances being placed exactly opposite. They raised the tent walls all around, and desired that it might be particularly observed that they were entirely empty. Then fixing the tent walls to the ground, two of the seven men entered, one into each tent, none other of the seven entering either of the tents. Thus prepared, they said they would undertake to bring out of the tents any animal we chose to mention, whether bird or beast, and set them in conflict with each other. Khaun-e-Jahaun, with a smile of incredulity, required them to show us a battle between two ostriches. In a few minutes two ostriches of the largest size issued, one from either tent, and attacked each other with such fury that blood was seen streaming from their heads; they were, at the same time, so equally matched, that neither could get the better of the other, and they were therefore separated by the men, and conveyed within the tents. My son, Khoorum, then called for the nellahgao, and immediately were seen to issue from the tents two of those untameable animals, equally large, fat and fierce, which likewise commenced a furious combat, seizing each other by the neck, and alternately forcing one another backwards and forwards for the space of nearly two guhrries of time, after which they were also separated, and withdrawn into the tents. In short, they continued to produce from either tent whatever animal we chose to name, and before our eyes set them to fight in the manner I have attempted to describe; and although I have exerted my utmost invention to discover the secret of the contrivance, it has hitherto been entirely without success.

"Thirteenth. They were furnished with a bow and about fifty steel-pointed arrows. One of the seven men took the bow in hand, and shooting an arrow into the air, the shaft stood fixed at a considerable height; he shot a second arrow, which flew straight to the first, to which it became attached and so with every one of the remaining arrows to the last of all, which striking the united sheaf suspended in the air, the whole immediately broke asunder, and came at once to the earth. This also it would be difficult to explain.

"Fourteenth. They filled a large vessel full of water perfectly transparent, and placed it on the floor before me. One of them held in his hand a red rose, which he said, by giving it a dip in the water, he would bring out of any color I chose to mention. Accordingly he gave the rose a plunge, and out it came of a bright yellow; and thus at every dip he brought it out of a different kind and color; at one time a gulaul, at another an orange blossom. In short, a hundred times repeated he would have produced at each a flower of a different kind and color. Then they plunged a skein of white thread into the vessel, and brought it first of red, then of yellow color, and so of a different color a hundred times repeated, if required so to do.

"Fifteenth. They produced a bird-cage, of which the side that appeared next to me exhibited a pair of sweet-singing nightingales. They gave the cage a turn, and though there was no partition to divide it, there now appeared a couple of beautiful green parrots. Another turn of the cage, and they showed us another sort of speaking-bird of a scarlet color; another, and we saw a brace of partridges beautifully mottled and colored, and, what appears extraordinary, of most melodious song. Thus at every change of the four sides of the cage, there appeared a different kind of bird, and the like, if repeated a hundred times. This must, I think, have been attended with the greatest difficulty in the performance.

"Sixteenth. They spread out a carpet of twenty cubits in length, and of very beautiful colors and pattern. They turned it upside downwards, and displayed a pattern and colors entirely different; and, in like manner, at every turn, if a hundred times repeated, the carppet would exhibit patterns and colors entirely different, ad infinitum.

"Seventeenth. They brought a large ewer, which in my presence they filled full of water. They reversed the ewer with its face downwards, spilling the water to the last drop; they turned the vessel with its face upwards, and it appeared as full of water as at first. And this they could have repeated a hundred times over with the same effect; which I could not but consider equally curious and unaccountable.

"Eighteenth. They produced a large sack, open at both ends. At one end of this they introduced a melon, which at the other end was brought out a cucumber. Then the cucumber at one end came out at the other a noble bunch of the finest grapes. Again, they introduced the grapes at one end, and at the other out came a bag of apples, of the true abbas sort; and thus, in a hundred instances, if required, they would in each instance exhibit a similar change; all which could not bet appear extraordinary to the eye.

"Nineteenth. One of the seven men stood up before me, and setting open his mouth, immediately out came the head of a snake. Another of the men seized the snake by the neck and drew it out to the length of four cubits. This being disposed of by casting it to the ground, another followed in the same manner, and so on to the number of eight, none of them less than four or five cubits in length. These being all cast loose upon the ground, were immediately seen writhing in the folds of each other, and tearing one another with the greatest apparent fury—a spectacle not less strange than frightful.

"Twentieth. They took a looking-glass in one hand, and in the other a rose, or other flower of any color at will. They held the flower for an instant behind the mirror, and bringing it forward again, it had assumed a different color. Thus it became alternately changed by this sort of sleight, to green, and red, and orange, and violet, and black and white—very curious to behold.

"Twenty-first. They arranged in my presence ten empty porcelain jars, all in attendance having witnessed that they were actually and entirely empty. In about half an hour they uncovered

Germs of Mind in Plants.

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

MARCONI TURNS TO SPIRITUALISM

The Inventor Converted by a Princess—Her Strange Experiences—The Princess d'Anntunni del Drago Says That the Spirit Form of Her Husband's First Wife Appeared to Her in the Night—She Also Saw Her Grandmother in Paris the Same Day and Hour She Died in Naples—Some Time Ago She Met Marconi and Invited Him to Her House to Assist in a Seance.

London, December 10.—The Rome correspondent of the Morning Leader, says that Marconi's conversion to Spiritualism is of quite recent date. It was effected by Princess D'Anntunni del Drago, who, besides being a convinced Spiritualist, is a remarkable medium. She took up Spiritualism after the death of her husband seven months ago. She is studying the matter thoroughly, dedicating almost all of her time to it. In interview the princess said:

"Here in Italy my set as a rule do not believe in Spiritualism, which they consider in the light of a huge joke. If they knew I had taken up the matter seriously and succeeded in obtaining materialistic phenomena in seances they would look on me as exalted. In America and England it is quite different. There science has been brought to bear on spiritualistic phenomena.

"The subject has been raised to a sort of cult and studied on a scientific basis. I have felt since I was a child of four years, that I had some extraordinary power—something mysterious and undefined—that enabled me to experience sensations denied others. I heard voices, which, of course, at that age I could not explain. Shortly after my marriage the first phenomenon of any importance happened. I was in bed, awake, when the blankets were pulled off violently by unseen hands.

"Strange to relate, I was not alarmed. Suddenly I saw a shadow over the bed, a black shadow, which gradually took the shape of a female figure. I saw it clearly and distinctly, all the smallest details of the figure, its features and dress. The figure spoke, saying:

"'I am your husband's first wife. I am dead. I came to tell you that you shall have a son, but he will die. Give this to my husband with my love,' and so saying handed me a lock of hair. I cried aloud for my husband. He rushed into the room and saw the shadow. He picked up the lock of hair I had dropped to the floor. He had a lock of his wife's hair in a locket. When we compared we found the two identical. When my son was born I again saw the figure of my husband's first wife. She pleaded that the child should be baptized, as it would soon die. It had hardly been christened when it died. No doctor could explain the cause of death, as the child was quite healthy.

"I saw my grandmother in Paris the same day and hour she died in Naples. I was warned several days before my husband died, when everybody, including himself, believed he was in the best of health. Lately I began to hold seances here in my palace. I met Signor Marconi a few weeks ago at an entertainment given by the Marchesa Pinolecce. I spoke to him about Spiritualism. He said he did not believe in it, so I invited him to come to my house and assist in a seance. He came last Tuesday. There were only myself, Marconi and the medium. We formed a chain round a small table, and without telling all the phenomena we obtained, it is sufficient to say that when Marconi left he was a convinced Spiritualist and quite determined to study the subject scientifically. He promised to put me in communication with Professor Crookes. I am anxiously waiting to see whether the great inventor will succeed in finding an explanation of spiritualistic phenomena."—New York World.

A NEW VOLUME

By Hudson Tuttle Is Equal to Many Books.

Hudson Tuttle is a marvel of uncontrollable industry. He is open to the vitalizing vibrations of both worlds. The turbulent currents of terrestrial and celestial knowledge inflow and upflow, and there seems to be unresting winds and choppy seas round about the citadel of his personal life. The various agitations and irresistible inspirations of his brain and mind crop out in fruitful thoughts and ideas—into intellectual comfort and into spiritual (religious?) happiness for the lasting benefit of the world.

Beneath my open left hand rests Hudson Tuttle's new book, closed—and not reading its pages, I do not consider myself duly qualified to express by analysis of its contents, a critical estimate of its consistency or logical value to the world of ideas. But I do consider myself competent to affirm that this volume is a compend of universal knowledge on the subjects treated.

Hudson Tuttle conveys his reader to the germs of fundamentals. He eloquently exhibits to deepest foundations of truth.

Hark! and you can hear in this book the earliest and faintest cry of the babyhood of mankind.

Listen! Do you not hear the inherent voices of the infinite central cause of all the universes?

Thursday morning last the mail carrier handed me Hudson Tuttle's new book, "The Evolution of the God and the Christ Ideas"—adapted to educate the most scholarly reader, and not less adapted to enlighten the common mind. Then next morning's mail brought me a newspaper, published in Great Bend, Kansas, which is "devoted to teaching the discovery that God is a myth like Santa Claus!" Thus it was made easy for me to take the step from the sublime to the ridiculous." But this was not my first exploit in stepping through these thrilling and chilling opposites. For I have known talented minds—men, who did not know enough and were not industrious enough to earn a decent living for themselves and families, but who, nevertheless, could (so they thought) in brief logical argument demonstrate the absolute impossibility of "The Great Positive Mind." And yet, absurd and incompatible as it may seem, these same God-annihilators are generally philanthropists and advocates of the best things in materialism.

On the other hand, here comes our beloved inspired brother, Hudson Tuttle, with his philosophic wand of unceasing inspiration, unfolding the progressive gradations in the realm of implanted ideas, and developing at the summit two immortal flowers, fragrant with perfume of the truth about God and with the highest and holiest conception of Christ. He has plowed over the whole field of theology and Christology—subsoiling everywhere as he went along—and we "know that where the share is deepest driven the best fruits grow."

In conclusion I will say, that, if you would know what a rich and rare feast friend Tuttle has, with unexampled industry, prepared for the world, you can obtain his volume and enjoy the details thereof in the depths of your own spirit.

A. J. DAVIS.

Boston, Mass.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

"What Is the Matter With Spiritualism?"

One hears this question asked quite frequently. That there is something wrong somewhere along the line must be apparent. As an organized movement Spiritualism is not a success. It is next to impossible to keep a local society alive for any great length of time. A society may well be organized with much promise of a permanent existence. In twelve months it is dead—so dead that even a lecturer of national reputation may fail to draw an audience of a dozen people. Even old-time Spiritualists are conspicuous for their absence.

There are a number of reasons for this deplorable condition, and first of all we would mention the divergent views of our lecturers. One class of them builds while another class tears down. One lecturer may preach Spiritualism pure and simple. He does not antagonize anybody's religion. He does not believe that he will be able to build up the cause of Spiritualism by exposing the errors of theology. He assumes that when the people are converted to Spiritualism there WILL BE NO ORTHODOX CHURCHES TO DESTROY. He reasons it out that he will not be able to win people from the churches by charging them with being imbeciles. Furthermore, he is convinced that if he attend strictly to his work of promulgating the grand principles of Spiritualism—teaching the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man—teaching the people to live the lives of righteous men and women, then he will have quite enough to do.

We have too much oratory about the past and future, and too little concerning the practical affairs of life in this world. Not a few of our speakers love to dwell on the mistakes of Moses, or some other man; they live in the past. Their thoughts are of a distant age in which the average man can feel little or no interest. And then there is the lecturer who delves into the future. He delights in drawing word pictures of the spirit land, generally indulges in speculations as to what we will be doing a million years hence.

And then we have the radical lecturer. He hates religion—hates the orthodox churches—hates Christianity, but more especially does he hate the churches. He has but one motto, and that is to "rip them up the back." By the time he has completed his engagement he has scattered the flock to the four winds of the earth, for it must be borne in mind that a majority of the members of nearly all our societies came from the churches, and while they no longer believe in church creeds, they still respect the faith that afforded their parents so much consolation, especially in times of trouble. And hence it is that no society can prosper under the teachings of radical lecturers. THIS IS AN ABSOLUTE FACT!

And another thing: Spiritualism will never succeed until its teachers are able to reach an understanding as to what it really is. And besides it must be separated from all the various isms under which it has been weighed down for the past years. We want pure Spiritualism. We want it as a religion. We want it as a philosophy. We want its phenomena, demonstrated by methods to PRECLUDE ALL POSIBILITY OF FRAUD. We want lecturers to teach the people to be pure, to be honest, sober and industrious—to live noble and unselfish lives. If Spiritualism does not make men and women any better than they were before they were converted to its truths, then the world would be just as well off without it.

And then we must find some way to separate the fraud mediums from the genuine.

It is now too late to cry out that Spiritualism is not a religion. It is defined as a religion by the consultation of the N. S. A. and moreover, IT IS THE RELIGION of a majority of the Spiritualists. That ought to be sufficient.

Whether we approve it or not, the time is near at hand when we will have Spiritualist churches instead of societies; pastors instead of lecturers, and Sunday Schools instead of Lyceums—in fact, we have a good many churches as well as pastors even now.

The fact is, SPIRITUALISM IS NOW A FULL-FLEDGED RELIGION, and just as soon as our lecturers learn to preach SPIRITUALISM, and let other religions alone, we shall become a power for good in the religious world.

Our friends, the Christian Scientists, are thoroughly organized, and work together in harmony. They have but one general purpose, and that is to teach Christian Science. They don't argue—they say nothing ill of other religions—they attend strictly to their business, and hence their efforts are crowned with success.

Let us repeat it most emphatically that Spiritualism should have its platform of principles—call it a creed, if you will, but it must have it if it is to succeed. Why is it that we have no colleges? Why is it that the great majority of the local societies must hold their meetings in dingy halls? Simply because men of means do not care to bequeath their money to a cause which lacks the essential elements to make it enduring.

In addition to spirit communion, upon which all Spiritualists agree, we must have a correct ethics and a philosophy to meet the requirements of this intelligent and progressive age. Let our lecturers preach salvation—a salvation which may be secured only by right living.

Let the great purpose of our work be to enlighten our fellow beings to the end that they may be spared the horrors on an accusing conscience when they shall have crossed the dark river—then we shall feel that we have done something for humanity.

Letter from Andrew Jackson Davis to His Correspondents,

Who Complain That They Do Not Receive His Books from the Publishers.

To Very Dear Friends, Everywhere:—First, and before replying to my valued correspondents, I desire, with a heart full of deep gratitude, to acknowledge the voluntary and most emphatic efforts of our progressive thinker, Mr. J. R. Francis, the efficient editor and successful publisher, to arouse the Spiritualist public to subscribe and to pledge themselves to purchase a full set of the books as soon as new editions can be printed. He has continued from week to week this loud call, and I gladly observe that many hearty responses have been received from earnest and loyal friends of Spiritualism.

Many complaints, both oral and written, have reached me during the past two years, from those who state that they have been unable to obtain my books from the publishers, among them the following, from an established newspaper publisher and bookseller in a large city, which will suffice to illustrate the general tenor of most of the others:

"April 24, 1905.

"Dr. A. J. Davis, 63 Warren Ave., Boston, Mass.

"Dear Sir and Brother:—I wrote to you some time ago in reference to your publications, and the fact that many of them are now out of print. I wrote to the Banner several days ago, requesting a list of the books which they can furnish me, for I advertise them for sale at this office and put the same in my catalogue. For some reason I have received no answer to my letter. My object being to only advertise books which we can supply. It is very annoying to advertise books and then find I cannot supply them."

It appears to me that the general public is entitled to such material information, relating to the matter, as I may have, as it was the spirit and purpose of an arrangement made with the publishers in behalf of the public, to have the books kept "constantly in print and accessible to the public."

Impressed and disturbed by these appeals to me, and not fully understanding the productive circumstances, I concluded to institute an investigation, but strictly in a spirit of friendship, yet in search for justice to all concerned. Accordingly I have secured the services of counsel, Mr. Frederick Atherton of this city, a gentleman who is not prejudiced against any person or principles in our movement.

Dr. Dean Clarke, about three years ago, commenced to agitate a plan to incorporate a Publication Society, which would purchase my plates and keep all the books in print, but nothing came of it. And just here I may remark that the practicability of this plan is now under consideration, and it may in due time be fully realized.

One day my truly loyal friend, Mr. A. E. Giles of Hyde Park, Mass., said: "If you can make arrangements with the Banner of Light Publishing Company so that your works can, for the benefit of the public and in the interest of human progress, be certainly kept in print permanently, I will give sixty per cent of the sum required for that purpose and they can pay the balance." To this most generous plan the Banner of Light Company gladly agreed and its officers had drawn up, and signed, the following document, while I at the same time conveyed to them in a bill of sale my interest in the books, plates, etc.:

Promise to Keep Books Constantly in Print.

Boston, Mass, July 1, 1903.

"We, Albert W. Brown, President; Harrison D. Barrett, Director; and Frederic G. Tuttle, Secretary and Treasurer of the Banner of Light Publishing Company, having purchased of Andrew Jackson Davis his entire stock of stereotyped plates, do hereby agree in behalf of said Banner of Light Publishing Company, to keep his list of books constantly in print and accessible to the public, and we do hereby promise faithfully to continue them in style uniform with past and present editions, and to maintain the existing standard of excellence as to paper, press-work, binding, etc. [Signed]

"ALBERT W. BROWN,
"HARRISON D. BARRETT,
"FREDERIC G. TUTTLE."

Not many months after the foregoing agreement, Mr. Fred G. Tuttle passed suddenly from this world, whereupon the Banner establishment came into a new management, under which the troubles above mentioned rapidly multiplied. Subsequently, as I am informed, a new business arrangement was consummated, entitled "The Dartmouth Publishing Co.," and it was reported that by a blanket mortgage taken by the Dartmouth Company, and by a foreclosure, the paper and the valuable assets of the Banner establishment passed into the possession of the new corporation.

Now, therefore, it is plain that the plates are the property of the Dartmouth Publishing Co., and in order to obtain them, so that new editions can be printed, the management of this new company must be consulted and legally dealt with. But it is no part of my plan to enter the arena of litigation. The forty per cent due me ($2,000) has never been paid. But I am perfectly willing to agree to let the two thousand dollars remain forever unpaid, if, by so doing, the publication and perpetuity of the books can be accomplished.

And right here permit me to say once for all time, that I sacredly regard my 29 volumes as so many agents (or teachers) adapted to the intellectual, industrial, scientific, moral and spiritual education and advancement of mankind. And I equally sacredly esteem the many books written under inspiration by all our Spiritualist authors both in America and England, in France and Germany, in Italy and in Russia—and I should equally regard it as a profound misfortune if, by any means they were thrown out of print.

In conclusion: A simple life is our choice and practice. For the past thirty years, by means of a modest income from my medical practice, we have lived comfortably, and have kept the 29 volumes in print. Our prayer now is, that some just and efficient way may be found whereby the above promise of the Banner may be fulfilled.

Ever in love and peace,

ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 15, 1906.

THE POINT OMITTED.

Practical Suggestions for Improving the System of the N. S. A.

In a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, under the heading of "The Point Omitted," I endeavored to call attention to some of the causes operating to prevent our National gatherings from being as effective as we desire, or, as the needs of a rapidly expanding movement demand.

While we can but feel gratified with the results growing out of these yearly gatherings taken as a whole, accompanying this is the realization that we are "still in arrears," and have failed to reach our ideal of what a National Association should be. While this may be considered as a healthy symptom, it cannot be pronounced a comfortable companion; and if this condition is accepted as final, then we may prepare ourselves for a more pronounced failure in time to come.

As before stated, it will be unwise to attribute this to lack of loyalty on the part of delegates: It is doubtless true that a portion of those in attendance fail to rise to the occasion; but the great majority are loyal and desire to do good work. Evidently the trouble lies in some other direction, and will be discovered as time passes.

The crucial test of the vitality of any movement, that which gives it the right to exist, is found in its ability to meet the constantly increased demands made upon it; and in this direction good administrative ability comes into action.

Coming events and requirements must be anticipated to a great extent, and provision made accordingly. This proposition is so self-evident that discussion would seem to be unnecessary. It is sustained by the accumulated evidence of all past experience. It follows that failure to provide for the future will result in a scattering of our forces, and a retrograde movement will begin.

A case in point was the inauguration of the "Temple Fund Society," by the recent convention. It's been "long—long on the way," and yet the mechanism is simple, and the wonder is that its development has been so slow. It will receive a hearty response, for its usefulness appeals strongly to the entire Spiritualistic body. Moses Hull is and has been for a number of years, anticipating the "coming demands," but he meets with but scant encouragement. He is, beyond question, moving in the right direction, as time will demonstrate.

I believe the failure on the part of the rank and file of our people to respond heartily to the necessities of the M. P. Institute is traceable to the attitude taken by many of the recognized leaders of our movement, at the birth of this enterprise. It received the cold shoulder then, and it has never fully recovered.

Leaving this feature of our work, let us look at one other.

From the very nature of our movement, having to do and deal with the fundamental issues of the coming civilization, being strictly humanitarian in its purposes; in other words, having to deal with men and institutions as we find them, our Great Movement must be strictly democratic in structure and method. It must of necessity draw its nourishment from the masses, and not from any particular class, or special phase of manifestation. The closer in touch we keep with that body of people known as Spiritualists, the more adherents and greater loyalty, with broader and better results. I may be mistaken, but if not, there are some very marked symptoms of a tendency to make our National Association represent only part of the great movement known as Modern Spiritualism. Just to the extent that it fails to appreciate and apply every phase of its phenomena, just to the extent that its philosophy is diverted and made to do service to any or to one particular class, just to that extent does it fail to be "National."

Spiritualism proper, is all-inclusive, and will permit no restrictions in its manifestations, and organized movements must yield obedience to this fact or cease to be general agencies of reform.

Failing in this they become narrow and sectional. And finally the agencies of dogmatism and bigotry. I am optimistic enough to believe that these tendencies will be corrected, and that we will become National in fact as well as in theory. Certain it is that no amount of transcendentalism—not even a complete and conscientious devotion—can atone for narrowness of views, or the restricted application of a great moral principle.

But this article will permit of but one more suggestion, bearing upon the question of supplying a method which we believe will assist in uniting our forces and in building up a system to cover future demands. And this suggestion will be a very practical one, and perhaps there will be less diversity of opinion as to its usefulness.

One of the most pressing needs of the hour is to locate our National President—not the present occupant alone, but whoever may occupy that position in time to come. Not "locate" him over some particular society, but place him in an office, presumably at "headquarters"—and keep him there most of the time, so that the people can find him when needed; or communicate with him when it becomes necessary.

We intend no disrespect to President Barrett; he has simply carried out the system (or lack of system) provided for him. But a National President who hails from the "land of Canaan," but who is quite as likely to materialize in Texas, or Oklahoma, or the Sandwich Islands, as at headquarters, and with whom, a communication by mail will grow infirm with age before it can be received and answered—a President so situated cannot do justice to himself or the cause he represents.

When I was a "Rancher" in Kansas, I owned quite a number of valuable horses. Before the day of fences we turned our animal out upon the open prairie, and I remember that a great deal of time went to waste hunting them up when needed. All did as the rest of the "Ranchers," but being very much averse to hunting them when I desired their use, I always "picketed the leader," and I usually found the balance of the herd in the immediate vicinity.

It is time we paid our National President a living salary and furnished an office adapted to the work he has to perform. And by the same process of reasoning it would seem that our National Missionaries should be given some specific work to do and concentrate upon a certain portion of the vineyard instead of covering so much territory and spreading their efforts so thinly that the best results cannot obtain, and should not be expected.

This is not faultfinding. All these people, so actively engaged, have done work of inestimable value; but the field is too large, and concentration of effort has become necessary.

If we do not exhaust the patience of the editor of The Progressive Thinker, we will pursue this subject further in one more article.

MY GARDEN OF FLOWERS.

My garden is laden with the breath of a sweet perfume
Of the scent of roses as in the golden days of June,
And the mingling of odors with the varied shades and hues
Are radiantly sparkling in the sunkissed morning dews.

And through its silent magic out of it there seems to arise
The dream of the olden Summers and the blue threaded skies,
When the dawn tripped light-hearted, ushering in the day,
Scattering the cares and shadows when my heart was in its May.

With my half-closed eyes I fancy the old home near,
And a mother's presence beaming in tenderness and cheer,
And the dear old charm of the humble garden bloom
Come back again to break the heartache and gloom.

On the drift of the breezes wafted over many a lonesome day,
On the wings of fancy through the familiar past I stray,
And the songs of the olden Summers with the dear ones I know,
Come back with the bloom of youth, warm-hearted and true.

Ah! yes, there's the brook, rippling by past banks and mossy dells,
Where the blue gentian peeps, the violets and the dainty blue-bells,
And the songs it sings linger through the year like a spell;
No words can paint its charm, no eloquent tongue can tell.

So I look and fancy the old Summers have once more returned,
With the golden-hearted part for which my heart has yearned,
And from my flower-scent garden with its tropical bloom
My thoughts are weaving pictures in Memory's mystic loom.

AN UP-TO-DATE SERMON.

Scintillating With Grand Truths in Reference to Religion, and Explaining the Individuality Therein.

"Work out your own salvation."—Phil. ii., 12.

Religion is intensely individualistic. It is a tree that never twice assumes the same form, nor does it even bear precisely the same fruit.

It is as varied as humanity, for it depends on each separate human factor for its peculiar expression.

The search for uniformity in religion is a search for that which does not exist, and the wish sometimes expressed by individuals, to have another person's faith is a wish that can never be gratified.

There never yet were two faces precisely alike, for faces are not made by the many in a single mold; they grow out of life; they are shaped and seared and illumined by sensibilities, by emotions, by aspirations, and experiences. The face is the story of the life, peculiar to itself, having no exact duplicate. Yet, with all the variations, there are types of faces, some that you would trust, some that repel, the face of the upward life and the face of the downward trend.

So it is with religion.

It is not machine made.

It is not a mask laid upon the man; it is not applied from without; it grows from within.

True religion springs up in the heart; it is shaped and determined by the experiences, the aspirations, the sources of life's inspirations. Ideally, it is the summing up of all the good that the life has known; practically, it is the expression in deed and word of that good.

Growing out of the ever-varying inherited qualities, experiences and achievements of each life, it is not only never the same in two individuals, it can never be precisely the same on successive days in the same person. It works out into larger being, grows, and develops. It will not be the same in man as in the boy, nor the same in the boy as in the girl. Some days see mighty changes, but, in the living soul, every day sees some change.

This fact has distressed some introspective souls; they lament lost religious convictions, as a man might lament the boy's outlook, the boy's enthusiasms and star-vaulting ambitions. Or they make fruitless efforts to conform themselves spiritually to the pattern of some other saint. Ideals are inspirations, not patterns; it is folly to grieve if you do not reproduce their precise lines and angles.

To test a man's religion by some rigid mechanical standard is as foolish as to test his vitality by his height. Still greater is the folly of measuring religion by opinions, as though one's health could be determined by his views on the so-called canals on Mars.

Religion is simply the life of the soul, the inner being that determines character; it must be measured by its vitality, its strength and purity, and value to the world.

The mechanic will probably continue with impudent ignorance to invade the realm of the soul; he will set up his rule of thumb creed or single doctrine or virtue or emotion and measure all souls by that. Perhaps he is still in so primitive a condition of soul growth that he imagines his crude standard encompasses all possible good.

Let the man whose heart is growing ignore the attempt to measure the life by the standard of things or to make all lives in one style.

Let every heart reach after the best; let every soul live out the good it finds within let every man WORK OUT HIS OWN SALVATION, as he must work out his own character, his own self in the world, through the toil and struggle, through the joy and blessing.

Through life's multiform experiences we learn to live; through all the strange ways of the soul each one finds salvation, each in his own way, finds the path to the full life.

The eternal spirit is working in all, and where that spirit is there is liberty; the infinite breathes through the individual.

Religion first gave man this great thought of his value and his right as a soul; it has worked through the whole leaven of society until we find the law of liberty everywhere prevailing, men working out their lives from within and finding full salvation not in subjection to some code of perfect action, but in development of the things within, under the IMPULSE OF ETERNAL SPIRITUAL LAWS.

HENRY F. COPE.

The Late Empress of Germany and Occultism.

A thrilling anecdote is related of the late Mr. Krupp. One day, while traveling with the Empress Victoria of Germany, mother of the present Emperor, who had graciously invited him to spend the afternoon in her railway carriage, some of the ladies present spoke of the occult sciences and of the secret life of the soul during sleep. "I am sure, Mr. Krupp, being such a practical man, you must inwardly smile at such opinions, and may, perhaps, desire to contradict the ladies. Please do not hesitate to do so; I should be quite delighted to hear you discuss the subject," said the Empress. "I am afraid I shall have to disappoint your Majesty," answered Mr. Krupp, "as my father was a firm believer in occultism. He often told his family and his friends that he discovered the final formula of our famous cannon during his sleep in a railway carriage. He had sunk into deep slumber after in vain trying to solve the problem. His pencil and notebook lay by his side. As he awoke a few hours later, lo! he found the page of the open notebook full of mathematical problems and the key to the last problem which had so puzzled him was there. His feverish brain had done the whole work during sleep as well as his hand, and with an accuracy that never ceased to astonish him."

France and the Vatican in Deadly Strife.

Opponents of church rule and usurpations are watching with almost bated breath each day's news from France, for the outcome of the great issues there pending. France, next to Rome, has been the main support of Catholicism. And since the Italian revolution, and the wresting of temporal power from the Pope, limiting his control of civil affairs to the Vatican, his reliance for support has come largely from the French.

During the forming stage of Catholicism French scholars in the monasteries contributed largely to the making of ecclesiastical history. The extent of their labors in that direction will be never known; but it is hopeful when the records of the convents and the monasteries are thrown open to the public glimmerings of their frauds and forgeries will come to the light. Eliminate sacerdotals, and literature forged in France, Spain and Italy, and little would remain of the church.

The story of the present troubles in France, rightfully traced, will carry us back more than a century, indeed, to 1789, and back of that to events leading to the commencement of the French revolution of that date. At that time kingcraft and priestcraft had complete monopoly of the affairs of France. They had been in power for centuries; had tyrannized over the people in the name of religion and God, and compelled them to contribute to the growth and support of the church. The church and nobility owned nearly two-thirds of all the real estate, much of it exempt from taxation. Church structures were the products of money wrongly wrung from the people. Church and state were virtually one, and civil government was administered in the interest of the clerics.

But the crushed people of France caught the spirit of the actors in the American revolution, which had just closed, and they rose in their might, dethroned and executed their king and queen, hurled priest and nobility from power, reclaimed their title to the church structures, and entered on an era of peace and prosperity. Bonaparte, the "little Corsican corporal," gained control of the army; he restored the priests to power, and gave them command of the churches, for which he was rewarded with a throne.

Several dynasties followed; but finally a Republic came to the front, and the people again bear sway. They suffered from the oppressions of the church, and sought in various ways to escape its unjust exactions; but, backed by Jesuits and the priesthood Catholicism still ruled with a high hand. In 1880 the Jesuits were ordered to leave the Republic, and the command was enforced.

Then the Vatican attempted to humiliate France, but the authorities resisted, and determined to reclaim their own, the church property, and compel the priests to become subject to civil law. But the church party resisted. Deriving their authority from God they determined they would submit to no rule other than that of God's vice-gerent, the Pope. His special representative to Paris, who set out to incite an insurrection, was lately arrested, and conducted to the frontier, where, instructed he would be severely treated if again found in the Republic, he was discharged.

But the end is not yet. The entire country is at fever heat. Freethinkers and anti-churchmen uniformly sustain the government. Even in Rome they attempted to placard the colonades with anti-Vatican inscriptions, and at last advices as we write, were planning a public demonstration.

Right here comes a doleful lament in the form of "an appeal to the American people," issued by Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, wherein he presents the priestly view of these troubles. Whilst he arraigns the leaders of the anti-clerical party in France as "haters of religion," he admits: "There are honest and sincere lovers of a republican government among the anti-clericals." The burden of the Cardinal's grievance seems to be, that the effect of the French law will be to "see tens of thousands of men and women, who happen to be priests and nuns, turned out of their homes for no crime but that of loving God and serving their neighbors." He does not stop to tell us all this trouble comes from an attempt to override the law, the refusal of the church to comply with its requirements, and obtain a license to continue church service, just as 80 Catholic diocesian associations have done, and as have 902 Protestant and 78 Jewish associations.

The severe blow, the one that doubtless hurts worst, is the withdrawal of government pensions to the clergy, of from $350 to $450 annually. This money was raised by taxation of all the people, to support a church for which a majority of those bearing the burden had no sympathy.

Cardinal Gibbons put himself on record by saying:

"SHOULD THE CHURCH [OF FRANCE] ACCEPT THE PRESENT LAW, SHE HAS BEFORE HER, VERY LIKELY, A PROSPECT OF GRADUAL EXTINCTION."

This is certainly a very desirable consummation, if the church cannot be sustained without special privileges, and pensions from non-clericals for her priests.

There is another feature in the Cardinal's lament that should attract attention: He says in substance: "The French law enforced, opens the way for schismatical organizations, which have in fact, in a few cases, been already attempted." That is to say: The division of the church into factions without power to rule, will follow the enforcement of the law. Is not that a result devoutly to be wished? It seems so. When Christianity was united and dominated civilization, it tyrannized over governments and people. By division the oppressed have regained many of their rights, and will the residue when this great usurper, in the name of a crucified God, shall be relegated to its proper domain in the body corporate.

THE COMING ORDINANCE.

And the Lesson to Be Derived Therefrom—The State Association Carefully Watching the Interests of Honest Mediums.

For years we have entreated Spiritualists to drive from our ranks all who were practicing legerdemain, fraud or trickery, in connection with spirit return, assuring them that unless they did so the authorities would eventually pass an ordinance that would work great harm to the honest mediums and cause them no end of trouble and annoyance, and maybe compell them to leave the field altogether. So prevalent has the faking element become in this city, that the authorities have taken the matter in hand, and this is the result according to the Evening Journal.

"Swindling clairvoyants and other impostors of their tribe have come to the end of their rope in Chicago. Because of the Journal's crusade against the clairvoyants, Assistant Corporation Counsel Leon Hornstein has prepared an amendment to the municipal code which contains the following paragraph:

" 'All persons who hold themselves out to the public as palmists, clairvoyants, trance mediums or as skilled in occult sciences or occult mysteries, or as possessing supernatural gifts or skill, pretending to tell fortunes by any of the means aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct and upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not less than $1 nor more than $200 for each offense.'

"This ordinance will be presented to the city council at its next meeting, and is already assured of passage. The Journal investigation having accomplished this signal result in the effort to rid the city of these swindlers and fakirs, closes with the story of how one woman exposed the tricks of her fellows in the craft."

The condition of Spiritualism in this city is almost unbearable. The Nichols Sisters, arrested and fined a hundred dollars each, are, we are told, still manufacturing spirits to order in this city, and others are working on a similar plane, deceiving the gullible. All of this fake element are loyal to the Fake Organ, and support it in every possible way. Those meetings in this city that send their reports to the Organ of the Fakes, are measurably condoning fraud and rascality, and henceforth, if they continue in this course, we would prefer that they KEEP THEIR REPORTS FROM THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

We desire to say that the State Association is carefully watching this proposed ordinance, and will do all it can to protect honest mediums from the disastrous effects arising from it.

Where the Objection?

Cardinal Gibbons says:

"Minister Briand, the Minister of Public Worship of France, lately said:

" 'We have hunted Jesus Christ out of the army, navy, schools, hospitals, insane and orphan asylums and the law courts; and now we must hunt him out of the state altogether.' "

We have no knowledge whether this statement is true or not, but if true is it not a hopeful fact? In a secular government where the people rule, no God, nor junior God has any place in any of the institutions designated. The place for a God is in the hearts of a people. In any other place he will fall into disrepute.

He who is afraid of asking is ashamed of learning.—From the Danish.

The Great Work.

That is the title of a Book. It is an epoch-making volume, so much so that we propose in a series of notices to outline something of its general nature, its scope, and the great good it will be instrumental in doing in bringing to the front the Independent Method of Spiritual Self-Development—a method that has a high ethical standard as a foundation, and any departure therefrom when the gift shall have been fully attained, is accompanied with a loss of the same.

THAT REMARKABLE BOOK.

The readers of this paper who followed the symposium discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime" in these columns some two years ago, or who have read that book, will recall the fact that its author plainly indicated his intention to publish another volume as soon as he could prepare the manuscript for it. It will also be remembered that the proposed new volume was to give to the world an exposition of what he was pleased to designate as "THE INDEPENDENT METHOD OF SPIRITUAL SELF-DEVELOPMENT" as he distinguishes this from "THE SUBJECTIVE METHOD OF HYPNOTISM AND MEDIUMSHIP."

By this distinction he clearly indicates that there are two distinct "methods" by which the great and absorbing problem of another life may be solved and the continuity of individual existence may be demonstrated. He states with the utmost assurance that one of these methods invokes a process which is "Destructive" in its effects upon the individual subject to its operation, and that the other involves a process which is "Constructive" in its effects upon the individual who is subject to its action.

in short, does not hesitate to assert that one of these methods is morally "Right" and the other morally "Wrong." Moreover, with the same calm and unqualified assurance he identifies the process involved in subjective mediumship as "Destructive" and the method by which it is invoked as the "Wrong" one. This it was that caused leading Spiritualists all over the country, and in fact all over the world, to sit up and take notice when "The Great Psychological Crime" was under discussion in this paper. This it was also that caused a good many worthy Spiritualists at that time to go into paroxysms of rage, and some of them to strike out wildly regardless of whom they might hit or hurt.

As a study in psychology and human nature it would afford the readers of this paper subject matter of the most absorbing interest and worthy of the most profound thought, if they could but read some of the many letters received by the editor during that most interesting discussion. We refer now to the personal letters received by the editor taking him to task for opening the columns of his paper to the discussion of such a work.

Notwithstanding the fact that for more than forty years he has believed himself to be a loyal and consistent Spiritualist, during all of which time he has worked unceasingly for what he has believed to be the best interests of our cause, during the excitement of that most valuable symposium discussion he was treated by some of those for whom he has labored, as if he were a traitor, a fraud, a deliberate rascal whose only purpose was to murder the cause of Spiritualism.

So exceedingly bitter and unreasonable were some of the attacks upon him that they would inspire most men with either a deep sense of personal danger or an ungovernable sense of anger. But we simply smiled, filed those letters away for future reference, and went serenely forward with our work entirely confident that the time would come when even the most bitter and unreasonable of our assailants would come to recognize and appreciate the wisdom of our course. And we are glad to have lived to see the fulfillment of that unexpressed prophecy. Along with most of those letters we have since then been able to file either apologies from their writers or acknowledgments of their injustice. And it is a sincere, and we trust a worthy pleasure thus to find our judgment and our wisdom justified.

As is well known, at one time we opened our columns for a discussion of the merits or demerits of The Great Psychological Crime, without personally taking any part therein, leaving Spiritualism to be represented by that grand old veteran worker, LYMAN C. HOWE, and in a profoundly able, noteworthy manner did he defend subjective mediumship, while a prominent STUDENT of the book, in a most brilliant manner, defended the same, resulting in a discussion that was highly interesting, a real intellectual pyrotechnic display of master minds.

In this connection it may not be amiss to make clear the position of this paper as to its management and policy lest there may be those among our readers who shall again be tempted to forget themselves at some time in the future.

Whilst this paper is edited and published with the sole desire and purpose of advancing in every legitimate way the cause of TRUE Spiritualism, and therefore the best interests of every individual Spiritualist, who reads it, nevertheless it is the private and personal property of its editor and publisher, for the conduct of which he alone is responsible. It is a NEWSPAPER in every sense of the word, and its policy is to give to its readers ALL THE LEGITIMATE "NEWS" WITHIN THE HORIZON OF SPIRITUAL OR OCCULT INTEREST.

Its columns are at all times open to its readers as a medium of exchanging thoughts, information and experiences that lie within the field of its chosen labors. In the past it has always welcomed contributions from its readers upon any and all sides of any and all questions and problems which are of interest to Spiritualists, and that will be its policy so long as it remains under its present ownership and management.

But while it thus constitutes a natural forum wherein each reader may find an opportunity to express his knowledge, his opinions and his beliefs concerning the vital problems of life, with perfect freedom within its legitimate field, this must not be construed to mean that the editor relinquishes his own right to make use of its columns for the same purpose. In other words, in the forty years or more of his study and investigation of psychic manifestations and problems, the editor has acquired some definite knowledge, has formed some more or less intelligent opinions, has arrived at some definite conclusions (which may or may not be correct), and has formulated some definite convictions and beliefs which he is perfectly willing to share with his readers.

In the future, as in the past, the editorial columns will constitute the channel through which the editor will endeavor to give expression to his own knowledge, views, convictions, opinions and beliefs in so far as he is convinced they will be of benefit to his readers. He does not insist that his readers SHALL AGREE WITH HIM. Neither must they insist that HE AGREE WITH THEM in the views they express. In truth, there is scarcely an issue of this paper but contains statements, beliefs and opinions from its readers with which the editor does not agree. But he believes in the right of every honest individual to be heard concerning matters which he believes to be of vital interest to humanity, and one of his purposes in publishing this paper is to furnish a channel through which his readers may express themselves within legitimate limitations; quite regardless of whether they agree with the editor or not. In return for this liberty to express themselves through his columns, he reserves to himself the right to express himself with the same liberty he grants to his readers But if at any time he shall fall into the mistake of making statements which are not correct he is perfectly willing to be corrected by any one of his many readers, PROVIDED the correction is made in the SPIRIT OF TOLERANCE, COURTESY AND CONSIDERATION.

The editor of this paper has never assumed for one moment that Spiritualism has reached THE GOAL OF ALL ITS POSSIBILITIES. He has never believed that we are yet in possession of all that there is to be learned concerning the life that is beyond the grave. Neither has it appeared to him consistent to assume that the past or present status of mediumship represents all there is in the way of a "method" by which to establish definite communication between the two worlds. He has endeavored to take SUBJECTIVE MEDIUMSHIP FOR WHAT IT IS WORTH, APPRECIATE THE GOOD IT HAS DONE AND RECOGNIZE ITS DANGERS AND ITS LIMITATIONS. He has looked upon the subject of mediumship in the same manner he looks upon life itself—as an evolution! He believes to-day that whether there is or not, there ought to be a more perfect, less harmful, more reliable and less dangerous method of bridging the gulf between the two worlds than through subjective mediumship—at least in its present state of development, especially among ignorant or uncultured people who do not understand how to handle occult matters, and often the result is the worst cases of obsession, leading to insanity and ruin.

These convictions are not of recent development. We have had them for many years. They are the results of years of personal experience and the most careful personal observations.

For these reasons when "The Great Psychological Crime" was published we read it with the most profound interest. We made a careful study of it. We found that it contained so many things in harmony with our own experiences and observations that we were convinced of the author's sincerity, and believed that many of his statements were well worthy of the most thoughtful consideration of every honest Spiritualist. We felt that an open discussion of the book would develop wherein the author was mistaken or at fault, if so at all. We believed that the general results of such a discussion would be broadly educational and therefore beneficial to the great cause of Truth. We have since then had ABUNDANT EVIDENCE TO JUSTIFY OUR JUDGMENT.

The author of that book, fulfilling the promise he then made the public, has completed the manuscript of another volume on the general subject of "THE INDEPENDENT METHOD OF SPIRITUAL SELF-DEVELOPMENT," or "The Constructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life." It is now in the hands of the publishers and will be ready for delivery by the time this issue of The Progressive Thinker appears. The title of the book is "THE GREAT WORK," having special reference to the great work of Spiritual Unfoldment.

We have read most of the manuscript of this work, or speaking with precision, we have heard it read by the author himself, and we have a fair understanding of its contents and we believe some understanding and appreciation of its purpose and value. It is not our habit, custom nor desire, however, to prejudice our readers upon any question which is before the world for its intelligent consideration; least of all do we desire to prejudice our readers upon any question which is of vital importance to the cause of Spiritualism or to the welfare of humanity.

For this reason we do not desire to express our own convictions concerning the book or its contents until our readers have had time and opportunity to read it for themselves and form their own conclusions as to its SPIRIT, PURPOSE AND VALUE. This much, however, we are going to say now in the interests of progress. It is our purpose to give this book as wide circulation among Spiritualists as possible, under the firm conviction that it contains information which every man and woman ought to now.

We have met the author, and are entirely satisfied that there is not the SLIGHTEST DESIRE ON HIS PART TO INJURE THE CAUSE OF SPIRITUALISM, NOR TO ANTAGONIZE THOSE WHO ARE HEART AND SOUL WITH US. In fact his time is mostly occupied in trying to render communication between the two worlds more complete, more satisfactory, and more in harmony with the constructive principles of Nature; in other words, SPIRIT RETURN in connection with the INDEPENDENT METHOD OF SPIRITUAL SELF-DEVELOPMENT, will give Spiritualism a new adjunct with which to redeem the world. Whatever may be the attitude of our readers as to the merit of the work itself, we feel that they should understand that it is not the work of an enemy, as some of our number believed when "THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME" was under discussion.

An advertisement of the book will be found elsewhere in these columns. But those who desire to send to us for it may do so, and we will see that they are supplied as promptly as possible. The price of THE GREAT WORK is Two Dollars, postage prepaid. It is gotten up in fine style, and will command your attention from start to finish.

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

I AM AMAZED THAT MORE THAN ONE CALL SHOULD BE NECESSARY TO AROUSE 10,000 SPIRITUALISTS TO RESPOND WITH PLEDGES TO PURCHASE A SET OF THOSE WONDERFUL BOOKS BY THE RARELY GIFTED AUTHOR, A. J. DAVIS. THEY MUST NOT BE LOST TO THE GROWING PUBLIC. EVERY SPIRITUALIST IN THE WORLD OUGHT TO HAVE ACCESS TO THEM, AND READ THEM. DIFFER AS YOU MAY FROM ANY OF HIS REASONINGS, THE EXPERIENCES AND DIRECT REVELATIONS HE CHRONICLES ARE OF THE HIGHEST VALUE TO THE WORLD. WHEN YOU GET ALL BUT ONE TO MAKE OUT THE REQUIRED NUMBER, I WILL ENGAGE TO FIND THAT ONE, AND POSSIBLY TWO.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

Fredonia, N. Y.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

Mrs. C. B. Stauffer of Chicago, writes: "I wish to subscribe for the complete works of A. J. Davis, subscription to be paid, I suppose, after publication."

A. A. French writes from Spokane, Washington: "Please put me down as a subscriber to A. J. Davis' complete works. We have a good many Spiritualist books, but none by Brother Davis. I have read some of his works, and think no library is complete without them."

Dr. A. R. Rhea writes: "When published, I will take a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis' works at twenty dollars ($20) per set, as per advertisement in The Progressive Thinker."

A Gift! A Gift!

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ," a most valuable illustrated work, translated from the French by Mr. Ghandi, a learned Hindoo, is to be sent as a Gift to every subscriber of The Progressive Thinker. It has always sold for $1.00. We purchased the copyright, and now we have the exclusive privilege of publishing the work, and wholly for the benefit of our subscribers. Before sending in your order, read carefully the following:

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ" is a remarkable book. It supplies a veritable missing link in the history of a remarkable personage. It fills a hiatus which has puzzled Christian as well as non-Christian scholars, to account for. The New Testament account of the life of Jesus is vitally deficient, as passing over in blank silence a great many years of his earthly existence.

It is the usual understanding of Christian writers and scholars, that the public works and teachings of Jesus, except what little was done before the end of the thirteenth year of his age, were comprised in the last three years of his life. Luke says (Chap. 1:80) "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." Chap. 3:23, says, "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age."

It is indeed strange that the most remarkable character in the world's history should drop out of sight for a long period of years, comprising the larger part of his life from childhood on, and no record of that period be found. It seems the last three years of his life comprised the years of his public ministry. Where was he, and what was he doing during these years from about his thirteenth to his thirtieth year?

This remarkable book seems to answer the query. He traveled into India, the land of Buddhism and Lamaism, and there became learned in the lore of that country, he became proficient in the study of its antiquities and literature, its religions and its philosophies.

In the Buddhist monasteries of Thibet, M. Notovitch relates how he found access to some manuscripts which told of the visit of Issa (Jesus) and his life while there. This narrative fills the gap in the New Testament account, from his thirteenth year until his return and his public "showing unto Israel," as a divine teacher. The Buddhist records complete what the gospel records omit.

The translation of these Buddhist records forms an exceptionally interesting study to the general reader as well as to the more critical scholar and student of ancient religious literature.

And now we are happy to announce to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, that, having secured the plates of this remarkable book, we have concluded in this holiday season to offer this volume to them as a premium. It will be an actual gift to each one who sends in One Dollar for a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and ten cents in stamps to pay the postage on the book.

Any one who is now on our list of subscribers can also secure this book as an actual gift, by sending in ten cents in stamps to pay postage on the same, and One Dollar to extend the time of their present subscription one year.

Tit for Tat.

The civil and clerical authorities in France are grievously at loggerheads. The municipal authorities in a city in the department of Lozere, purchased a hearse for the use of the people on funeral occasions, but it was not decorated with a cross, so the vicar refused to allow it to enter the church grounds. The mayor met the senseless usurpation of authority by forbidding the church hearse to enter the streets.

As the church and its appendages, including the burial grounds, have been declared the property of the state, it seems probable the vicar himself will be required to retire when the end comes, and the sovereign people will determine what sort of decorations shall appear on their hearses. Priestly tyranny in France overleaped its bounds, and the penalty is being enforced by the Republic.

Country Amusements.

Now the figures that 13,000,000 of young people of both sexes do not attend church, and the public press is trying to cipher the cause. Country youth are said to be better attendants on church service, than those of the cities, and the reason given is, "other amusements are found in the cities which attract attention." The church amusements of the country, must consist mainly in listening to the country parson whooping up hell, for we can't see where else the mirth comes in.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

A Scholar's Conclusion.

Our Augusta, Me., chronologist writes he has been carefully investigating the period Aretas was king of Damascus, and he finds abundant authority to fix that period when Paul escaped from the Damascenes, "let down through a window in a basket, and so escaped violence," at a period more distant before our era than Dr. Brown gave in his late articles on Paul, the Essenes, the Buddhists, etc. Indeed he fixes the period so distant as to make it probable Paul, if a real person, may have been one of the missionaries sent out by King Asoka to proselyte for Buddhism. The period 244 years before our era is an established date for that event. And the Essenes were the product of that missionary effort is also an established fact. So, too, the proof is conclusive that Paul's Epistles, grossly doctored, and adapted to Christian needs, were written to the Essenian churches

It follows, as our friend suggests, that if there was a Paul who was beheaded 66 years after the beginning of our era, he could not have been the one who wrote the Epistles. So say we.

But there is no dependence to be placed on Usher's chronology, neither is there on anything coming to us as ecclesiastical history through Catholic hands. Monks, lacking scholarship, picked up anything their hands fell on, adapted it to supply their needs, then imposed those virtually forged documents on the world as inspired history. And the facts are just coming to light.

To make history of any value we must know the author, and his character for truth. Was the reputation of ancient monks better than modern ones? And what scholar, familiar with the productions of either class, will give credit to any statement made by them which conflicts with their creed or their interests?

The Star That Cometh Out of the West.

Discourse Delivered Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Oct. 7, 1906.

It was said that the "Magians" (wise men), watching, saw the Star in the East that rested over where the infant Jesus lay. But the Magians were Persians, or if they were Chinese, or if they were the "Wise Men of the East," the star to them ascended in the East, the knowledge came out of the East, because at that time the East was the New East. Before that time the East was the Old East. The western continent "Atlantis" had become submerged; or a portion of it. The ancient civilizations that had passed to South America and Central America had yielded up their former civilization, and Egypt had passed into "ancient history."

But the Magians knew the time of the cycles, of the great revolution of the sun around the central sun, when the "New Light" should appear. There were always those who told the dawning of the New Light, whether it came to Zoroaster in Persia, whether it came to Confucius in China, whether it came to those ancient nations, "semi-barbaric," or whether it came through the old Grecian splendor or Roman power down to modern civilization. You have encircled the globe within the space of your history.

The East is now the West; you have clasped hands across the Pacific with the Orient. Japan is the new nation; it is rising as new stars rise. In the firmament shine the great constellation of western "Oriental" nations, it will be China—the China that will follow after Japan—Japan, and India, and the new Orient (then the new Occident) will appear.

From your western shore will come the greatest civilization; from your western shore will come the New Dawn, the new watchword of progress and liberty. Empires may take their course westward; but when the East has been gained, and the new object is in view, there comes the receding of the conquest of the East. The vast granaries of the West have conquered the Atlantic coast and Europe with the broadmindedness incident upon the cultivation of unlimited fields of grain.

Some prominent man of affairs from England visiting Chicago lately, said, "Before many years Chicago will be the metropolis of this country." It must be so, not because it is the center, commercially, of the present circle of commerce in this country. It is also the center of many new kinds of ideas. You have had two or three "Messiahs," in fact almost an epidemic of messiahs, you have had any number of prophets like Dowie. It is not very many years ago since Mrs. Eddy was here. Then we have "cults" and occult societies without number. This building is full of them. One of them is "New Thought," which is a new cult, too. It has been said of some persons and of some organizations that they have the happy faculty of appropriating the best in other cults and calling it new because it is theirs. Of course it is new to the one possessing it for the first time. It makes no difference if you or we have known these things for fifty years, if they are new to them. It is like the little girl who, pressing her face close to the window pane in the early evening while looking for her papa, exclaimed, "Oh, mamma, God has just made a star!"

But the impression we give you to-day is, to look to the West for the "signs of the times." You will find the best order of government in New Zealand, and Australia, and they are wherever you choose to call them, either in the "Orient" or "Occident." Certain it is from the western or the eastern coast of this country you circumnavigate the earth to reach there. It is the center of enlightenment. When you shall have the "Initiative, Referendum" and "recall" you will have advanced as far as New Zealand and Australia.

A representative government, a "government for the people, of the people and by the people" is what you need. It is the foundation of your Constitution, and your Declaration of Independence, and you must have it.

There is coming into your political horizon another man that will do for your present political conditions what Abraham Lincoln did for slavery: WIPE OUT THE DIFFICULTIES THAT STAND IN THE WAY OF THE POPULAR EXPRESSION OF THE POPULAR WILL.

Of course there were many things that your forefathers, in the framing of the new constitution, did not foresee. That which was supposed to be a "representative" government has not succeeded as such under the great influences or pressure that have been brought to bear against it. It was not a representative government, because it could not be with the institution of slavery. We are not talking about the slaves but the slave-holders. The truth is, that people have advanced mentally and spiritually since that time. Then there was but a handful of patriots, there are millions of them now waiting for the time to come for the Man to appear, for the Woman, for the Teachers to tell them the way to go. People are more ready now than they were then for an actual REPUBLICAN government. Then they had just escaped from the idea of kingcraft, they were but one step removed from it; they were ready to give George Washington a throne or crown, but he would not have it. There were only about a half dozen men that kept them free: Washington, the two Adamses, Jefferson and Thomas Paine—Thomas Paine who has been found neither to be a "Godless" man, nor an "infidel," nor a "materialist," and who to-day for the first time has had suitable recognition. When it comes to be known that Thomas Jefferson for the most part wrote the Declaration of Independence, and formed the Constitution, and the other famous names we have mentioned assisted, the world will rise to the perception of knowing that half a dozen men were the founders of this government. And two men the preservers of it: One man, when the great stress and strain of the war of the Rebellion was upon the country because of the existence of chattel slavery, one man with the pen that controlled alike the sword and legislature of that period, and the man of war, the mildest man that has ever been in American politics.

Since the close of that war of the Rebellion two things have occurred. One is that the nation has gone persistently forward in the worship of Mammon, until it is almost the culminating period of that worship of the power of gold, and the power of gold concentrated by gold; the other is, it has gone steadily forward in enlightenment concerning the principles of the Declaration of Independence. These two extremes confront you.

In the midst of this a great impetus of great spiritual progress has seized upon the race. That which was a disgrace and was persecuted fifty years ago is now honored and exalted. Men of science have established a scientific body in England for the express purpose of investigating the realm and manifestation of spiritual forces of humanity. It is called by the vague name of The "Society for Scientific Investigation." But, nevertheless, it means the investigation of the spiritual facts that are in the world, which the "Psychic Research" Society fully investigated thirty-five years ago. The Psychic Research Society being the outgrowth of the Dialectical Society of England, in which Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, Prof. William Crookes and others made a minority report ascribing the source of particular manifestations to the realm of spirits. Then the American Psychic Research Society took an added step and investigated Spiritualism by that name. Then there sprang into existence, as if by magic, a dozen cults, of which "Mental Science," "Mental Philosophy," "Psychic Research" and "Christian Science" are the various branches thronging upon the way and through the gate opened by Spiritualism. To-day people are less reluctant to call it "Spiritualism" than before they tried these other names and found they did not like them. Still there are a great many people who would wish, however anxious, to avoid investigating anything called "Spiritualism."

The truth is, a large percentage of spiritual enlightenment grappling with the "spiritual problem" has come into the world through Spiritualism and it is the knowledge that the spirit must be right before the mind and body can be right; and the consciousness that the spirit, pervading the body, is going to do all that ever can be done for the individual, society and the nation. Now there are plenty of good laws; there has been a great deal of excellent legislation—and more that is worse, but legislation will not effect the change. The change is to be wrought by the ENLIGHTENMENT of the people. We like that word better than education: Enlightenment, the ILLUMINATION OF THE PEOPLE.

There are many sources of illumination in the world to-day that are very active. There is the great rapidity with which you can convey a message from one person to another in human life: the telephone, the telegraph, the wireless telegraph, the printing press,—the ignorant parentage of all this—constitute the sources of enlightenment. The daily press, vitiated for three decades or more, is rallying to the call of the new impetus. You will find in the more popular and liberal magazines of this country a deliberate advocacy of the advance social, political and spiritual thought of to-day. You find it there because men and women alike who have leisure and ability to investigate the subjects that cannot be investigated by those who conduct the daily press bear forward the initiative knowledge of things that are hidden from daily inspection. It was a woman who laid bare the methods of the Standard Oil Company, Miss Ida Tarbell. And yet they say "women are not equal to men." There are some who have been interested in ferreting out the means and methods of the steel and other corporations. All this indicates that the people want to hear about them. The magazines would not publish that which the people did not wish to know about.

It is knowledge that constitutes power and enlightenment. So it is in the spiritual realm, people WANT TO KNOW; and they want to know about the application of spiritual truths to daily life. They do not care so much about the application of the Sermon on the Mount, or the Golden Rule, to the general daily revenues. So in the Sunday-school class, when the text comes up of "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than it is for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," it is a very difficult problem for young Mr. Rockefeller to explain to the pupils of his Bible class. We do not wonder that he is afraid.

The truth is, people want principles; they are sorry for the man, they do not blame the man, it is the foundation of the commercial system that must be altered. Nobody thought of killing the slave holder because he was born and reared to think that slavery was a divine commandment. Nobody thinks of killing the multi-millionaires or billionaires—they are killing themselves as fast as they can—they are going to jail in a few communities. But that which the people want to know is, how this spiritual illumination will affect the counting-rooms, the banking-houses, the boards of trade, and the corruptions of daily life? What kind of energy it will put into the man's nature who earns his daily bread by the labor of his hands, or the daily labor of his brain? That is the question. This is the question that is uppermost.

Now these things that cause changes in the existing conditions do not always come by violent reaction. Violent reaction only comes in a case like Russia, where there is violent oppression, where there is a constant surveillance, where the police detectives and sergeants of royalty are at your very door, where you cannot worship, as you are in this room, without the menials of the government being hidden behind the walls, where everyone of you would be sent to Siberia to-morrow. The truth is, that when enlightenment comes to a people like those of the United States of America the revolution that is wrought in ten years becomes so startling that people wonder that it has not required bloodshed.

Pardon us for referring to it, but we like to; it is an object lesson. It is only a few years ago that the, so-called, Anarchists were hanged in this city, in the state of Illinois for expressing precisely what we are talking about to-day, and which every citizen in the city of Chicago has listened to every day since that time. You could not have listened to it before the great event precipitated the attention of the people upon the subjects we are talking about. It was not bomb-throwing, it was the THROWING OF IDEAS that was the crime. The "Anarchists" had nothing to do with bombs, but the ideas were the results of the liberal perception of what was needed by the people. Men do not take their wives and children with them when they are going to throw bombs, and the people began to realize it afterward. Then the Music Hall, now abolished, the largest auditorium in the city, was often filled on Sunday afternoon by the finest intellects of the city and world, who looked forward for the enlightenment of the people upon these subjects, were invited to tell the things that those men were hanged for. It shows the progress of the public mind when we tell you that the newspapers, the Chicago Tribune, is to-day publishing articles more incendiary against "capital" and "trusts" than the Anarchists ever thought of publishing. But the world has grown since that time.

To-day the enlightenment is sought in this way: What shall be the next step? In what way and by whom shall this knowledge come that will lead the people in the right way? You do not suppose that all this spiritual enlightenment has been going on for nearly sixty years in the world and yet has made no change in people's social and political progress? You do not suppose that the interjection of all this knowledge, that each human life fashions its spiritual state here and hereafter, has had nothing to do with the acts of daily life among people? The reformation has been going on all these years, and the GREAT AVERAGE PUBLIC SENTIMENT in the intellectual, political and religious worlds is more than one hundred years in advance of what it was fifty years ago. Now, you are not surprised when Jenkin Lloyd Jones and several orthodox ministers assemble together on Sunday for the purpose of talking about "civic" methods and "civic" reforms. You are not surprised when there are liberal convocations of the clergy of "liberal" and "orthodox" denominations to determine what steps are best to recommend for the school board. You are not surprised now that any problem is taken up in the pulpits. Fifty years ago a minister would have been ostracised for speaking on Sunday upon municipal or state governments as they exist.

It has often been said: "We do not want you to talk politics." Why not? The state is in your hands, the city is in your hands; whether they are moral or immoral depends upon you. If there is any value in your spiritual knowledge, in your religion, it means the daily value. Not simply that you come here or go to any other place of worship, one day in the week, but it is what you do every day in your lives. Until this spirit pervades your municipal government it will not be safe for your women to walk the streets; it will not be safe for your children to go three steps from the door.

The truth is, that the SPIRIT of your SPIRITUALISM, the spirit of your religion must permeate your politics, and your business, or the city and the state and the nation are lost—lost to the Ideal of that Freedom which was intended by those glorious men whom we have named, and by that honored man who stood in the great chasm between you and the solution of the question of slavery, and those who have endeavored, according to the best of their wisdom to bear it forward to a final result.

Now it is another culminating time, it is another time; when a prophet is coming out of the West to lead the people; it is another time when other prophets come out of the West to teach you spiritually and politically; it is another time when the great question of what is to be done with these financial problems is also to be settled by one coming out of the West. When Mr. Lincoln said in his especial message to Senator Howard, Chairman of the Finance Committee, "I have had more trouble with Wall street than with the entire rebel army," it was not then understood, you know now what it meant. When he warned the people against the "steadily encroaching power of capital against their individual and industrial liberty," you know now what he meant. That was in his especial message to congress at the close of the war.

Now that the fulfillment is here, now that you are in the midst of this greater enlightenment there can be no hesitancy as to the steps that you will take when you are invited to take them by the leadership of one—not that you shall blindly worship, not that you shall blindly follow—but the one who shall best present to you that which you think you ought to do. You do not like the preacher who tells you something you do not believe, but you like the one who can tell what you believe, better than you can tell it. Now we flatter ourselves that we tell you better than you know how to arrange them, the thoughts that are deepest and uppermost in your minds and spirits.

There is coming within the next few decades of years a prominent Star that will guide your nation through this great political cataclysm. That Star is coming from the West. It is to bring the great Next Step. The next step is not so revolutionary as our socialistic friends desire, because you cannot bring about a great Fraternity of people until there is a great Fraternity of ideas.

The next step relates to average growth of the public mind in this country, which means CO-OPERATION WHEREVER THAT IS POSSIBLE. The co-operation of all the people is just as possible as the co-operation of a few in the form of a corporation. Corporations have been the object lesson for Co-operation. The next step is ARBITRATION, the one final appeal of all nations instead of war. It will be international, and that nation will be a PIRATE nation that does not obey.

The next imminent step is that which must necessarily follow your private ownership of public utilities; it is the logical question you will be called upon to face: The PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF PUBLIC UTILITIES is the next step. It will come as certainly as the public ownership of public roads and parks, and the public ownership of fresh air and sunshine, and it will be a great deal better than the public ownership of fresh air in Chicago with all these high buildings. This means that the things that most interest and are most needed by the people must, therefore, belong to the people, and are to be owned by the people. Now this does not mean "municipal ownership"; that is very different from public ownership. You possibly would have no more rights in municipal ownership than you have in private ownership. The reason of this—let us talk a little more about politics—is that there are political "rings," political "bosses," political "rulers." You are going to do away with these in PUBLIC OWNERSHIP, which means no perquisites of office. You as a people own the postoffice. You will own the telegraph; you will own the railroads, as you do the public highways, and you will insist on keeping them in order for the public.

Now the man that is coming, and the women that are going to help (they are going to help even before they have the privilege of the ballot) are going to show to man and woman their way to the ownership of the things that belong to the people.

I tell you the man is born, is almost here—we are not going to tell you his name to-day (you thought you were going to hear it, but you will not), perhaps you will not know him when he appears. Perhaps he will be so simple that he will make no more ripple of thought than Mr. Lincoln did when he stepped into that meeting that convinced him that as long as he lived he would be obliged to uplift his voice against chattel slavery. From an obscure town in Illinois, born just over the border, no one knew who the man was and nobody cared what he thought; but the man and time were there. This New Star is born that is coming to teach you to take the next step.

The millennium is not coming immediately, as we have told you a great many times, but some of the steps are coming. What with the slaughter of the Jews and other persecutions for opinion's sake, for which the great voice of this nation will be to intercede for all the nations of the earth for political and religious liberty of conscience. At the same time checking any undue possession of political power by any religious denomination.

There is a great hue and cry about the Roman Catholic societies in France that have been expelled. One noble Roman Catholic father, enlightened and as liberal as he can be, said that the principle underlying the expulsion of those Roman Catholic societies from France was the same as that of the massacre of the Jews in Russia. No, it is not the same; the former is not persecution for religion's sake; you have known of Roman Catholic growth and supremacy in France for many centuries and that country has been dominated by secret work against the liberties of the people in so-called religious societies. It has been a "principle" there, it is impossible here. It is because of that, that the statesmen of the comparatively new republic of France feel constrained to work against the secret influence of the agents of the Vatican in their midst. You would too, if you knew it, and if those things existed here as there. If they exist here to a limited extent it is not as there, because you have not had centuries of the Propaganda.

Now let it be understood once for all, that the French government has not been cruel; it is not against the works of charity; it is not against visiting the poor; it is not against all these things that make for humanity, but against that which menaces the interest and preservation of the Republic. France has fought hard and long for liberty; and between the Bourbons and the Bonapartes, their descendents and friends, who have strong partisan power, many of them in the church and some out of the church, France must be vigilant for her liberty. It means that any society that can at any time call upon its followers to rise against the government under which it exists is a danger to that government. If you have any form of worship that would lead you to take up arms against the United States, you are not a good citizen of the United States.

What you want now is to make your government fulfill its ideal; the liberty of conscience, the right to "worship God according to the dictates of conscience." You are endangering your fellowman and jeopardizing the liberty under which he exists if you do not secure these things to all. If the time ever comes that it is possible for this subject to come before the people we shall have more to say about it later. But at the present time there is a great unity of sentiment forming toward the Next Step.

Furthermore, there are three stars appearing, those who will be newly prominent before the people; those who represent this step politically; those who will bear forward the step that Froebel took in Education, the great enlightenment of the system of the kindergarten. It does not mean for little children only, but that this system shall be introduced into every educational institution in the land, that it shall be the principle of real growth from childhood to maturity, and the third is one who will bring great enlightenment on all subjects pertaining to the Spiritual nature of man, conserving the knowledge that has been attained until the spirit of each human being endowed with ordinary intelligence shall be taught and shall have learned that death is as much an incident as birth, that it is the taking of the next step of life, and that the great spiritual purpose of this world, and the world impinging upon yours, is to be borne forward unto added enlightenment of the human race concerning spiritual things.

This means that, not only in religious denominations great strides are pending—as there have been great steps taken in the last few years,—but that Religion itself will take on a new undenominational meaning, that the UNITY OF SPIRIT will be the grandest presentation of the purpose of the age, because when it has been outwrought in all languages and amongst all nations they are the same. It will also be found as it has been found in mathematics, that the basis of all solutions of mathematical problems are the same; the principles are very few and very simple. So will it be found, under this great spiritual enlightenment that it is to spread over the world, that the proposition of the soul's immortality and the spiritual communion of those who have passed beyond the change called death with those who still live in human life, and the permeating spirit of the Infinite form the basis of all Religion; and, that there could have been no Religion but for this power that is in the human spirit seeking the Infinite. There could have been no spirit, but for this intelligence that seeks expression in human life for the advancement of the human being.

There can be no preparation adequate for taking the Next Step in life unless you take it here and now. When this is known and understood, as it will be year after year, more and more perfectly, the great spiritual steps will have been taken by many more millions of people.

Now as these stars of spiritual, mental and political progress—three people—are approaching you, or approaching your recognition, there comes active duty, and the day and hour when you will be called upon to decide. If you have adequate illumination, if your mind is sufficiently free to receive the impression, if you understand the step you are taking, you will take the step intelligently and press forward. You do not ride in the ancient omnibus unless you are obliged to, the stage coach is out of order, even the best pair of horses are going out of use. You go forward at great speed in physical ways; you wish to obtain all within the shortest possible compass of time. So do not cling to any name of party or creed, or whatever, that impedes your progress.

ANOTHER ATHEIST'S VIEW.

That New Religion That A. H. Nicholas Writes About.

It cannot be asserted too often nor too forcibly, that religion when properly defined, as the world has always received and accepted it, is nothing more nor less than a system of faith and worship. It is not, never was, and never will be a code of morals that embodies man's duties to man alone; therefore, his efforts to show that atheists are religious and have a religion, is weak, futile and a failure.

"You must show me," as the man from Missouri says, a single religious system the world now has or ever did have, that does not, and did not have for its fundamental basis some kind of a god to rest on; with the worship of that god for its object, that personal benefit might accrue or expected punishment be avoided.

Religious doctrines are inseparably connected with fear and ignorance; fear of a God that has no existence, and a belief in absurdities that ignorant credulity alone can accept. The word Atheist is applied to a man who does not believe in any kind of a god; and as gods and religion are inseparable, no play upon words can make an Atheist religious or connect him with religion. As an Atheist I object, and positively refuse to have the religious label placed on me. I have no religion; feel the need of none, and see no necessity for any; and it will require something more than the prefix "new" to interest me in any idea of religion that may spring up in some individual mind.

Outside of the life principle in nature which is manifest in everything we see, we look in vain for a god; and this everlasting and indestructible force, which acts at all times under immutable laws or modes that are changeless, cannot be swayed, influenced or affected by prayer, so I never pray; and as there is not a recognized religion on the face of the earth which does not regard prayer as an inseparable adjunct, I present this additional fact to show that no Atheist can possibly be religious.

When it comes down to codes of morals that concern man's conduct to his fellows, rules of action in connection with life's duties, we have something to separate and distinct from religion that it would be just as sensible to say that air and water are the same thing. No Atheist makes warfare on good morals, or anything that has an elevating influence on human conduct; and when a man is seen who is just and equitable in his dealings with others, who has love, charity, and good will in his heart for all mankind, he recognizes a moral man and not a religious one. When he sees a man going to church on Sunday, believing in prayer and a lot of fol-de-rol nonsense about God and his duties to him, then he knows he has found a religious man, a man who believes in religion and thinks it a good thing.

There is just as much difference in religion and morals as there is in vice and virtue, whiskey and water, or black and white colors; and a man can be very religious in conforming to the customs and ceremonials of the church, and yet be a first-class blackleg and scoundrel.

Moral men need no religion, for the principles of right and wrong as defined by reason, are sufficient to insure good, clean lives, honesty, if by nature they can live such or be honest.

As a rule the more genuine religion a man has the greater is his lack of morals. We all know how religious the Russians are, and John L. Stoddard, the noted traveler, refers to them in these words: "Some even prostrate themselves before the painting of St. Nicholas and kiss the pavement. Be on your guard, however, in such places, for pickpockets combine business and religion, and while they cross themselves with one hand, they rob you with the other."

I think this statement acts as auxiliary to mine, and should induce a little further reflection on the standpoint I occupy, that religion and morals are not necessarily connected, and any man with good horse sense, as well as an Atheist, can get along quite nicely without religion.

Instead of trying to build up a new religion, let us turn in and bury the old one, for it has a bad odor and is pretty well decayed.

Morals are all-sufficient to meet human necessities, and if we will only keep some good ones and use them in our daily lives, this world will be far better than religion has made it.

CHIMES OF THE NEW YEAR.

Last night the ancient clock of time,
I heard repeat this doleful rhyme,
Stark and cold,
Wrinkled and old,
With white locks and visage sere,
Another year
Lies on his bier,
And like the sound of a solemn rout,
The hours went by with song and shout,
And they seemed to say,
As they passed away,
Toll him out,
Toll him out!
In the halls of the past his grave we've made,
And we summon his ghost to the realms of shade,
Toll him out,
Toll him out!

These were the echoes that rose and fell,
As midnight awakened its mournful knell,
But ere the close of its last refrain,
The ancient time-piece spoke again,
And with the voice of a joyous lay,
In tuneful measure it seemed to say,—
Young and bold,
With wealth untold,
And eyes undimmed by a single tear,
The bright New Year,
In its pride is here.
And the elfin hours in a merry rout,
Went by with the sound of a song and shout,
And they seemed to say,
As they passed away,
Welcome him in,
Welcome him in!
His lips have smiles, and his heart has mirth,
With these he will garland the beautiful earth,
Welcome him in,
Welcome him in!
These were the echoes that rose and fell,
With the closing chime of the midnight bell.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of of hundreds people who publicly claim that they have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over 75 thousand of the "Actinas" have been sold; therefore it is not an experiment, but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily;

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 135th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Gentlemen:—I am more than pleased with the "Actina." When I received it I had been wearing glasses for more than 3 years for Astigmatism. I immediately discontinued their use and have not had them on since. It is wonderful. I consider it worth its weight in gold, I have recommend it to many of my friends.

Nery truly,
(Miss) E. F. Tucker.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

"Actina" can be used by old and young with perfect safety. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, Throat or Head. One will last for years, and is always ready for use. "Actina" will be sent on trial postpaid.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley responded to an earnest invitation from the Psychical Research Society at Rockford, Illinois, and addressed them on the evening of the 16th, following the address with messages. She is a favorite wherever heard.

Dr. N. F. Ravlin passed through the city last week on his way to Fruitvale, Cal. The Doctor is one of the ablest lecturers in the ranks of Spiritualism, and should be kept constantly employed.

George W. Kates and wife are having good meetings in Conneaut, Ohio, where they are located for the months of December, January and February, at 288 Harbor street. They are capable of doing a most excellent work for Spiritualism.

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society on the 9th listened to a fine lecture by Dr. C. S. Tisdale, on the Ancient Order of the Magi. He is well posted on this subject, and gave us some interesting things that but few know and understand, showing that the religions that are in existence to-day have had their origin from the Order of the Magi, even before the Christian era, and is in perfect accord with Spiritualism. He will be with us again on January 6, when he will continue the discourse. Mr. Fraser, Mrs. Wolnich, and Mr. Durkies all gave encouraging messages. A rare treat was in store for us when Robert Gilray consented to speak for us, as he did on the 16th. He certainly has had a 'change of heart' since being in the 'wild and woolly west,' and his talk must have been from the 'boys up-stairs,' as it was spirituality from beginning to the end. He is to be with us again on the 30th of December. Our circles under Mr. Fraser are being well attended, and all are satisfied. He is with us each Sunday evening. On the 26th of December we hold our annual election. Our dance which will be on the 20th, will be unusually entertaining. Next one will be on Thursday, January 10. All welcome. Don't fail to hear Mr. Gilray on the 30th, and Mr. Tisdale on the 6th."

F. L. Seiferth writes from Lawrence, Mass.: "Mrs. Abbott, president of the Pemberton Hall meeting, in her opening service, introduced The Progressive Thinker, and said that she hoped every Spiritualist would subscribe for it, as IT WAS THE BEST."

This office sent a contribution to the Volunteers of America (the Salvation Army under a different name), and here is the reply, illustrating what this religious body is doing: "Kindly accept our gratitude for your contribution towards the expenses of our annual free Christmas dinner to the poor of Chicago, which is conducted regularly by us in the following manner: By the distribution of baskets to poor families who are in need of food and whose case has been investigated and found deserving of help. These lists of names we get from the officers in charge of our institutions and also from letters received through the mails, and by the large public dinner given in the Coliseum on Sunday, December 30. When you are enjoying your own Christmas at home with your loved ones, 'midst the pleasure and happiness of that occasion, you can be conscious of having contributed something to take Christmas cheer to those who otherwise would have no Christmas. It would be impossible for me to put in words the thankfulness we feel for the assistance which you have given us in this great work. We assure you that your money is placed in good hands; that the deserving poor shall be the direct recipients of the benefit of your contribution and that the work will be conducted economically and conscientiously."

Dr. L. Stansbury writes from Wellston, Okla., that Spiritualism is getting a good foothold in that section of the country. He says Rev. Alice Baker gave some excellent tests and lectures, and thinks Spiritualists will organize in the rural districts.

A. Merkel writes: "The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, 461 W. North avenue, corner Milwaukee, had a rare treat last Sunday evening at their hall. Dr. R. Greer, a prominent Spiritualist, a seer and healer, delivered a lecture, his subject being 'The Angel's Message.' The audience was well pleased with the lecture. Spirit messages followed by pastor and others, that gave each an assurance of life after death. The society will have a Christmas tree, Sunday, Dec. 30. Many gifts will be given to the little children. Let them come to swell the song of peace and good will to men on earth."

The Ladies' Aid of the New Thought Society gave a delightful New England supper last evening. There were about 250 present to enjoy the repast, which consisted of brown bread, beans as you liked them, doughnuts, mince pies baked as 'mother used to bake them,' coffee and a great many other good things. The entertainment consisted of music, cards and a few recitations. At the close of the entertainment a large sofa pillow was raffled, the lucky winner being George D. Barnen. There were visitors from Saugatuck, Rockford, Vicksburg and Allegan.—Grand Rapids Herald.

John B. Chrisney writes from Chrisney, Ind.: "The Spiritualist Quartette, (the Wattles family of Winchester, Ind.), have just held five splendid meetings here. The house has been crowded every evening and the interest was deep and wide-spread. Such evangelistic work as Prof. Wattles is doing is exactly what the cause needs everywhere. He shows that Spiritualism is not merely a series of phenomena, or a philosophical system of belief, but is a life to be lived; and his appeal to people to lead the spiritual life has moved this community profoundly. We shall have the quartette back for a longer series of meetings as soon as their other engagements will permit. These meetings were a grand success, considering that there was a revival meeting going on at the M. E. church at the same time. The people want the truth as it is understood by the great scientific thinkers of the 20th century."

Loa Adella Reck writes; "Mrs. Minnie Sharlow of Detroit, Mich., closed her engagement for the month of November with the Independent Association of Spiritualists of Toledo, Ohio. Although coming among us a comparative stranger, this being her first visit to our city, her meetings were very well attended, the lectures enjoyed, and the tests satisfactory. Mrs. Sharlow is one who always has the Golden Rule before her, and proves it by her work. Her guides as well as herself have won the hearts of many, and we are looking forward with pleasure to the time when she will be again on our platform. Annual election of officers: Mr. Henry E. Dowd, elected president for the seventh consecutive term; Mr. H. Hoffman, treasurer; Mrs. Loa Adella Reck, secretary."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. Helen P. Russegue was the speaker for the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society of Springfield, Mass., Nov. 4; on Nov. 11, Mrs. Sadie L. Hand, and Nov. 18 and 25, Mrs. E. D. Butler. All gave satisfaction, and the meetings were well attended. Nov. 13, the annual election of officers was held, resulting as follows: Mrs. Sara G. Hawkins, president; Mr. Wellman C. Whitney, first vice-president; Mrs. Eliza Woods, second vice-president; Mrs. Clara G. Kellogg, clerk; Mr. Charles Thayer, treasurer; Mrs. Lillian E. Whitney, corresponding secretary."

M. Hollinshead writes from South Bend, Ind.: "Your Premium Book received with many thanks. I have read Mrs. M. T. Longley's production, and I find much in it the same as I have received through my own mediumship. You are certainly doing a GREAT WORK for the benefit of mankind. May you live many years yet to continue the same is my prayer."

C. H. Wilson writes from Smithboro, Ill.: "Mrs. India Hill of Decatur, Ill., just closed a one week's engagement with the Spiritualists and truth-seekers of Smithboro, Ill., and we are proud to report that she was able to awake a profound interest in our beautiful philosophy. We cannot recommend Sister Hill too highly as an efficient lecturer and message bearer for our loved ones who have passed on to higher spheres. It has opened up a good field in this beautiful thought, and we feel the seeds have been sown in splendid soil for the propagating of a useful society in southern Illinois. We wish to again thank Sister Hill through our grand paper for her kind endeavors while with us, and hope she will be able to spare us some more of her splendid service in the future. The writer had the pleasure of entertaining her during her sojourn with us, and I wish to say to those desiring talen to serve them, they will do well by arranging for her services, as she is well qualified as well as a perfect lady in every respect."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. Nina D. Challen of Toledo, Ohio, a prominent medium, both of the philosophy and phenomena, will next week visit Canton, Massillon and Akron, Ohio, for a week or ten days' stay. She has done work there before and given good satisfaction. All who know her will be glad to meet her again in a social and business way."

J. L. Foster writes from Elwood, Ind.: "Sister Sarah A. Crossfield of Muncie, Ind., will lecture and give messages for the Progressive Spiritualists in their hall over the Record office, opposite the Interurban depot, Dec. 30, promptly at 2 and 7:30 p. m. All reading this announcement consider yourselves earnestly invited. We expect Spiritualists from Chesterfield, Anderson, Kokomo, Tipton and Alexander. Arrangements have been made to have a lunch in the hall, and hope to spend the day in a grand, good soul feast. Sister Crossfield is a gifted and talented speaker, and all hearing her will enjoy a grand treat."

The Massachusetts State Association will hold its annual meeting in Berkeley Hall Annex, Tuesday, Jan. 1, 1907, at 10:30 a. m. Members are requested to be at the meeting promptly. Business session only. Carrie L. Hatch, secretary, George A. Fuller, president.

C. L. H. writes: "Appleton Hall, 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass. The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual, with the president, Mrs. M. E. A. Allbe in the chair. One of the features of the meeting was the presentation of a gift to our faithful worker, Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse, the day being the anniversary of her birth. The society felt that she had faithfully earned this recognition. After a social hour, the evening meeting was held and the following talent took part: M. A. Hill, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, Mr. Backstrom, Mrs. Shirley, Mrs. Dick. Several of the speakers paid a loving tribute to Mrs. Waterhouse, and told of her readiness to always assist at any and all times. Mrs. Waterhouse responded in a very happy vein and thanked all for their kind words; she only hoped she merited them. Mrs. Hadie Hall sang several selections, Mrs. M. F. Lovering presiding at the piano. Ladies' Aid meets every Friday evening."

Correspondent writes: "At the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, on Sunday, December 16, 1906, the Lyceum did finely. Our little teacher is progressing rapidly and if continued, will bring success yet. The meeting in the afternoon was fairly well attended, with usual good work. The evening brought out a large crowd to listen to our worthy sister Mrs. Eva Fravell, from Austin. She gave us food for thought, and we hope to have her with us soon again. The messages were of the best. Mrs. N. E. Hill, Mrs. Charles Thompson and Mrs. Traver, being the message bearers. Our speaker for December 30, will be the Honorable Charles Hughes. I wish to call the public attention to our Watch Meeting, at our Hall, 43 South Paulina street, O'Donnel College Hall. A fine program has been arranged and we expect a grand, good time. Dr. Geo. B. Warne will be with us on that night, and we wish all to come and help make it a Happy New Year."

An Appeal for Names of Spiritualists in the State of Washington.

J. R. Burton, engaged in the defense of mediums in Washington, would like the names and address of all the Spiritualists in the state, with whom to communicate. Address him at No. 1613 Fourth avenue, Seattle, Wash.

Herbert Childs writes from Wichita, Kansas: "Let me congratulate you upon your determined fight against frauds. The Spiritualistic sky is brightening. Even with us a change is taking place. Previous falls, so-called, mediums drop down on us thick as black-birds, but they have evidently found other pastures green. Thanks to The Progressive Thinker, we are not as verdant as we once were."

Married, in the presence of a few friends at the home of Dr. W. O. Knowles, 247 Coade avenue, on the evening of December 10, 1906, Edward Furrout, to Mrs. Marie Antonette Holemer, both of Grand Rapids, Mich. Their address is 43 Dudley place, after January 1st, 1907. Dr. Knowles officiated.

Mrs. J. W. Hull writes: "The Spiritualists of North Yakama had brother G. C. Love of Portland, lecture for them the first two Sundays of December. He explains the bible from the standpoint of Spiritualism. His lectures were well received. Yakima has a good many Spiritualists, some wealthy ones, too, and it surprises me that the missionaries have so far overlooked this promising field. The harvest is ready and waiting for some good worker to thrust in his sickle and gather the grain. Who will it be?"

Samuel Huntington, Malden, Mass., writes: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant st., Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president. Sunday services, December 16. The president presided at both services with Miss Mabel Carter, at the piano. The afternoon circle opened with a beautiful praise service. Mr. Gleenlaw, our townsman (whose son has lately perfected a 'flexible joint,' aided by his spirit guides, now used on several railroads), made interesting remarks The Rev. Mr. Dean also made a short address. Mrs. Carter and guides gave several fine messages. Our ex-president, Mrs. Alice M. Whall, occupied the platform at the evening session, prefacing her work by reading a beautiful poem, "What Constitutes Happiness, and then devoting over an hour to giving many beautiful messages. Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding occupied our platform Sunday evening, December 23. Our society intends holding a "Spiritual Revival" during the month of January, 1907, with the Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Unity Church, Boston, on the platform Thursday evening."

Mrs. Laura J. Martin writes: "Mrs. Isabella Powderly's Wednesday afternoon class will hold a Watch Social, New Years' eve, December 31, at her residence, 321 W. 63rd street, just west of Wentworth avenue. All are invited to join in welcoming the New Year. Refreshments will be served."

C. J. Barnes, the trumpet medium, is going to work in Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania, at various points. He will take orders on his route for The Progressive Thinker.

R. K. Robertson writes: "Lately I often find myself in the spirit world, making discoveries and conversing with persons who have resided there a long time. I find with them a great desire to get in closer touch with those left on earth. I also find some who do not know they have passed the border line."

Mrs. T. J. Boyd writes: "I have been in Washington only a short time, and though I know there are many Spiritualists near me, being a stranger, have failed to find any, or where there are any meetings held. I would be glad if any Spiritualist of Sumner, Auburn, Puyalup, or Tacoma would write to me. Address Sumner, Wash., and let me have a chance of joining in your meetings."

Spiritualists of America, Attention!

The proposed Endowment Fund for N. S. A. has been started, and the first money paid in to the secretary, by two aged friends in the state of Ohio—one seventy-eight, the other seventy-six years old. Will not all Spiritualists follow their example? One dollar each from one hundred thousand Spiritualists makes the Endowment Fund an assured success. There are those who can give five dollars, ten dollars, fifty dollars, one hundred dollars, one thousand dollars, each to this same fund. Let us hear from them!

It is the desire of the promoters of this fund to make it the bulwark of safety for Spiritualism and protection for our true and worthy mediums. It is to be invested with great care and only the income used each year. Let us follow the noble example of our generous friends in Ohio. If the Methodists can raise twenty millions for their religion, why cannot the Spiritualists raise one hundred thousand dollars to support their great truth? We can do it, if we will but try. Send in your money, one dollar or one thousand dollars, more or less, to Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Secretary National Spiritualists' Association, 600 Pennsylvania avenue S. E., Washington, D. C. Be sure to mark your letter plainly "For the Endowment Fund," otherwise your offering may be applied to the general or the pension funds of the N. S. A.

Speak up, friends, and hasten your offerings on to Washington. NOW is the time to give to render practical services to Spiritualism.

MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary N. S. A.

Another Good Man Passed On.

A sadness and gloom fell upon all hearts at the Southern Cassadaga Camp, when early on the morning of Thursday, Dec. 13, the sad news went from one to the other that our beloved brother and co-worker, Horace S. Kellogg, had left the mortal form, and passed silently in the early morning hour "Into the land of the hereafter."

With blanched faces, quivering lips, tearful eyes, in voices soft and low the whispered word came, "It is true; he has gone."

Everyone went with consolation in thought, in word, in look and act, to the bereaved companion, to express that sympathy that all felt, and to bring the balm of the proof of the glorious philosophy of spiritual truth to her heart, in the hour when its depths were stirred.

Mr. Horace S. Kellogg, as a member of the board of the Southern Cassadaga Camp, has been one of its most efficient members; helpful in every way; cheerful, genial, kind, sympathetic and resourceful in suggestions for the good of everything pertaining to the camp, and the same can be said of him in regard to the Lake Brady camp, for this was his nature; and so all here feel keenly for his loss, not only as companion and brother, but as co-worker, counselor and helper. But our spiritual hearts must not look through material eyes; we must look with spiritual thought at the high, exalted, and everyway better condition of his spirit to-day.

Still near enough to guide and cheer;
His soul ascends life's golden stair,
So put aside our care and fear
And let our thought reach to him there,

And he will still be worker, friend,
Counsellor, guide, companion too,
Until this life for us shall end,
And we shall see with grander view.

On Friday morning, Dec. 14, at 10:30, after a tender and touching invocation by Mrs. Wheeler of Onset, Mass., and a song, "Come, Gentle Spirits," Dr. Hilligoss, president of the camp, spoke briefly, pathetically, a few word in home service; after which the journey to the old homestead in Cleveland, Ohio, was begun, where the last words of appreciation will be said with relatives and friends.

Long in thought, by word and deed will his memory live,—
Peace he left with everyone, and consolation still, will give.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To the Friends of the Lyceum.

May I once again call your attention to the need of united effort and support of the most important work of Spiritualism. We hope to issue a Lesson Quarterly for our children, but must have some interest shown to warrant it. The Quarterly would contain lessons for each Sunday, responsive readings, gems of thought, and order of exercises. It could be issued for ten cents a quarter. How many do you want?

We have also pretty lyceum pins, costing but five cents each; $4 per hundred, or $2 for fifty. Each member should wear one.

The N. S. A. authorizes me to offer three banners to be given to the three schools showing the best record during the coming year. No matter how small your lyceum may be now, you have a fair chance to earn the lovely banner if you show progress during the year.

All lyceums desiring to compete for the prize, send not later than January 15, the number of pupils enrolled, average attendance, general conditions, and names of officers; these will be duly filed, and we will advise your secretary thoroughly regarding the duties of competitors. Let me have your hearty sympathy and support that we may make this work beneficial to old and young children.

Yours Fraternally,
ANNA L. GILLESPIE.

Colorado Talks Back.

The chairmen of the Republican and Democratic State Central Committees of Colorado have denied the statements set forth in a widely copied dispatch from Denver, to the effect that woman suffrage is a failure in that state. Republican Chairman Vivian says the "interview with recognized leaders of the dominant parties" took place in the too imaginative brain of some reporter.

Attention—Massachusetts State Association.

The annual meeting will be held in Berkley Hall Annex, 3 Berkeley street, Boston, on Tuesday, Jan. 1, 1907, at 10:30 a. m. Only members are admitted to the meeting, as only the annual business of the year, with election of officers, will be attended to. All members are urgently requested to be present at this meeting. The business meetings should be of more importance than the social meetings, so please all congregate at that hour at the above place.

FLOWERS AND THOUGHTS.

Sweet, beautiful flowers and beautiful thoughts,
So closely are linked together,
That nothing in this world can keep them apart
Through brightest days or stormy weather.

Lovely bright blossome appeal to the heart,
Engender pure thoughts in our mind,
They make us more cheerful and loving and true;
Teach us to be loving and kind.

The soul that is passive at sight of sweet buds,
Or fragrance of flowers in full bloom,
Is sadly in need to awake and review
The cause of its darkness and gloom.

If beauty and fragrance of flowers are lost,
To groveling souls who just grope,
I fear that in such naught can stir a good thought;
They live, and they die, without hope.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, on Thanksgiving morning, from her home in Great Falls, Mont., Augusta A., wife of James J. Mettler. The funeral was conducted by the Women's Relief Corps, of which she was a member. The coffin was banked with flowers contributed by friends of the deceased. Her family were all present, which consisted of a husband, two sons and a daughter. Death had no terror for her.

J. I. METTLER.

Our greatly beloved brother, S. L. McDermit, of Canton, Ohio, has gone the way of all the earth, to try the realities of another and brighter sphere. He passed out of the material body on Dec. 10. While he was poor in worldly things, he was rich in the spiritual. We feel that very soon we will be able to converse with him as heretofore. He was well versed in the philosophy of our cause, and an earnest worker therefor, having the advantage of many who knew not the why and the wherefore thereof.

J. C. MOHLER.

Passed to spirit life, Dec. 6, at Battle Creek, Mich., Mrs. Kittie Arms. Services conducted by Rev. Frank T. Ripley. She was a long-time reader of The Progressive Thinker.

At Flint, Mich., on Nov. 14, the spirit of William Golden was born into the angel world at the ripe old age of 82. He asked his friends to call him early in the morning, but the white-winged messenger whose footsteps he was not permitted to hear, had borne his waiting spirit home, to join his beloved wife who had taken the journey twelve years before. The writer conducted the services.

MRS. MARIAN CARPENTER.

At her home in Battle Creek, Mich., on Nov. 25, Mrs. Lilian Piper, the beloved wife of Edward Piper, at the age of 46 years; passed to spirit life. Seldom has the hand of death reaped a lovelier soul than that of our dear sister, or laid to sleep a life of nobler memories. She knew what it was to stand as a mediator between the two worlds. She was a medium, and her sweet-voiced messages and words of comfort will live in the hearts of those who knew her. She was firm in devotion to principle and right. Her acquaintances recognized in her nobility of character and broad sympathy. She leaves a faithful husband to mourn her absence, but he enjoys that restful security, knowing full well that some sweet day they will clasp glad hands to part nevermore. Her body was laid to rest just as the sun was mingling with enchanted mists of the shore of the far west. By her request some few years ago, Mrs. Marian Carpenter spoke the words of consolation and comfort.

E. E. CARPENTER.

Passed to spirit life from his home in Chillum, Md., on Friday, Dec. 7, Joseph B. Ager, aged 73. Mr. Ager was a man of strong influence in his community, a successful farmer and dairyman; a prominent officer in the Grange and a staunch Spiritualist. His decease was sudden and due to heart failure. He had only recently returned from the annual convention of the Grangers which occurred in Denver and was making his plans for the coming year. As Mr. Ager commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew him and his funeral in the chapel of Rock Creek Park Cemetery on Sunday, Dec. 9, drew together a large throng to pay tribute to his worth and memory. The exercises were conducted by Mrs. M. T. Longley of Washington, in the delivery of a truly Spiritualistic discourse. Mr. Longley feelingly rendered selections of his musical compositions, and the Grangers closed the service with their own beautiful tribute to the ascended brother and friend. Mr. Ager leaves on earth a dear wife and three children, one son and two daughters; one son had preceded him to the spirit world. May the peace and joys of spirit communion be to the companion of fifty-three years and to the children a light to banish everytrace of gloom and pain.

M. T. L.

On Dec. 14, occurred the transition of Mrs. Elizabeth Alter, after more than two years of suffering by paralysis. Her age nearly 72 years. She had been a medium almost from childhood, and nearly contemporary with the Fox Sisters. She had wonderful demonstrations of spirit power. She was a devoted wife; was the mother of twelve children, three of whom had preceded her to the better life. She met the change with joyful anticipation.

The Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association.

Greetings from the Secretary of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association:—Rev. Geo. H. Brooks, president of the W. S. S. A., having completed his report of work done in the state for the interest of Spiritualism since coming into office last April, I wish to say no officer ever worked as hard and as earnestly under circumstances such as Mr. Brooks had to meet everywhere.

Financially he had success, in fact more than we ever dared to anticipate when starting out into the field of work, not knowing where to stop, but making a most earnest effort for all the good possibly to be gained both for the Spiritualists and the state association.

As a representative of the people we have been able to pay all running expenses; paid all interest due on notes held against the W. S. S. A., and have some money in the treasury which we expect to make part payment on some note in order to make our interest less, and we most sincerely thank the good friends in all localities for the kind courtesy shown our president and the help to the W. S. S. A.

While Mr. Brooks was out in the state working hard from place to place, your secretary has tried also to do something in the way of raising money to help defray expense at the next annual convention, which will be held in Milwaukee, April 16 to 18, 1907. I have succeeded in interesting the Ladies of Milwaukee and each one will turn open her home for an afternoon coffee, or entertain in some way, and raise money.

Mrs. Anna Mehrtens of 189 Lloyd street, has announced a flower reading social on January 8, 1907, 2 p. m., to which she invites all friends interested to attend.

May the happy Christmas greetings reach each and every one interested in the truth of Spiritualism.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Psychic Light. BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only, $1.50 postpaid.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, scathing review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK. Torture implements employed in the 15th and 16th centuries for the promulgation of Christianity, with pictorial illustrations. By George E. Macdonald. Price, 10 cents.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

August Clemens, Washington, D. C.: Q. Please give address of Geo. W. Warder.

A. George Woodward Warder may be taken as pre-eminently a type of the true American. A lawyer, a man of business affairs, with large holdings in real estate, and yet a distinguished popular lecturer and an author of many scientific works into which he has thrown the imagination of the poet, and bewildered the scientists with the corruscations of his theories. Withal he has found time to write several volumes of poems and at least one novel. The intent of his scientific works is well expressed by their titles, as: The Stairway to the Stars; The Universe a Vast Electric organization; Life in Celestial Sun Worlds. His address is Kansas City, Mo., 902 Main street.

L. L.: Q. I have been a medium, but now I fear I am obsessed. The trouble came from opposition at home. My husband don't want me to have anything to do with Spiritualism, as he fears I will become insane. Now my most earnest prayer is to become a medium, and go out into the world heralding the truth of this great cause. What do you advise?

A. To "advise" in such domestic subjects is a matter of great delicacy, and as the advice is usually not what is wanted the adviser gets small honor. But this case, a sample of a great many, seems so transparent, that one may hazard reply. It is no wonder the husband of a wife who fears "obsession," whatever that may be, and instead of caring for the immediate demands of home life, has her mind filled with fancies of going out as a herald of the cause, objects to the whole affair. He ought to object, and put in his objection in the very budding of the anticipation. Now to be a medium, and in the quiet of the home circle converse with departed friends is delightful, and brings heaven to one's own hearth. To this no husband would or could object. It would make home a thousand times more sacred. But if into this Eden the horrible possibilities of obsessing spirits, and the insane drivel of their promoters are to enter, better the loss of all communion. If to this is added a wife who will desert all home belongings in Don Quixotic chase after the illusory will-o'-the wisp of reforming the world, some one ought to object against the incipient display of insanity. If in the sacred quiet of the home spiritual influences spiritualize the domestic life, conquers the rudeness of the children, the antagonism of the husband, and like a delicate perfume exhales from every day life, the seed is planted that will bear fruitage for the "heralding of the great cause." There will be no thought of "obsession," or disturbing influences; no antagonism, and should opportunity come for lighting the torches of neighbors, or giving this bread and wine of life to famished souls, there will be no sacrifice, but giving from a superabundance, with blessings on the giver.

S. O. Stofford: Q. Has anyone satisfactorily accounted for the "homing instinct" of animals, birds, etc?

A. The question refers to the wonderful and almost unbelievable capabilities of these lower order of beings when taken far from their homes, to return in the most direct course. Of all the so-called instincts of animals this is the most mysterious, and all the theories hitherto advanced, none are more than opinion. Volumes might be filled with authentic instances, where domestic animals have been carried hundreds of miles, and found their way home. Dogs have been known to return over five hundred miles of country that must have been unknown to them, as they were transported by railway. Insects have this remarkable faculty. The honey-bee will fly to clover fields miles away, and after visiting the blossoms, zigzagging here, there, up and down in a manner that would utterly confuse the sense of direction in man, arise in the air, and circling round, start on a line as straight as a bullet's path for its hive.

All birds have this faculty, some in greater perfection. It has been cultivated in the homing pigeon, until its achievements are almost incredible. Five, eight, and a thousand miles have these loving creatures been carried, across continents and away over the trackless ocean, and when liberated returned. Of all these stories that of the one liberated by Nansen, the Arctic explorer, after thirty months' confinement in the frozen North, is most affecting. It flew over a thousand miles of floe and iceberg, and another thousand of ocean and plain, and alighting on the window of Mrs. Nansen's home in Christiana, called her attention by pecking on the window pane. She found the note it brought from her husband, confined in the horrible prison of the ice king. Aside from the remarkable fact that it came undeviatingly home, is, perhaps the equally remarkable endurance manifested by this long-sustained flight. We may estimate the flight as consuming two days and nights of incessant vibration of the wings, and the expenditure of energy in maintaining the heat of the body in an atmosphere for the first 1,000 miles 40 degrees below zero. To accomplish this, perhaps not more than half an ounce of food was consumed. Of course there was a reserved energy If human ingenuity could fashion an engine that would make the same perfect transformation of the heat in coal into force, there would be a saving of so much, that the present devices would appear to waste all. There is nothing to compare with the energy displayed except the force of high explosives.

But to return from this digression to the explanation of the means whereby the transported animal is enabled to direct its way homeward. Nearly forty years ago when writing "The Philosophy of Spirit," which was published as the second volume of "The Arcana of Nature," I became impressed that the theory of thought-waves from transmitting to receiving brains offered an explanation to this mystery. Since that time this impression has strengthened, and with the coming of the wireless telegraph, may be made transparently plain to the understanding. With the discoveries of psychometry and thought transference the subject is yet more clearly within comprehension. We need not stop to prove that animals have nearly all the sensuous faculties of man, some of these even in greater intensity. The savage has this faculty of direction, almost equal to animals. He is rarely lost, and it is not all animals, birds or insects that can reach their homes. The trained carrier pigeon is sometimes bewildered and lost.

The theory is this: If we suppose the receiving instrument of the wireless telegraph, when it receives the vibrations from the transmitter, endowed with intelligence, and desire, could propel itself, it would go straight as an arrow's flight to that instrument, as a homing pigeon to its home. That all localities throw off vibrations, and that these are distinct for each and all, is proven by the experience of all sensitives. And again it has been over and over demonstrated that in this class of psychic phenomena, distance is an element that does not enter into the problem. In thought transference a mile or a thousand miles are the same.

Hence the homing faculty is sensitiveness to these vibrations and the ability to distinguish those from the home from the mingling vibrations of all other places.

To illustrate again, I fear at best this explanation will appear no more than a fancy, a man might go out into the darkest night, and be perfectly assured that he could return in a direct line as long as he could see the lamp in the window. A half-mile, a mile, or if the light was in a tower, perhaps five miles, and though other lights might shine, he would in pitch-darkness direct his way to that and that alone. The homing pigeon a thousand miles from home is in darkness so far as vision is concerned, but it has the faculty of receiving the vibrations from that home, as the eye would receive the vibration of light from the lamp in the home window, and is as unfailingly guided thereby.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

Religion Practically Defined

Its Place Pointed Out in the World's Reformatory Progress.

However valuable, in and of itself, Spiritualism may be, its value to the world will be determined by its power to appeal to people who think. It may be the richest nugget from the mine of universal truth, but only so far as it arrests attention and arouses interest can it prove of any service.

True Spiritualism, whenever and wherever it has been intelligently presented to thinking, unbiased, reasoning people, has not only merited, but has usually received a respectful hearing.

Pseudo-Spiritualism, ever claiming great things in the discovery of mines, oil wells, springs, etc., has never, to any extent worthy of notice, been sought after by thinking people, and whenever it has succeeded in gaining attention, it has ended in a disgust of it, rather than in an acceptance of truth which real Spiritualism seeks to bring to the world.

A spiritualistic ministry is a ministry intelligently understanding the religion, science and philosophy of Spiritualism, with a knowledge of how to intelligently present its claims, together with a disposition to faithfully perform all functions pertaining to a genuine servant of the cause of truth. To these qualifications, doubtless, much might be added, but absolutely nothing should be substracted.

"Rev." is too cheap to necessarily constitute one a true minister, especially when, as in some Spiritualistic quarters, it is purchased at so much per head. Even, however, when bought at the exceedingly low price of one dollar, the "Rev." is far cheaper than the price paid. In all such cases, the one selling the title is only disposing of purely fictitious property, and from the outset whoever assumes the burden of this highly attenuated honor(?) dubs himself or herself as an unmitigated fake, and in many instances goes into the highly spiritual (?) business of pretending to have the power to discover mines, find hidden treasures and give tips on the stock markets, and to this is usually added the claim to be able to affinitize men and women, reconcile quarrelsome people, reveal the perfidy and unfaithfulness of husbands, wives and lovers.

According to "The Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia," an up-to-date authority upon definitions, a "reverend" is one "worthy to be revered—entitled to esteem, or respected, by reasons of one's character." What is there in these qualifications to be ashamed of? What is to be found in the "one-dollar-per-head" reverends which is in harmony with the standard definition of the term?

It is readily acknowledged that one may be a true and faithful minister without assuming the title of reverend, but if one incorporates in his life and in the performance of service to humanity all that is implied by the standard meaning of the word reverend, it will be found that he constitutes himself, very logically and legitimately, a very fair sort of a minister. To sanely sympathetic visits upon the sick in hospital and home, cheering them with a floral or some more tangible contribution, speaking words of consolation (not in a private "sitting" at so much per word) to those in distress, elucidating the truth of a continuity of life beyond the portals of the grave, and emphasizing, even with a FREE demonstration, if possible, the fact of spirit return, to those bereft of some dear one, by so-called death, the true minister of the Spiritualist faith will as naturally be led as one who is thirsty is led to pure and refreshing water.

The real reverend will also publicly minister to the people in no phraseology or cant, but with words that are alive with that character of thought which will stimulate to correct living and to the performance of those sacred requirements which simple justice, to say nothing of higher motives, legitimately demands of every man and woman. We would not only emphasize the necessity of a ministry in Spiritualism, but as well the importance of a ministry located in some given place for a term of years. There are many reasons why this condition should obtain. In the first place, a permanent ministry, worthy of the name, could not fail to give character and local standing to the church or society over which a minister presides, and in the next place, this idea is of equal importance to the ministry itself. A settled ministry must, of a necessity, compel the minister to study, and consequently become an up-to-date thinker.

It is a very different proposition to speak for seven or more years before one people and be able to hold their interest, than going from place to place with perhaps a half-dozen lectures in the head (especially for the trance) or in the pocket for intellectual or oratorical display, as is sometimes the case. There is a vast difference between assuming the responsibility of the success of a society than in having absolutely no concern in this matter. What we need and what we want is A MINISTRY WITH RESPONSIBILITY RESTING UPON IT.

It is pertinent to inquire why some speakers as well as laymen in our ranks are making such a protest against "reverend" and a ministry in Spiritualism. Organization has never obtained without leaders, and no leader has ever succeeded in effecting permanent organization who attempted to cover too much territory, except as he has accomplished it through deputation to a local ministry.

Is it because they consider the objective expression of churchianity but a fetish or hypocritically solemn custom, and therefore object to any seeming imitation of it? Certainly the bad habits of society can be more directly reached, and the power of their destruction or reformation can be more forcefully applied from the inside than from the outside. If the world is to be converted to, or convinced of, Spiritualism's truth, it must be taken in hand just where it is, for our voice is too weak to be heard by such as sorely need the benefits of Spiritualism, if we shout to them from the hill-top of these newly-discovered heights. Let us attempt to reform the church from the inside, for we can never accomplish it from the outside, while the non-churched will ever pay heed to the appeal of reason when presented with as thin a garment as possible of dogmatism and radical offensiveness.

There can be no danger of a one-dollar-a-head reverend" locating for any length of time, for he began his career in deception and continues to capture dupes by the exercise of his wits. The gauze which covers what little of truth he possesses, if there is any, is so thin that his real character would be soon observed and repudiation would very soon follow.

"There are also some, who object to 'religion,' or to having Spiritualism designated as a religion. If by religion is meant much of that character of thought and life which passes with some as being religion, then, I, too, am one of the objectors.

"'I will here define just what I mean by religion. 'The healthful development and right life of the spiritual nature, as contrasted with that of the mere intellectual and social powers.' This definition is mine, but mine by adoption, for it will be found in the New Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia. What objection is raised to religion, when thus defined? Wherein would such a religion militate against the highest service of Spiritualism to the world?"

There are thousands of people, whose only objection to Spiritualism is in the fact that they have translated its meaning by this doggerel, charm-selling, uniting-of-estranged lovers, finding lost property things, which parades itself under the name of Spiritualism. Perhaps some Spiritualists' objection to religion is to be found as they translate it to mean "The rites or services of religion; the practice of sacred rites and ceremonies." "Reverence toward the gods, fear of God, piety, religious awe or a collection of religious formulas."

There are at least two duties which the Spiritualists owe to the world, and which I feel it would be well to thoroughly discharge. First, to declare clearly, broadly and sanely, its belief in such a religion as answers the demand of such a definition of religion as we have given, and then so live it that pseudo-religionists will be glad to embrace it, thus leaving this false thing out to die of inattention, and second, to establish a ministry and through its ministry such a strong organization as will be able to sweep forever these flagrantly objectionable features from off its otherwise fair pages; such features as at present are the disgust of the thinking and which are keeping thousands of men and women from morally and financially rendering support to the cause.

One whose idea of what constitutes a true ministry is so limited as to assume that any one is so ignorant as to think that it consists of simply the title of "Rev" is too ignorant of its requirements to be qualified to enter upon the discharge of its sacred (not solemn) duties.

Let the N. S. A. proclaim to the world just what it means by "reverend," if it approves of such a title, as it evidently does. If it approves of a ministry, define the required qualifications, and what is expected of it. If any religion is expected of men and women, who claim to be Spiritualists, let us know, and with no uncertainty, what that religion is to be like. Then all thinking people will know where you stand with reference to these matters, and will be at liberty to accept or reject.

I have defined what "reverend," "ministry" and "religion" mean to me. This definition may not be at all interesting to any of your thousands of readers, but it is of vital interest to me.

other place to expound the problem whether all are the manifestations of the "Supreme Soul," or separate individual distinct luminous spirit-forms.

When such a communion is established, the performer is able to have the aid of those agencies whom he invokes and all his desires are accomplished through them.

The invoking of the forms in the lower strata are almost similar to the above, but they do not tax the performer with such high powers of concentration. These lower forms are always addicted to a tendency of evil and the so-called pelting of stones, throwing in obsolete articles, etc., attributed to the superhuman agencies, are the action of these forms.

CHAPTER II.

The class of men professing to have practiced Yoga, if we exclude from the account the sages and rishis, was certainly not very large, even at the time when India held sway over the world in civilization—Scientific and Psychic.

But before the close of the last fifty or sixty decades it was nearly impossible to meet with an individual who looked to Yoga practice as his only, or indeed principal aim of life, as the time-honored sages and rishis have taken to the recluse. This is in no way remarkable considering the degeneracy of the sons of India amidst all the difficulties resulting from popular imbecility and ignorance. The Indians at one time did reach the noontide of glory and are now declining—as every nation ought to—and are dwelling on the soothing recollections of the past—reposing themselves into indolence and luxury—if their attitude can be called such.

Oh! sons of the glorious Ind, your repose has become too long and it is now or never; "AWAKE! ARISE! OR BE FOREVER FALLEN!" Remember that thou art the decendants of those estimable ancestors, who in their meek and humble spirit of their own faith, were en rapport with the Creator.

This hereditary predilection for psychic studies will ripen in course of time and will set in a still stronger light when you advance in intellectual, ethical and spiritual pursuit, and mysteries of the world after death, will melt away before you and it will be a case of inviting the supreme rest—death—instead of shunning it as an adder and fearing the consequences.

Dear Reader! Do not be under the impression and delusion that this branch is the monopolized and privileged course set apart for the special benefit of the son of India. It is neither connection nor birth, but sense, perseverance and mastery that make the man—psychic man. The elements of this psychic clairvoyance can be acquired by anyone who applies himself with the greatest assiduity. The fondness of the study, through life, and the familiarity which they will open with the grand and beautiful mysteries of that unexplored region—Spiritual Realm—will undoubtedly contribute to your entering "the Silence" and becoming en rapport with the Creator or rather, thy "Self."

That rapture with which you hold communion amidst the gloom of surrounding earthly objects, will burst forth the barrier between yourself and the Unapproachable and you will feel yourself surrounded by a delightful society.

Opportunities are not now wanting which invite an exposition of the principles of Nature, on which the eternal rest and salvation of the soul is established.

Reader! you are not certainly the first man who finds himself incapable of resigning the romantic world or the uncontrolled revels of the imagination for the dull realities of the world above, few, indeed, have been able to constrain their imaginations and delusions. Now you are on the path or rather the threshold of that vast and mysterious region and do not turn away when you are prepared to enter.

The time is near at hand when man, arising from the pit of sorrow, and shaking off the deathly grapings of slavery to selfish cravings, shall realize his true relation to the Changeless and Illimitable, and shall know the perfect bliss.

Four Sadhanas or Means of Attainment of Yoga.

For a person who is to undertake the Yoga practice, it is absolutely necessary to know some essentials of knowledge, before entering the realm of practice. Such a knowledge may be called the Sadhanas or preparatory knowledge for the path of Yoga.

There are four such rudiments of knowledge and they ought to be mastered as thoroughly as possible. The knowledge, or rather, the four rules may seem to be as simple as useless to the reader, but the Yogi ought to take a particular care in grasping them. It is only from small that great things evolve. A firm belief in all with perfect candor will lead to higher developments. It should be well remembered that Faith is the highest Religion.

The Four Rules Are:

I. The existence of God, with neither beginning nor end, with the combined functions of Creator, Preserver, and Destroyer. The world in which we live, was created by Him, and is canopied by mists of Maya or illusion. No real value must be given for anything in his world. The only things for which he should set any value must be to the Universal Soul and the Spirit world.

II. He should be free from any and all attachments to the worldly things or pleasure.

III. (a) He should be able to control his mind, temperament and intellect, and he should not have egotism (i. e., the feeling of "This is I or This is Mine, etc.")

(b) He should be indifferent towards the objects of the five senses.

(c) He should have equanimity in desired or undesired events. That is, he should be unaffected by the pairs of opposites, such as:

Pain or Pleasure, Heat or Cold, Honor or Dishonor, Friend or Foe, Death or Birth, Hatred or Desire, etc., and he should incessantly work for the good of all.

(d) He should have unbounded faith and confidence in his master or Guru, in the Occult Sciences, and in God and His glory. For faith is the powerful agent in the enlightenment of the heart.

(e) He should be thorough in every knowledge he learns from his master as well as in all things he has studied from his books.

IV. And lastly he should be ever anticipating the favor, the good-will and the full inspiration of his master, for the uplifting of his Soul.

These are the four Sadhanas devised by the great sages for the attainment of any of the three Yogas named above.

the jars, when, to our surprise, one was found to be full of wheat, another of preserves, another of sugar-candy, another of different sorts of pickles, another of ladies'-legs, (?) another of citron, and another of tamarind. In short, everyone of the jars contained a different eatable of some kind or other, which was presented to me, and tasted by most of those who were in attendance. After a little space, they uncovered the jars for the last time, and they were seen to be completely empty, and as clean as if they had been a hundred times washed in the purest spring water. This also was considered something strange and surprising.

"Twenty-second. They brought the Koulliaut-e-Saady, or works of Saady, and in my presence deposited it in a small bag, of course previously examined. They drew out the book, and it had been transformed into the Diwaun of Hafez; and the latter being replaced in the bag, it was drawn out again as the Diwaun of Sulhna. This was repeated many times, and every time a work was drawn out different from that which was last returned into the bag.

"Twenty-third. They produced a chain of fifty cubits in length, and in my presence threw one end of it towards the sky, where it remained as if fastened to something in the air. A dog was then brought forward, and being placed at the lower end of the chain, immediately ran up, and reaching the other end, immediately disappeared in the air. In the same manner a hog, a panther, a lion, and a tiger, were alternately sent up the chain, and all equally disappeared at the upper end of the chain. At last they took down the chain, put it into a bag, no one even discovering in what way the different animals were made to vanish into the air in the mysterious manner above described. This, I may venture to affirm, was beyond measure strange and surprising.

"Twenty-fourth. They placed before me a large covered basket, having first shown to my satisfaction that it was quite empty. Having claimed my attention, they now took up the cover, and the basket appeared brimful of the choicest viands, most delicious to the taste. They put on the cover, and again in a few minutes lifting it up, the basket now appeared full of fellony (?), raisins, almonds, and other dried fruits and aromatic herbs. [The third remove is indicated in a hand-writing so totally unintelligible in the Persian copy, that I have not attempted to render it.] In short, at every alternate removal of the basket-lid, though an hundred times repeated, a fresh display of delicacies would be presented to the spectator, to our great admiration and surprise.

"Twenty-fifth. They caused to be set before me a large covered basin, which they filled with water. They took off the cover to show that it contained nothing but water; it was now replaced, but being again removed, there appeared in the water ten or a dozen green leaves. The basket was again closed, and, on being re-opened, there appeared three or four large snakes coiled together in the water. Another covering and removal, and there appeared in the water five or six koully khaur. (Possibly cranes, or some large bird of the kind.) At the last uncovering of the vessel, it was found to contain neither water nor anything else, but was entirely empty.

"Twenty-sixth. One of the men in my presence displayed on his little finger a ruby ring; he removed the ring to another finger, and the gem had taken the color of an emerald; removed to another finger, and the emerald became a diamond; again removed, and the diamond became a turquoise; and this repeated for any number of times, terminated in the same result, every change producing a gem of a different color and kind.

"Twenty-seventh. A two-edged sword was set up, with the hilt strongly fastened in the earth, and one of the men brought his naked side to bear upon it in such a manner, as to excite the utmost surprise that he should have received no bodily injury from having brought himself into such contact with so keen a weapon. [This passage is so extremely ill-written in the Persian copy that it has been hardly possible to obtain the precise meaning.]

"Twenty-eighth. They produced a blank volume of the purest white paper, which was placed in my hands, to show that it contained neither figures nor colored pages whatever, of which I satisfied myself all around. One of the men took the volume in hand, and the first opening exhibited a page of bright red, sprinkled with gold, forming a blank tablet splendidly elaborate. The next turn presented a leaf of beautiful azure, sprinkled in the same manner, and exhibiting on the margins numbers of men and women in various attitudes. The juggler then turned to another leaf, which appeared of a Chinese color and fabric, and sprinkled in the same manner with gold; but on it were delineated herds of cattle and lions, the latter seizing upon the kine in a manner that I never observed in any other paintings. The next leaf exhibited was of a beautiful green, similarly powdered with gold, on which was represented in lively colors a garden with numerous cypresses, roses and other flowering shrubs in full bloom, and in the midst of the garden an elegant pavilion. The next change exhibited a leaf of orange, in the same manner powdered with gold, on which the painter had delineated the representation of a great battle, in which two adverse kings were seen engaged in the struggles of a mortal conflict. In short, at every turn of the leaf, a different color, scene and action, was exhibited, such as was indeed most pleasing to behold. But of all the performances, this latter of the volume of paper, was that which afforded me the greatest delight, so many beautiful pictures and extraordinary changes having been brought under my view, that I must confess my utter inability to do justice in the description. I can only add, that although I had frequently in my father's court witnessed such performances, never did I see or hear of anything in execution so wonderfully strange, as was exhibited, with apparent facility by these seven jugglers. I dismissed them finally, with a donation of fifty thousand rupees, with the intimation that all the Ameirs of my court, from the order of one thousand upwards should each contribute something in proportion.

"In very truth, however, we may have bestowed upon these performances the character of trick or juggle, they very evidently partake of the nature of something beyond the exertion of human energy; at all events, such performances were executed with inimitable skill, and if there were in the execution anything of facility, what should prevent their accomplishment by any man of ordinary capacity? I have heard it stated that the art has been called the Semnanian (perhaps asmauman, "celestial"), and I am informed that it is also known and practiced to a considerable extent among the nations of Europe. It may be said, indeed, that there exists in some men a peculiar and essential faculty which enables them to accomplish things far beyond the ordinary scope of human exertion, such as frequently to baffle the utmost subtility of the understanding to penetrate."

The easiest way of disposing of the incredible phenomena described above, by the Emperor, is to disbelieve them. But there is no great difficulty in believing them to be true. First, some of those "tricks" have been witnessed by Europeans. Thus the "rope trick" is a well-attested fact. As also is the "mango trick." This is also a proved fact that there is no trickery in this "mango trick."

Men have the power of creating a mango tree in a moment and making it bear delicious fruits. We have already given an account of the exploits of Haridas who could die and remain in that state for many months and come to life again. We have no reason to doubt the wonders performed by spirits in spiritual circles, described in spiritual papers. The Theosophists have established the existence of Mahatmas, and the truth of the wonderful powers they possess. Only the other day Hossain Khan, the magician, bewildered Calcutta by his tricks, which were witnessed by thousands, many of whom are yet alive.

Let it be borne in mind, that there is a fundamental difference between a "trick," a "sleight-of-hand," "ordinary magic with the help of assistants and apparatuses" and "a spiritual phenomenon."

We have furnished some hints to show how these wonderful phenomena are produced. They are brought about not only by dead men (spirits) through mediums, but also by men in body who can step out of their material covers for a temporary period.

A GHOST STORY from Perak, Indicating Some Strange Features in Connection With Spirit Return.

It was in the month of July, in the year 1904. I was acting as Tamil and Hundusthani Interpreter of Courts at Gapeng, Perak, F. M. States. My quarters were on a hill bounded on the east by abandoned tin mines extending over a mile; on the south by the old Chinese cemetery; on the north by the hospital and on the west by a large deep ravine. On the side of my quarters, facing the road, stood a haunted house, where it was rumored that four persons died in one week. Now and then at 7 p. m., we used to see a burning taper to ascend and descend a lime tree that stood between the haunted house and my house. Once a week the Magistrate's court is held in Kampar, a village 12 miles from Gapeng. I had to accompany the Magistrate thither and stay there one or two nights. At this time I secured a servant boy in Kampar and took him to Gapeng. He was 11 years old. It was a Tuesday afternoon when we reached home. The very same night we all went to bed as usual. My wife was sleeping near me. Sleep usually visits me in this place very late for fear of Chinese thieves. It was exactly at 12:15, a. m., that my wife, who was enjoying sound sleep, yelled out, "Light! Light! Thieves have come!" I was not then sleeping. I was lying with my eyes shut. Simultaneously with her shrieks something like a flash of lightning struck my eyes. I opened my eyes. The inmates of the adjoining room were also aroused by this flash of lightning. Before the twinkling of the eye, a crash as that of a tremendous stone falling from a great height was heard near our bed. Then came a sudden blast of wind. I was horrified and my blood curdled in my veins. With the blowing of the gust we heard something rolling outside like a brazen platter. I took the lamp in my hand and, accompanied by my friend, went out and shouted to Mr. Fernando (District Surveyor) my next door friend. His wife responded to my call and asked me, "Sir, what is the matter? What is the meaning of this strange sound?" I said I was unable to unravel the mystery. Trembling through fear we closed the door and kept waking till the break of day. Next morning a friend of mine who lives in the same hill at a call's distance, called upon me and inquired from me the cause of that unearthly sound. He added, much to our surprise, that he heard cries of "Alas! Alas!" Immediately after, the Hospital Kerani (clerk), cook and others came to my house and spoke of the same sound. While these things were going on in my front veranda my servant came running to me and said, "Tuan, the platter with which we covered the water jug is not to be seen." A diligent search was made and it was found at a distance of three chains upon a steep mount. The gust of wind that blew could not have carried it up, as the platter was about three or four pounds in weight. We all concluded that it was the work of a ghost.

At 10 a. m. I went to court and narrated the strange occurrence to my friend Mr. Chatterjee (Chief Clerk) an elderly person, 80 years old. The latter asked me whether any new person had come to my house. I replied him in the negative, having forgotten all about my Kampar lad. That evening at about 8 p. m. I was talking in the parlor about the same incident and similar ghost stories with a friend of mine whom I had asked to sleep in my house. My wife was close by me in an arm chair listening with much anxiety to those ghost stories. My child was running about and playing and my Kampar lad was in a corner with his eyes fixed upon us. My friend interrupted my stories at intervals and said, "Don't be afraid. I can annihilate all these ghosts, and pulverize them into atoms. I know sorcery, etc."

The Kampar lad, when he heard these words, exclaimed, "Don't utter so. Stop talking about ghosts. I can sustain no longer." Then he began to weep. Shortly after he fell into a swoon and we poured cold water upon his face. After a few minutes he opened his mouth and said, "Don't molest me. I am possessing this lad for the last 6 years. I will not do any harm. Why I made such lightning and thunder last night is because he has changed my place. Send me back." Immediately we came to the conclusion that it was nothing but a ghost that has used this boy as a medium. Next day I packed him up and sent him away to Kampar. A week after I went to Kampar and told all that had happened to his parents. They all admitted it as a fact.

ABOUT THE INVISIBLE—A Conversation of Spirit Return as Viewed by the Hindus.

West.—Are you a Spiritist? If not, Why do Hindus believe in spirits or Devas?

East.—Yes, I think I live surrounded by invisible beings, by Devas, by Pitris, the spirits of the dead. Of course the beings are not invisible absolutely, but to me they are so. It is not possible to see with gross eyes like ours, the fine bodies of the invisibles.

West.—You believe then in the visitations of the Devas and Pitris?

East.—A Hindu believes that there exists a line of communication, like Marconi's wireless telegraphy, between this Nara-loka and Pitri-loka and messages are received from the invisible spheres by the visible. Telepathy teaches the same thing in the west.

West.—Do you not worship the invisible The doctrine of Spirits, I suppose, belongs to Hindu religion.

East.—Pitri-yajna prescribed by the sages of the vedic age, or the Shradhva ceremony prescribed by Brahmans, and performed by Hindus subsequent to the death of a kinsman, may be tantamount to spirit-worship. To every householder it is imperative to perform Pitriyajna, or Shradhva ceremony and Deva yajna and to kindle a sacrificial fire to propitiate the Deva. Don't you think that the Hindus are quite reasonable to observe a Deva-yajna or a Pitriyajna and thereby worship the Devas and the Pitris,—the spirits of the departed forefathers?

West.—My friend! I never dreamed that you, a student of western Philosophies and sciences, would think it reasonable and sensible to worship spirits and seek help from the invisible.

East.—Please understand that the basis of my belief about the invisible is not Spiritism. It is based on religion and reason. In all times the scriptural literatures of the world have preached the doctrine of a belief in Devas or angels, in the messengers from the invisible world, from the kingdom of God. You Christians have much to do with the invocation of angels. A good Protestant sung the hymn, "I walk amongst angels." In the Scriptures of the ancient Babylon, we find the representation of angels in the palace of Asurnazirpal. So you see the doctrine of spirits and their worship belongs to the religions of the East as well as to the religions of the West.

West.—I admit now that as the doctrine of angels belongs to the religions of the West, so the doctrine of a belief in Devas and Pitris belongs to the religions of the East. But you state that your idea about the invisible is founded on reason. How can that be?

East.—A Hindu knows very well from his scriptures like your men of science, that several forms of existence there are on this globe; mineral, vegetable, animal and man. But he does not think man perfect or nearly perfect. Do you not think like this in the West?

West.—Yes, we do. Man is far from perfection, for, we find the mind in man is not yet in its highest state of development; it having four states of consciousness, namely, unconscious, subconscious, conscious, and super-conscious.

East.—Would it then be reasonable to imply that there are higher forms of existence than man? We may call them Devas or by any name. Man attains to conscious mind, and the mineral that was decomposed by heat and moisture produced the first form of life containing the unconscious mind of plants. But the exhibition of super-conscious intelligence in this life is only possible or belongs to the life beyond this.

West.—This is quite reasonable, I think. Our evolutionists have proved that the crystal forms of the minerals are plant forms. That plant nature germinates in the mineral and the animal nature begins in the plant and it follows therefore that in animals human nature begins. But my reason cannot admit the notion of an invisible bodily existence like that of spirits.

East.—Invisible and bodiless, do you think they are the same thing? They are not the same. Many forms of matter make no impression upon our senses at all. Can you see nitrogen or oxygen? But you can see water which is the union of oxygen and hydrogen. So when matter can be invisible, then there may be invisible cells and organs and invisible bodies. The super-conscious mind of Devas or angels dawns in the conscious mind of man. The subtle body of the super-conscious mind begins in the gross body of the conscious mind. So the germ of the invisible bodies exist in the visible bodies. Man is to become a Deva or an angel or a spirit.

West.—I admit it is reasonable that out of human lives angels are produced. One form of existence can be developed into another. The conscious mind of man can be developed in the super-conscious mind of a Deva. But it is not a fact that these super-sensual forms of existence are here and that they walk among us. I mean to say that this earth cannot be a home for Devas.

East.—This earth may not afford a home for Devas; but it is a workshop where there is much to do. Of course the presentation of a super-conscious intelligence in human life is very rare as it belongs to the life beyond this. But an Indian Yogee attains to it and to him therefore the invisible beings are visible.

West.—Now, I do understand that the invisibles and visibles are inter-dependent as mind and matter, or subtle matter and gross matter. Yes, you Hindus are quite reasonable, I see.

East.—In the West, you are pleased to entertain your kinsmen and friends with feasts. But the Hindus not only like to please and entertain their people as you do, but at the same time always offer some food to the Pitris or the spirits of the departed forefathers and the Devas. The invocations of Pitris by Pitri-yajna and of Devas by Deva-yajna are based not on Spiritism as western people think. The dogma of a belief in spirits is founded on the direct perception of the sages and therefore belongs to the Karma-Kanda of the Hindu religion.

PSYCHIC CLAIRVOYANCE.—"It is an Established fact That the Practitioner or Adherent of Occult Sciences Should Be One, Worthy of Esteem for the Uprightness of His Mind, the Purity of His Sentiments and the Honesty of His Character."

Not only Gayatri but there are various other Upasanas to invoke the aid of certain alleged spirit-forms who respond to the calls of the devotee, performer or worshiper. The chief of these Upasanas based on the Shastric principles excluding the minor spirit-forms in the lower strata, are of Satki, Hanuman, Kali and Ganpati.

The mantras to invoke the aid and appearance of these agencies are more or less nothing more than, and correspond to, the present-day scientific theory of "Suggestions." It is an established fact that the practitioner or adherent of Occult sciences should be one, worthy of esteem for the unrightness of his mind, the purity of his sentiments and honesty of his character. It is absolutely necessary to get those mantras by heart and repeat them several times each day at a prescribed time by retiring into a quiet place, removed as far as possible from the scenes and sounds of the external world. The idea is, to shut out the distracting impressions, and enable one to be alone with himself. After entering the room he has to acquire the proper conditions of bodily and mental relaxations from other things and fix his thoughts firmly, calmly and steadily upon the mantras and the spirit which is to be invoked. In course of the time when he obtains a high concentrative power and establishes communion with his real "Self" or the "Soul," the visionary appearances occur before him.

We here reserve the right in some

The World Has Never Seen the Like!

At Great Expense we have secured the copyright of Mr. Ghandi's translation of the "Unknown Life of Jesus Christ" It is to be sent forth as a gift to our subscribers, as set forth in the following:

It is an absolute fact. We are enabling our subscribers to form a valuable library at a nominal cost. One of them writes:

"I have your THIRTEEN premium books, which if I had bought in the open market at the usual price would have cost me at least $15. Sending each year for one copy at the cost of 25 cents, the whole thirteen volumes have cost me exactly $3.25. As you paid the postage thereon, which amounts to not less than $1.40, all you receive for the Thirteen copies I have, is exactly $1.85, causing you to lose in the aggregate each year a large amount of money in order to benefit your subscribers."

The above is an accurate estimate. All we have received for the thirteen premium books when they have been ordered one at a time for thirteen consecutive years, is approximately $1.85, a little more than the price of a single book.

We now offer as a GIFT OUTRIGHT, one of the most valuable books of the present age—THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST. In order to obtain this book, you must send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay the postage thereon, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year. Your library is not complete without this remarkable book. Every Spiritualist should have it for study and reference. Every orthodox Christian should read it, and thus learn the whole truth in regard to Jesus. Remember it is a GIFT to you on the TERMS MENTIONED above. We expect to distribute at least Twenty Thousand copies as GIFTS.

SPIRITS PHOTOGRAPHED.

The Feat Accomplished by the Celebrated Prof. Richet of France—American Society of Psychical Research Asks $1,000,000 Endowment to Develop New Mediums.

Have you never seen the actual photograph of a "real" ghost?

Probably not.

But actual ghosts have been seen and have been photographed by Professor Charles Richet, the celebrated French scientist.

Announcement was made in New York to-day by Professor James H. Hyslop, formerly of Columbia University, now vice-president of the new American Society for Psychical Research, that the society has found seven cases of persons who promise to develop into mediums as famous as the celebrated Mrs. Leonora Piper, who is now in England.

An endowment that will yield at least $10,000 annually is required to investigate these cases if results of scientific value are to be obtained.

Dr. Hyslop stated that $75,000 was spent during the twenty years of experiment with Mrs. Piper. "It will cost much more," he said, "to deal in a similar manner with a number of like cases, and this must be done before the rigid demands of scientific method are satisfied even for the simplest phase of the conclusion involved. It is not expected immediately to launch upon this scientific examination of psychic phenomena until the funds are secured.

"I have hopes of the necessary amount being secured by membership fees. The amount thus far pledged is about $25,000, but the permanent endowment required is $1,000,000."

Plans for the work of the new society are outlined in the first number of its journal, just issued. The publication includes a department of "Incidents" of more or less supposed value to investigators of physical phenomena.—Chicago American.

Paul McArthur's Reply to William John Ward.

To the Editor:—I beg space to reply to our humorous brother, Wm. John Ward, of Clinton, Ia., and to assure him that there was no intent on my part to cast any reflection on the local society at Clinton, or that able worker, Sister Alice C. Barry; in fact, I did not have them in mind when I wrote that reply to his mis-statements regarding the societies here at St. Louis. In order to show him how unfair he had been in quoting rumor as fact, I wrote: "If I were inclined to get back at our good brother and take hearsay rumors regarding affairs at Clinton, Ia., I might retort that a sample dose of your own medicine at home would prove its efficacy."

I made no statement on hearsay evidence (as the brother evidently did in his criticism on St. Louis), but did notify him that I could, if I wished to follow his example. I did not have, however, the local society in mind when when I wrote those words. But were I to repeat gossip it would be (I have no doubt) as unreliable as that quoted by Brother Ward. A large dose of Confucius: "Do not to others what you would not others should do to you, would be a good tonic for both of us.

Brother Ward states in his reply: "Our brother doubts the utility of central temples." I beg his pardon. I never said so. I stated very plainly that I wished there were not only two but twenty, but asked: If these central temples do not co-operate with organization (as has been the case here) how could the brother's plan of perfected organization be realized? The brother's plan of forcing all Spiritualists into the central societies, won't do. You CANNOT DRIVE SPIRITUALISTS, as some have discovered. I may be in favor of a central society; another may not be. He has a right to his opinion, and here at least there are more Spiritualists opposed to the idea than are in favor of it.; so, for the minority to force the majority into their way of thinking, would be a case of the tail wagging the dog.

In regard to my statement that our leaders were elected by a majority of the Spiritualists and were not self-appointed, I did not intend any reflection on the society at Clinton, as the brother seemed to think. He was so lavish with his advice as to who the Missouri Spiritualists should have at the head of affairs, that I gently (to quote the brother) insinuated that we leave that matter to the people interested. When we get so churchly that we have a Pope, I for one, will make a break for for the tall timber. Government for and by the Spiritualists is good enough for yours, very truly,

PAUL McARTHUR.

The System of Philosophy Concerning Divinity.

By J. C. F. Grumbine, B. D., Fellow of the Society of Science, Literature and Arts, London, England. This system is a science which makes practical and demonstrable all of the hidden, psychical powers of the soul.

What is taught is pre-eminently a system—not a theory or a doctrine—but a scientific, practical method of doing the things which mediums do and the prophets did.

Most mail courses are merely books which read like romances or text books which are loaded with dry matter, but which contain little useful and practical knowledge. They also cost from $10 to $100 for ten to twenty lessons. Mr. Grumbine's System is first of all a revelation, and secondly, a science which any person old or young, can grasp and apply. It consists of over fifty lessons and numerous experiments not found elsewhere.

Mr. Grumbine is the pioneer of his work. His college was organized in 1893. Since then thousands all over the world have not only profited by what he taught but copied him and so proved that imitation is the sincerest flattery.

This System will unfold your psychical powers so that you can see clairvoyantly, hear clairaudiently, feel clairsentiently, see and commune with spirits and without losing your self-control or consciousness; and it will teach you how to be successful, prosperous and well. A special series is on the Divine Science of healing.

There will be no interruption in your business, but there will be interruption in hard times and miserable living and a new life and world will be yours. Remember, you can pay cash or installments. When you finish this System you need study none other. It is therefore less expensive because it comprehends all other systems on Theosophy, Spiritualism, Christian Science, Mental Science and Magic. Send stamped, addressed envelope for circulars to J. C. F. GRUMBINE, 24 Strathmore Road, Brookline, Mass.

THE GOSPEL OF GOOD CHEER.

Which Exercises a Spiritualizing Influence in All the Walks of Life.

From primitive and little known Arabia comes a story of genuine heart power and good cheer that in the busy city we may well stop and consider.

Early one morning a sheik, master of a great tribe, started out, unattended, to visit a neighboring sheik to consult relative to some matter of business. Expecting to get to his neighbor before noonday, he failed to take provision with him sufficient for a day's journeying. While driving his dromedary onward as fast as possible, and immersed in his own thoughts, he failed to notice the approach of a sand storm. But soon it broke in its awful fury around him and he lost his way. Night drew on, and out in the desert he was compelled to spend the long hours in which the earth is shrouded in darkness. When morning dawned he endeavored to find his way forward, but was unable to do so. Then for three days and three nights he was lost in this desert. On the fifth day he was found by his servants, who had become alarmed concerning his safety at a point midway between his own oasis and the one to which he was going.

Tenderly they bore the sheik to his own tents, and for days his reason hung in the balance. But when at last he was recovered of his illness he demanded that he be carried to the place where he had been found, and there he vowed a vow that every morning as long as he lived there should be carried to that place a bottle of water, a bunch of grapes and a flagon of wine. It was the action of a Great-heart, who had been saved from a terrible death, desirous of helping other travelers in the desert.

As the years rolled by, according to the tradition, many lives were saved by his thoughtful and kindly action.

Whether the tradition be true or not, there carries in it a delicate and suggestive lesson—the man who has been saved from death should in turn become a savior of others.

Dear to the memory is the kindly face and form of the old village preacher in the old New England town which has sent forth many men who have become notable in the affairs that have to do with our native land. He was of venerable appearance and recalled those beautiful words of Goldsmith in the Deserted Village, relative to the village preacher:

"As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale below, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the raging clouds were spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

Everybody who knew him loved "good old Dr. March," as he was called. Though stern was his theology, yet his heart was as tender as a child's and for the boy or the girl who had gone wrong there were only words of pity and love, and many an erring boy or girl was saved by his sympathy and kindness. In his youth he had been hot-headed. He had known the blighting power of wrong in his life. He had been wild and careless. But brought to think on the error of his ways he had given himself unreservedly to the reclamation of his brother man. Like the Arabian sheik, every day he sent out the bottle of water, the bunch of grapes and the wine for disheartened and weary travelers in the desert life. He it was who wrote:

"Let none hear you idly saying 'There is nothing I can do';
While the souls of men are dying there is work for me and you."

A veritable Great-heart, with his gospel of good cheer he turned many to righteousness, and his crown "will shine with many stars."

The world needs the help of those who, through suffering, have learned sympathy. It needs caresses more than curses, needs sympathy more than sarcasm, needs love more than lashings, needs sweet wine and spikenard more than sharp whips and scorpions.

There has been a time in your life when you needed a friend, a counselor, a guide. You were brought to the port of a noble life not by the punishments you received, but through the gospel of good cheer, exemplified in the life of one who lifted you up and cast not the contumelious stone. To-day you know a boy, a girl, in your neighborhood who is doing what you were at their age. In the light of your experiences, knowing the value of a good word of cheer, give it to them. Let not your pride, your prejudice or your passion stands between you and one whom you may help.

Give to others as you have received of the gospel of good cheer, and you shall be in the world "a shelter in the time of storm," "a covert from the wind," and "the shadow of a rock in a dry and thirsty land."

Spread with joyous hand the gospel of good cheer and your reward will not be long delayed.

ORGAN FOR FIRST SPIRITUAL UNION.

In Memory of Her Son Mrs. Annie M. Cobb Makes Gift.

In memory of her son, Lloyd M. Cobb, Jr., Mrs. Annie M. Cobb, of this city, has presented to the Spiritualist Union, of Norwich, Ct., a beautiful Mason & Hamlin pipe organ, which represents a gift of some $1500. Dedicatory exercises will be held at the Spiritual Academy Sunday next, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, repeating the program, which is of a musical character, in the evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Announcement of the gift by Mrs. Cobb was made last Sunday after services by Rev. Albert P. Blinn, and the news served to overwhelm the congregation assembled and many eyes were filled with tears, so overjoyed were the members. It has long been the desire of the Union to install a handsome new pipe organ and to have their wish ratified found them unprepared.

At the dedicatory services Sunday a finely arranged program will be given, Organist Charles A. Dowsett, presiding at the organ. The pastor, Rev. Albert P. Blinn, will have charge of the program.

The featureof the program is the solo, "Surely the Curtain Is Lifting," which was written by Charles A. Dowsett and will be sung by Mrs. Geo W. Beebe. The song is well written and is especially pleasing.

The gift of the organ was inspired by sincere devotion to the Union by deceased. He had written several times to the Banner of Light and other publications which were very anxious to get his contributions. The organ is a handsome addition to the church and adds materially to the interior. It is two manual, pedal bass and has a bench and chair with rail and music rack, all in quartered cathedral oak, gilt pipe top and has five octaves and stops running throughout and containing 462 pipes. It is entirely Gothic in style and on the front has a quartered oak table on which is a sterling inscription plate bearing the following: "Given by Mrs. Annie M. Cobb in Memory of Her son, Lloyd M. Cobb, Jr.

The organ is located in the east of the edifice in the center of the organ platform, the choir being located on the north and the blower gallery on the south, the blower being hidden by a screen which compares favorably with the other furnishings of the edifice. On the platform is an Oriental rug and the furnishings in general compare admirably with the organ and paintings throughout. On the rail is a red silk velour curtain.

The regular Academy choir, which is a voluntary one, will be assisted during the dedicatory exercises Sunday by a female quartette composed of Miss Haidee Blackstone, Miss Annie Leopold, Mrs. Chas. S. Twist and Mrs. George W. Beebe. Arrangements have been made to have a musical program the first Sunday of each month, from 7 to 7:30 o'clock in the evening.—Evening Record.

SPIRITUALISTS BEWARE.

Toxic Effect of Anger—Creates Chemical Poison—by Marian Ainsworth White.

Death frequently follows [Says the Chicago Tribune] a sudden fit of anger. Persons who are otherwise sensible and even philosophical indulge at times in this suicidal and profitless pastime. The Emperor Nerva died at the age of 66 from fever resulting from a fit of anger. Paul III., who occupied the papal throne from 1534 to 1549, and who was considered one of the most intelligent and liberal, as well as just of popes, died from a sudden fit of anger while upbraiding Cardinal Alessandro Farnese, who had proven false to his friends and benefactor.

Famous Men Died of Anger.

The emperor of Valentinian, while addressing a deputation of backsliding Germans, allowed his angry emotions to get the upper hand of his common sense and fell dead ere he had finished speaking. The celebrated English surgeon, John Hunter, indulging in an angry dispute with one of his colleagues at St. George's hospital and dropped dead at the feet of him who had been the cause of the resentful and bitter remarks. The Russian surgeon, Baddawoski, being angered at the awkwardness of an assistant during a surgical operation, gave free vent to a fit of anger and expired without a moment's warning.

The milk as well as the flesh of animals that have died while in a rage has been found, upon analysis, to contain elements of poison, and many an innocent babe has been made dangerously ill by nursing at the mother's breast immediately after that mother had indulged in a fit of frienzy or anger. Neither the chemist nor the bacteriologist has yet been able to demonstrate the particular poison or germ that renders the milk toxic under the conditions, but that a poison, and a very active and energetic one, exists is unquestionable.

Anger Poison Generated by Nerves.

Death during a fit of anger may be produced by a toxic product developed by the undue excitement as much as to the play of the emotions upon the nerve centers of the heart. Little children should be taught in earliest infancy to control their angry passions. A parent smiling approvingly at what he is pleased to term the "spunkiness" of his offspring, without making any effort to reprove or to correct the outburst of ill temper, is guilty of wanton neglect in storing up much unpleasantness for both himself and the child in future.

"Anger is a stone cast into a wasp's nest," reads the Malabar proverb, and how often the angry word stirs up strife and discord and contentions that keep up a continual unpleasant buzzing until, like wasps disturbed in their nests, they alight upon the disturber, bringing a sting that wounds his own personality.

"Be slow to wrath," might be a cherished guide at any and every period of life. But as years run their course, particularly if accompanied by a feeble condition of body, a conscious tendency of fits of anger should induce habits of strenuous self-control. This control, however, is not acquired in a day. The imprisoned fire of anger but waits for the kindling breath of provocation, and each time it is confronted by the latter a calm exterior, even though the spirit be at white heat, will win a victory without either party to the strife being a loser.

How Child May Be Cured.

A bright 3 year old child, who was given to passionate outbursts of resentful anger, each time her wishes were thwarted, was one morning suddenly lifted to the mirror, with the mother's admonition: "Look at yourself!" Immediately the child's resentful face changed, and nestling to her mother, who wisely refrained from saying another word, regarded the ebullition of temper, she, with an apologetic hug, softly soothed away the resentment.

Some weeks afterward, during which time there was a marked change for the better in the temperament of the child, the mother had occasion to reprove the little one for an act of disobedience, using, perhaps, unnecessary warmth of temper at the time. Without hesitation the little one seized her by the hand and urged her toward the mirror.

"'Ook at 'orself!" she exclaimed, her childish voice as severe as her strength permitted, at the same time struggling desperately to keep the angry lines from her own face by puckering her lips into a form from which issued a succession of soft, nonchalant oos.

The lesson had been taught, learned, and retaught, and who shall say how far reaching its influence? If one can only be brought to understand the toxic effect of anger upon the whole sensorial system of the individual, resulting, as it frequently does, in sickness and even death, each would be more at peace with his neighbor, with the community, and with the world at large.—Marian Ainsworth White.

SPIRITUALISTS ATTENTION

The First Society of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists.

To our friends:— It is our aim and purpose to unite as many of the Spiritualists of Chicago as possible, into a body so strong that they may demand the same rights and privileges accorded all organizations, irrespective of their beliefs.

The first steps for the betterment of mankind is always organization. Every successful movement, all effective work that has ever been accomplished to that end, has been through organized effort. Individual opinions are denounced and ridiculed; individuals, to become a power, MUST UNITE.

From the beginning of history, human beings have struggled for their rights, and what seemed to them justice. Every century has its history of failures and successes, but humanity still strives, and the heart is ever buoyant with the hope of finding the truth at last. The river of progress has no stagnant waters, ever changing, ever changing, ever leaping and rushing to the ocean of its destiny.

The history of Spiritualism shows, in common with all other progressive movements, its record of failures as well as the record of good accomplished. The most successful form of organization the world has ever known is the FRATERNAL. FRATERNITY in its broadest sense, includes Friendship, Loyalty, Fidelity, Truth, Charity, Justice, Brotherly Love and all the Virtues which have a tendency to unite, and are therefore more potent than those things which divide us. The time has come when organization, founded upon Fraternity, Spiritualism with its philosophy and its phenomena, and religion, ought to be successful; not the commonly accepted theological religion, but religion as a recognition of a force, power or spirit that is superior to all forms of existence, animate, inanimate, physical or spiritual; this recognition leading to deeds of kindness, charity and unselfishness, and words of love and sympathy, which in turn constitutes worship; public worship being simply a public service devoted to the teachings of these principles.

Spiritualism is a form of religion, that when rightly understood and applied, means the reducing of evil and crime to a minimum, because there can be nothing done in secret, for our loved ones and friends on the spirit side of life are cognizant of all our acts. The old saying, "Dead men tell no tales," is not true. There is a spirit force which is the source of all life on all planes; which sustains and perpetuates all things by a law so diversified as to meet all conditions of the physical, mental and spiritual worlds. The name of this spirit force is immaterial, as names are only a mental interpretation of a fact, and may vary according to the education and environment of the interpreter, while the fact is always the same.

All human beings are brothers and sisters, because all have one common origin of physical and spiritual life. Spiritual things may be spiritually discerned; but human intelligences, being a part of the physical organism, and not able to attain to a perfect knowledge of life in the spiritual planes, hence, there should be a broad charity for all beliefs, allowing each individual his own conception of what cannot be positive knowledge, but all working in harmony for the general uplifting on the material plane and spiritual unfoldment.

All matters pertaining to the spiritual are of the highest order of conception, hence should be held in reverence and sanctity; and all approach to the spirit plans, whether by worship, study or phenomena, should be with feelings of sobriety and sacredness, inspired by spirit desire for development and upliftment.

Because we believe in religion as defined; because we believe in Spiritualism, and that its truth has been repeatedly demonstrated to the world; that its teachings and philosophy, if applied to our daily lives, would make us better men and women, better fathers and mothers, better citizens in every walk of life; because we believe that our spirit friends on the other side of life, can and do, under favorable circumstances and conditions, demonstrate to us their continued existence and their watchful care over us; because we believe that the highest form of organization is the FRATERNAL, we are banding ourselves together in this a common Brotherhood, associating ourselves in this manner for the purpose of mutual helpfulness, improvement and unfoldment.

A cordial invitation is extended the general public to meet with us the second Sunday in January, to dedicate our Hall (Hygea), corner Ogden avenue and Robey street. Our initiation service will be exemplified during the afternoon session. The best talent to be obtained in Chicago, speakers, mediums and musical stars will take part. Come prepared to join with us in making Chicago the CENTER of the Spiritual world.

See next weex's Progressive Thinker for a full program. Fraternally,

ALEX CAIRD, President.

Transition of a Kentucky Veteran.

The passing of Jonathan Barnes of Newport, Ky., into the higher life, requires more than a brief notice. This fine old gentleman was one of the pioneer Spiritualists of Kentucky, and devoted many years of active and intelligent service to the establishing of the cause in that state. The first Spiritualist meeting held in Kentucky was held at his home, 51 York street, in Newport, nearly half a century ago, and he organized the first Spiritualist society in that state.

Being mediumistic himself, he developed in the home circle his niece and nephew, those two excellent mediums, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, now of Chicago, and Mr. Charles Barnes, of Warsaw, Ind., who have been before the public for many years and have been noted for the honesty as well as the satisfactory quality of their mediumship

Mr. Barnes was born in Yorkshire, England, and came to this country when quite a young man. He settled in Newport, Ky., where he engaged successfully in business. During all the time he lived here he was actively interested in the cause of Spiritualism, giving both his services and money. He took especial delight in the beautiful new Spiritualist Temple in Newport and was a firm friend of the president of our society there—Mrs. Sarah Charles.

After retiring from business life he made his home with his niece, Mrs. Smith, of Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio, where he died. Before death came he was weary with his 84 years of mortal life, and was eager and anxious to enter into the life immortal. When the Newport society, in company with Mrs. Charles, visited him shortly before his transition, he told them how he wished his funeral conducted and the assurance was given him that his wishes should be carried out. His funeral services were held at the Spiritualist Temple in Newport, and the discarded body was laid away in Evergreen Cemetery.

Brother Barnes was a good man, a faithful Spiritualist, and a true friend of mediums. He will be long and affectionately remembered by Newport Spiritualists. K. W. GROVE

LABOR SONG.

Work while you may,
For the night cometh fast;
Work all the day,
For it may be your last.

Gather your sheaves
From the harvest of Time;
For the falling leaves
Follow fast in their prime.

The dew-blooms of Earth
They will last, but a day,
But the soul-light of Truth
Knoweth not of decay.

So gather ye gems
Where the dark waters roll,
What you win you may wear,
'Tis the law of the Soul.

EXTREME OPTIMISM.

There Is Evil as Well as Good in the World.

Some of our optimistic friends delight to paint in glowing colors the beauties and splendor of life here and hereafter. With them there is no shadow, no sorrow, no gloom, but what is vailed gracefully in love, sunshine and goodness, since death has lost its sting, the grave its victory, and Spiritualism has abolished hell forever. Yet they interpose the wise warning as of old, "what a man soweth, that shall he also reap," in other words, if he do evil he must reap evil. But for the optimist there is no evil; all is good. What, then, is the warning for that implies some kind of judgment—good for good, and evil for evil—and if justice is done, there must be some punishment for evil doers, and such a punishment would be and is hell.

So, after all, Spiritualism has not abolished hell, it has only revealed our foolish notions concerning it. We know now that hell is within, burning, without fire or brimstone, for an indefinite time, and not for eternity, until we make atonement and every wrong is righted.

There is, after all, a dark side of life and it demands our serious consideration. Though I am not a confirmed pessimist, yet I would not dive my head into the sand and then imagine it does not exist, because I can't see it; but rather turn on the search light of reason and reveal its facts, and apply the proper remedy.

I often wonder at the tenacity with which some people cling to sophism and boldly deny the existence of evil, evil spirits and obsession, in spite of the amount of overwhelming evidence against them.

Others, again, do not deny evil, but say they, evil is only a mask concealing the good. Now, if this be so, then good is only a mask to conceal evil, and all that is accomplished in this nonessential absurdity is to change the name, but not the quality.

If there were no evil there would be no need for a law of justice with its punishment, hell, nor would there be any need for the law of progress, as there would be nothing to progress from.

If evil exists and men are capable of doing evil, and the change at death does not change his propensities, he may still continue to sow tares; he is a spirit now and sowing tares is evil, so he is an evil spirit, and may remain such for generations, and avoid the law of justice, punishment or hell, until some one can approach and help to reform him, or himself gets sin-sick from the very excess of evil so long indulged in. Now where do the multitudes go who are constantly swept out of earth life?

They mostly stay right here, haunt their former resorts and associates, often unaware of the change, and still in possession of all their unhallowed desires and passions, ever seek to satisfy their now intensified cravings through sensitive mortals, utterly ignorant of other's influence.

And this is the cause of crimes, suicides and obsessions, often termed insanity, which baffles the efforts of experts to assign causes.

This influence as exerted over mortals may be either temporary or permanent, of a mild or vicious nature, by impression, obsession or possession; and as the laws of control are for all, they can apply them and do so, either for good or evil, according to desires and ability.

Many good and noble characters roam among the countless hordes of aimless, homeless and helpless spirits; all are chained to this ignoble doom by ignorance. They have been fed on foolish doctrines, theories and opinions in earth life, and now failing to realize their fondest hopes, are sick at heart with disappointed expectations; they will and do influence and impress their individual idiosyncrasy on anyone whose magnetism will blend with their own or can be overcome. But I rejoice in the fact that at last light is turned on this most important, but unpopular subject by the spirit of Prof. M. Faraday, and his associates of high intelligence.

I would advise any fair-minded seeker after truth to read his pamphlets, No. 3 and 6; they cost but 11 cents apiece (through the office of this paper) and contain a wealth of information on these subjects, but little dreamed of, much less understood, even by advanced thinkers.

These books fully correspond with our weekly experiences in missionary work among spirits in darkness, which furnish absolute proof of Mr. Faraday's books and our own assertions. They explain many perplexities of life, the cause and perpetuation of evil, and indicate the mortal's duty and power to deliver the spirits from prison. The truth alone can set them free, not the dabbling in fanciful error.

G. A. WOLTER.

A LESSON ON MAN'S POWERS.

Their Gradual Unfoldment and Use, and His Commensurate Happiness as Reward for Services.

We have taught you that a soul as a germ or seed, can exist without form, but becomes individualized only by being incorporated in accord with nature's laws. Soul builds the outer and inner forms and thus becomes an individual centre, an immortal as well as a mortal being rendered ethereally stable by virtue of the substances drawn from nature through the outer form.

The soul is the envelope of the ego, or life and spirit germ. At the conjunction of male and female forces, said envelope opens, motion is started and increases in the ratio of the imminent law, but it is ever and in all begetings, that the mortal and immortal form development are started simultaneously by the universal spirit in the degree in which soul germs and form building are rated in accordance with the stratic qualities of chemical and electrical substances which constitute the compound of said life or soul germ.

The intellectual and moral attainments during a man's or woman's sojourn on earth, depend to a great extent upon the condition prevailing at the time of conception. Soul and spirit forces of high degree can be drawn at the supreme moment, but carelessness is all too prevalent at such times and the immense responsibility of parenthood is but slightly felt and regarded, from which results all imbecility and really all immorality and its attendant vices with which humanity is cursed. Here reform must begin in order to make this world a place of delight.

This earth is a grand manufacturing plant. It has not only finite, but infinite resources to draw wealth from for its operations in the realms of mind and matter. Each age is booked on the great world canvas to accomplish certain improvements. These are accomplished without man's realization that he is spurred on as well as invisibly sustained in his efforts, but when he seeks to go beyond the stakes, a restraining power is felt that says in substance "so far and no farther." Order and regularity of achievement by each generation are supremely maintained.

In all of nature's unfoldments and operations, the wisdom of Supreme government is beheld, each part having its relations to something beyond it, and the whole is operated for man, the royal heir's benefit.

All of nature's operations are intended to serve as object lessons for man to learn from and profit by. What a grand lesson can be learned by contemplating the beauty of land and water and the currents and atmospheres upon which the inhabitants of both land and sea are dependent. It may be held that the dry land serves as boundaries for the oceans, but it is certainly clear to all students that a number of agencies combine their efforts to produce their currents.

Behold, how the mountain chains co-operate with the constantly drawn forces from the elements to mingle with the currents of streams, rivers and oceans. Thus these currents become atmospheres of the deep and work in reciprocal regularity with the life streams contained in all waters for the sustaining of the life of its creatures; also the established interchange of currents between the waters of the tropics and those of the polar regions. It is a power for good in its interchanging effects, for while the polar currents unable to break through the concentrated mass by which it is opposed, dives under the bed of the mighty stream and hastens on toward the tropic, yet by sounding it can be recognized in the West Indies by the cold label of its origin that still attaches to it.

Here is a beautiful lesson for man. He can, if necessity demands, dive beneath the world's popular currents and roam in the depths of arduous duty or extreme sorrows, but the label of his true worth is upon him, he comes forth strong and greatly benefited himself and the world, too, is benefited because of his experiences and services.

Behold, how the Supreme Architect divided earth's globe. Even as dry land and water were needed for specific ends. These ends are to generate the necessary varieties of electric force to correspond to every particle of matter and prepare the soil and elements for the bringing forth of trees, fruits and vegetation and animal life, which are as much a necessity as they are for the food and comfort they furnish for mankind. See, all nature's manifestations work together grandly for the purposed results of Divine contemplation.

Each world age produces its prominent men and women. They are the marks on the highway of the world's progress. From remotest beginnings to distant becomings, the stakes are driven at specified places where projective lines for unfoldments are stretched. Thus what has been takes place again when such stakes are reached, the actors to render the necessary numbers are born, aided and succeed in their parts.

GOOD BYE, OLD YEAR.

Not long the good Old Year will stay,
A few more hours will end its day;
We are not glad to part with him,
Our hearts are sad, our eyes are dim.

Before he goes we still would ask
One favor more, if not a task;
He'll grant it with good will and cheer
Before we welcome the New Year.

Our burdens kindly will he take,
And keep them fast, for pity's sake;
Our griefs are many and untold,
Take them Old Year, and strongly hold.

We ask the pleasures we have had,
If good, to last; but not the bad;
Long let us keep, with his good will,
Enough to find enjoyment still.

We take him fondly by the hand,
He has the best at our command;
We say "Good Bye," and drop a tear,
For our dear friend, the good Old Year.

See further notice of the book on other pages of the paper, and then send for it at once. By so doing you can keep up with the advancing procession.

The World Has Never Seen the Like!

At Great Expense we have secured the copyright of Mr. Ghandi's translation of the "Unknown Life of Jesus Christ." It is to be sent forth as a gift to our subscribers, as set forth in the following:

It is an absolute fact. We are enabling our subscribers to form a valuable library at a nominal cost. One of them writes:

"I have your THIRTEEN premium books, which if I had bought in the open market at the usual price would have cost me at least $15. Sending each year for one copy at the cost of 25 cents, the whole thirteen volumes have cost me exactly $3.25. As you paid the postage thereon, which amounts to not less than $1.40, all you receive for the Thirteen copies I have, is exactly $1.85, causing you to lose in the aggregate each year a large amount of money in order to benefit your subscribers."

The above is an accurate estimate. All we have received for the thirteen premium books when they have been ordered one at a time for thirteen consecutive years, is approximately $1.85, a little more than the price of a single book.

We now offer as a GIFT OUTRIGHT, one of the most valuable books of the present age—THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST. In order to obtain this book, you must send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay the postage thereon, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year. Every orthodox Christian should read it, and thus learn the whole truth in regard to Jesus. Remember it is a GIFT to you on the TERMS MENTIONED above. We expect to distribute at least Twenty Thousand copies as GIFTS.

THAT MYSTERIOUS WHITE WALL.

An Incident in a Welsh Preacher's Experience.

About a quarter of a century ago, late one Saturday afternoon, I started on foot from my place of residence at Rhydfendigaid, Cardiganshire, Wales, to go seven miles to a place called Cwmyrtwith, where I was to preach the following day. Having walked four miles, I left the main road and took a carriage driveway through a gentleman's park. Half a mile further I left this driveway again and took a footpath through the woods.

It was then getting dark, and it became so dark that I could not see three yards ahead. There was no moon, no star, no speck of a clear sky. I lost the path and had no idea which way north, south, east or west was. Feeling with my walking stick, I perceived that I was in a nursery, where in the holes of recently uprooted young trees, I often fell, and to make matters worse, I knew I was in close proximity to the perpendicular rocky bank of a deep brook that emptied into the river Yrtwith, or the banks of the Yrtwith itself. All the time I kept revolving in my mind a Welsh hymn, of which the following is a rough translation:

"God's guardian angel always surrounds
Those who their God do fear;
He keeps them; safer are their bounds,
Than castles most secure."

At last, after groping in the dark about an hour, I saw something white on my right hand side. Feeling it with my stick and hand. I found it to be a solid stone wall about 35 inches high and 18 inches thick. I climbed on it, and rested a little while. On the other side of it was the driveway close to the bridge which crossed that brook. Then I knew where I was. I walked over the bridge, followed, the driveway to the main road and arrived late at Cwmyrtwith.

Monday morning I returned the same way to survey by daylight the ground on which I had been lost. Where was the white stone wall near the bridge? It was not there; neither anything else resembling it. The nursery and the pitfalls were all there, but not a trace of the white wall which guided me to the right road.

On relating my experience to the Rev. Thos. Edwards of Cwmyrtwith, he said in answer, "You must have dreamt at that time. There is no white wall nor anything like a white wall near the place."

"But," I answered, "I am sure I saw it and felt it, and climbed over it to the road at the end of the bridge."

"Well," he said, "the only explanation I can think of is that that wall was built by them to get you out of your trouble."

"What do you mean by them?" I asked.

"The angels of God," was his answer. "What! Do you think the angels would build up a solid stone wall like that for my benefit, and take it away before Monday morning?"

"Why did you have that hymn revolving in your mind?" was the reply. "Do you take your hymns and others of God's promises as of no avail? Your hymns are much better than yourself. Learn, young man, from this incident in your life, it will be best for you in all emergencies, to be led by the guiding angels." KYMRO.

Some impose upon the world that they believe that which they do not; others more in number, make themselves believe that they believe, not being able to penetrate into what it is to believe.—Montaigne.

BOOMING, BOOMING!

The Progressive Thinker is now on a TIDAL WAVE of success. It is BOOMING from every standpoint, and last week the receipts exceeded any previous week in December. The continued prosperity of the paper demonstrates most conclusively that it is proceeding along successful lines.

Never before in the whole history of Spiritualism has a paper achieved the success gained by The Progressive Thinker, and that, too, with the whole rotten fake element and their sympathizers arrayed against it with ALL THE POISON their lips or pens could command.

We expect great results to flow from this TIDAL WAVE, and we believe that Spiritualists are aroused as never before, and determined that bogus tests, artificial toggery, legerdemain, fraud and deception SHALL NOT be considered a part of Spiritualism. In view of this important fact every one of the leading speakers and mediums from Maine to California, have, judging from results, selected The Progressive Thinker for their SPECIAL ORGAN in the West, and therein will be found their notices from time to time, and their views on various leading subjects. They realize fully that their names would be soiled by appearing in the Organ of the Fakes, of this city, which has exploited Elsie Reynolds, who has been exposed time after time, arrayed in material toggery, and personating a spirit. In view of all these facts is it any wonder that The Progressive Thinker is on a TIDAL WAVE OF SUCCESS?

Good News, Spiritualists.

The Universe Is Not Running Down---So Says the Greatest Scientist, Prof. Edgar Larkin.

True, energy does seem to vanish from the reach of man and become non-available for eons of time; but it will all re-appear. The word entropy was invented to denote the disappearance of energy. It covered whole multitudes of scientific sins; served its day, and may last twenty years longer. Recovery is certain, for nature has a pulse, a circulation and is very much alive. No trace of consciousness has so far been detected in all that vast portion of the sidereal universe within range of the most powerful telescopes outside of living organisms here on earth. No signs of mental activity are found within the immense sphere whose one hundred million suns appear on sensitive plates long exposed to the entire celestial vault in the largest telecameras.

Mind, at present known to science, can only be detected in animals whose bodies and brains are made of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, carbon, iron, sulphur, phosphorus, and a few other phases of matter held together by feeble affinity. The seat of volition, if it exists in the stellar universe, is unknown, but all known matter acts as though its constituent corpuscles are endowed with directivity; that is, they seem to know when and where to go, what to do, and how to place and arrange themselves into atoms, molecules and phases of matter for long called elements. Corpuscles are those excessively minute bodies whose properties are so accurately described by Prof. J. J. Thomson. The mass of one of these is one seven-hundredth that of an atom of hydrogen. I am unable to decide whether inherent directivity is the equivalent of inherent knowledge, but cannot detect any difference. Corpuscular attraction and repulsion do the work of the universe, so far as can be seen.

Science is 300 years of age, very young indeed. A number of laws of nature have been discovered. They are rigid, constant and invariable in the extreme, absolute and so far as can now be discovered from our limitited view, eternal. Now these laws have been subjected to the most accurate scrutiny and study possible. They have been compared with each other in every conceivable relation and bearing over and over again by the ablest men in the world and this research has been approached from different directions and standpoints. The only conclusion reached is that matter directs itself. Oxygen and hydrogen direct themselves to form water. There is no dissipation of energy; no final degradation as implied in entropy. A billion suns pour what we call heat into frigid space; it vanishes from human scrutiny; and men once said, "This energy is lost"; "suns will lose all their heat and light"; and that "the universe is a dying organism."

In speaking of the time after our sun loses all its heat, I used to write: "The earth would still revolve and forever around a frigid sun in melancholy circuits and count off lifeless, useless years." And so on. But now, there is better reason for writing, "the earth will make smiling journeys around a living sun and count off happy years forever." This is because Crookes passed high potential electricity through high vacuum tubes; and Thomson greatly extended these same researches into the very depths of Nature. And Arrhenius, with his marvelous studies in radiation. For the pressure of energy, say that of light, keeps up a universal cosmical circulation of corpuscles from sun to sun and from suns to planets. For skilled mentalists are unable to even start a train of thoughts that can hope to realize the meaning of the word end, or word beginning.

Corpuscles are carriers, and workers, builders of matter and disintegrators. They are alive, and when nascent, that is, on the way from one atom to another, they rage like incredible furies and move with the known velocity potential of the universe, 186,000 miles per second. So far as the present limits of brain power are concerned, this speed is infinite. Perhaps one faint glimpse of the mighty magnitude of the universe may be had from trying to think—say during one minute—about this motion, within the modern maze. And it is millions of times more intricate than that of crete. Its winding ways, long dim corridors, and obscure avenues, passages and rows of doors leading to other paths and lanes are elaborate beyond all computation and conception.

A devouring minataurus is hidden in one of its deep recesses. This withering monster is made up of our own thoughts personified. The problems awaiting solution on all sides are so arduous that they seem about to devour the very brain, or the seat of thought. I have many books saying that the mind of man is really illimitable and capable of infinite expansion. If so, and the tremendous discoveries in recent mathematical science, astronomy, physics, spectroscopy and chemistry, seem to justify the assertion, then the time is now here for immediate, enormous and unheard of mental expansion. For the labyrinth is so extremely complex.

A new principia is now due; a general restatement of science. For space-pressure, circulation, interchange between suns, and cosmical tension, are worthy of a principia as great as the first—and greater. For if the mighty brain of Newton could think again, and were he to come into a modern astrophysical observatory, stupendous thoughts would rise like a tide and surge into a new principia. Could he look into a telespectroscope and see the actual shifting from side to side of the Fraunhofer lines in the solar spectrum, due to approach and recession of flying suns in the line of sight, toward and from our sun and earth; he would seize a pen and the fires of his intellect would burn and blaze into words along the paper.

Or could he have been in the World's Congress of Arts and Sciences in St. Louis, and heard Arrhenius tell how the wave energy of light presses against minute spheres of molecular dimensions in space, just balancing solar gravity in some cases, exceeding it in others and falling short in still others, he would have been amazed. Some particles in a state of equilibrium float in set distances from the sun. These form the corona. Others fall. These help maintain the heat. Still others are shot to within the attraction of other suns, fall thereon and set up heat. And thus the heat of the universe of suns is perpetual.

There is no entropy—no degradation of energy; no running down like weights in a clock. Circulation is as perpetual as the flow of water over Niagara. The eyes of fossil fish discovered in perfect condition in ancient rock, in strata deposited hundreds of millions, if not a billion years ago, have pupils of diameter such as to admit a quantity and intensity of solar light, now received on earth. Two inferences may be drawn from this fact: The intensity of sunlight one billion years ago was the same as it now is. And the air was as transparent as at present. Fossil insects with perfect wings have been discovered in excessively ancient rock. These wings are in area and thinness just able to support the weight of the flying creatures in air of the now existing density. The same is true of fossil birds. Therefore, the sun has been radiating energy at a constant rate for, let us say, one thousand million years at least. Hence it received energy from outside, for the heat derived from the total potential of the known quantity of matter in the sun is so insignificant that it may be omitted from this vast quantity of radiant energy. For a time so short as one hundred million years may be ignored. From the kinetic theory, the duration of radiation at the present rate, from subsidence of the sun from a gaseous sphere of infinite diameter to its present diameter, is about twenty million years.

Corpuscles, atoms, molecules, and spheres still larger than molecules are forever in flux and flow between all suns. This appears to be the trend of physical science to-day. It will require a discovery of vast magnitude and of mighty import to upset it. But then the pressure is electrical or electro-magnetic; and the corpuscles are either electricity pure and simple, or its carriers. At present, no conception is had of origins; and some mentalists assert that our minds in existing conditions cannot think of the origin of anything or entity. Of course not, for the two words origin and beginning are of almost identical meaning. That is, they make the same impression on the mind. At present, both are unknowable.

An important question rises, how great a strain can brain and body withstand in the process of infinite expansion? At no time within the period of human evolution have both been subjected to such severe tension of servitude. Will the minotaurus of intense thought consume brain cells? The science of electricity is a wilderness beset with intricate mathematics. So is chemistry, while astronomy is a deep labyrinth of numbers. Space is interminable and would be equal in dimensions to thought if that ever becomes infinite. It is far from infinity now, for the most powerful brain is too weak to think of the velocity of radiating energy. Or, of space, for a body moving with a speed of one mile per minute would require the enormous period of 48,553,000 years to go the nearest neighbor our sun has. This distance is the astronomer's yard stick in daily use to measure incredible distances far and away beyond.

Every star is a sun, every sun a star. Our sun is a little star, although it contains 333,426 times more matter than the earth. The fact that a corpuscle is only one seven-hundredth of the mass of an atom of hydrogen, would surprise Newton and Dalton, for no brain can think of the mass or dimensions of the hydrogen unit.

The new name of the earth is cosmical corpuscle; it is so unspeakably minute in comparison with the quantity of matter now visible to that eye—that wonderful eye—mathematics; but invisible in any telescope that human hands can make. The possibilities of modern mathematics are so enormous that one stands in sheer astonishment when looking at the great mathematicians. I stood in mute amazement when merely looking at them in the World's Congress of Mathematicians at St. Louis in 1904. The most powerful telecamera in existence reveals one hundred million suns in the entire sky on 25,878 negatives. The combined mass of the entire 100,000,000 is so insignificant in comparison with the quantity of invisible matter, that it may be ignored. It has been shown, by mathematics that there is in existence matter enough to make thirty-two billion suns like ours! And what is one hundred million in comparison! If our earth should be called nothing, the new name would be as nearly correct as the name atom. So it is now called a corpuscle, as it does not seem nice to call it nothing. One hundred million worlds like the earth, each inhabited, could come to end at once and nature would not hear of the minute event. Place a book on a table; lift it one inch and replace. In so doing you disturb at least 2,000,000 particles of dust. Each is larger in proportion to the quantity of dust in the room you may be in, than the earth is to the quantity of matter seen by mathematics but invisible to the most powerful camera or the eye-end of the largest telescope.

The standing marvel and wonder is, how can beings like men on a world so unspeakably small as the earth find out all these things. The mind of a great mathematician is an insoluble mystery. A few speculations may be made. How would it do to say: "Nothing exists but electrons? In six years I have not seen anything in print to contradict the assertion. At all events, each discovery made minute by minute seems to warrant this unheard of statement. This is an easy way of saying that the base of the entire universe is electrical. This kind of talk is not considered "wild" at present. Suns, according to this modern concept of matter are sinks into which corpuscles flow only to be shot out. Suns are eddies or pools in the vast cosmical space-ocean of electrons. Corpuscles flow in and out of these forever. From this, the earth will always exist and revolve around the sun which will pour forth energy at its present rate also "forever." All must join in the work of making the earth—our home, a beautiful garden.

But the most strenuous, brain-curdling and overwhelming conception that ever entered the mind of man is that each electron is possessed of directivity—knows where to go—what to do.

The State Missionary in Oklahoma.

We commenced our work at Walter. We held meetings five successive evenings. Brother Henry Nash made it possible for these meetings to be held. We commenced with small audiences, but closed with the opera house full.

Our next place was Lawton. Bro. Parmeter was the hub in the wheel creating conditions for the meetings there. The good Angel of Love, Peace and Success, was with us, and all obstacles were overcome, and the Spiritual Church of Light was organized, with an outlook of success.

From Lawton to Headrick; our first two meetings were a marked success; then came the heavy rains. Good Brother and Sister Miller made these meetings possible. It was our purpose to organize a society at Headrick, but the elements declared otherwise.

Our next point was Perry. Here we found a good many Spiritualists and many honest investigators. Bro. E. T. Oden made it possible for the state missionary to visit this place. Our audiences were outgrowing the capacity of the court house, so our last three meetings were held in the large and commodious opera house, which was well filled. We closed our work with these good people by helping them organize a society, the Spiritualist Church of Perry, with a good outlook for much good to be accomplished in the near future, and with E. T. Oden as president, and Miss Lula Carpenter as secretary.

From Perry we went to Wellston. Here we were met by Doctor Stansbury, and taken eight miles in the country. Dr. Stansbury was the creative force, causing these meetings to be held. He is a physician of marked ability, and a Spiritualist of the highest type. He lives in a community strictly orthodox, but he is not afraid to let his light shine for fear he will lose a patient. We held four successive meetings in the school house, with large crowds in attendance. Our meeting on Sunday was immediately after the Sunday-school in the morning. Every man, woman and child remained to hear my lecture. Standing-room was at a premium. I was challenged by a good Campbellite brother for a debate, and accepted the same, and told him to name his time.

The good Doctor Stansbury hopes to be able to perfect an organization soon. I shall visit these good people again on a return trip, and will probably hold meetings in Wellston and other near-by towns.

In three of the above named places, C. S. Simmons, the state president, met us for a short time, giving much help to the meetings and cause in many ways.

The state board is in perfect harmony, working unselfishly, and most of them making many personal sacrifices for the upbuilding of the cause of true Spiritualism in Oklahoma.

I wish to say to all the Spiritualists of Oklahoma, that those wanting my services, should write to me at once as I am now making dates for an early spring tour of the state.

Direct all communications to me, State Missionary of Oklahoma, to home address, 449 Live Oak street, Dallas, Texas.

REV. ALICE BAKER.

A JESUIT FATHER ON SPIRITUALISM.

He Admits the Existence of the Phenomena, but to Communicate with Spirits is Contrary to the Tenets of Christianity as Interpreted by the Catholic Church, and as Published in the Literary Digest.

The Roman Catholic church believes in the facts of Spiritualism, but condemns its claims and practices as contrary to the commands of the Bible, and likely to involve those who practice it in delusion and error. So writes Father G. G. Franco, S. J., in the Roman Civilta Cattolica, a papal organ. The spirits who pretend to be the souls of historic or other persons come back from the dead may be mere impostors. At any rate, their actions and language are often scarcely in harmony with the character and genius of the great and good. Doubtless, however, Spiritualistic phenomena are real and not imaginary; they can easily be distinguished from mere material phenomena, maintains Father Franco. He supports his contention by stating that no one but a fool can withstand the testimony of such men as William Crookes and Lombroso, which testimony fully establishes the reality of what is called materialization. Spiritualism is in fact one of the recorded facts of history. It is found in the Old and New Testament and among the early Christians and Neoplatonists of Alexandria. Any attempt to confute the genuineness and authenticity of all this testimony in favor of Spiritualism is simply absurd. Half a century ago, indeed, incredulity might have been excusable; at the present moment it is unpardonable. To quote:

"In our present time (1906) no one denies the real existence of Spiritualistic occurrences, excepting certain men whose feet are on earth, but whose wits go wool-gathering in the moon. Among these latter I am surprised to find several university professors in Italy, men in other respects admirable specialists. It is well to remind these gentlemen, and others who have not studied Spiritualism, that Spiritualistic phenomena are not the productions of pure and lofty metaphysics, or astronomy, but are objective acts, that fall under the cognizance of the senses, and can easily be observed by all men. When such phenomena have been witnessed to by very many men of learning and good faith, it is useless, even foolish and ridiculous, to reject such well-proved facts. These facts are accepted as certain by all reasonable men. The phenomena of Spiritualism, it may be added, from the moment when they were first observed up to our own time, have become more and more palpable and objective, and therefore have furnished opportunity for better and more unmistakable authentication by the senses."

He proceeds to trace the different stages of Spiritualistic development as follows:

"These phenomena, first of all, consisted merely of movement, or displacement of material objects, and of mysterious sounds. Subsequently their agent, or cause manifested intelligence, and later began to speak and write. Eventually appeared parts of phantoms, heads, faces, and especially a great number of hands of all kinds, sometimes almost audacious in their actions. At last the occult agents brought their operations to perfection in the so-called materializations, in which they put on the exact appearance of living persons and behaved toward those present just as a living and acting person would naturally behave."

It may be asked, he proceeds, whether it would not be wiser to regard all such appearances as mere hallucination. To do so, he replies, would not be wise, but foolish, and adds:

"It might be wise if we could attribute these appearances to the hallucination of a single person only, as when many people fix their eyes on the face of a picture and one thinks that he saw the eyes move. In the latter case the rest might well suspect the hallucination of the one. But the uniform hallucination of a multitude is impossible, and if all the people were to exclaim at once, 'See, the figure moves its eyes!' the impression could not be considered the hallucination of one man, the fact would be certain, and no prudent man would question it. Now apply this principle to the manifestations that occur at Spiritualistic seances. How can we doubt their reality, when we witness them in all such seances, and our impressions are confirmed by what an infinite number of other persons have seen and heard there? How can we doubt their Spiritualistic character—that is, a character transcending human activities—when we recognize that such phenomena are plainly contrary to the laws of nature as we know them? We know that the whole human race, including savants and philosophers, have always regarded such things as superhuman and supernatural, and have styled them magical. Under the name of magic are comprised the doings and appearances which the forces of nature were not sufficient to produce, and always and everywhere it has been admitted that such works were wrought by the assistance and the influence of an agent superior to nature. Magic was universal in the world, and still prevails in pagan countries."

The writer then relates the cases of materialization described by William Crookes. He also refers to the signed testimony of Cesare Lombroso, and adds that "Lombroso, like other materialists, tried to interpret in a non-Spiritualistic sense the Spiritualistic phenomena which he dared not deny to be real."

While this writer is a firm believer in Spiritualism, including materialization, when he comes to answer the question whether Spiritualism can be brought within the range of reason and Christianity, he shakes his head. It is inscrutable, he declares. Lombroso tried to interpret it by an imaginary and artificial materialistic theory. The animists, on the contrary, find that "the active causes of the phenomena are in the souls or minds of the mediums and the bystanders, and their latent powers," etc. He accepts neither of these theories. With regard to Spiritualism and Christianity he naturally enough points to the attitude taken by the Church of Rome in this matter, and records the answer which a certain director of souls made to the member of his flock who asked whether she might attend seances wherein her little son came back from the dead and sat upon her knee. The director said:

"In showing you the true answer to this question I can not do better than refer you to one of the last decisions made by the Congregation of the Inquisition, and approved by Leo XIII. In 1898 a devout Christian questioned the Holy See as to whether it was allowable for him, provided he refused all communication with an evil spirit, and put himself under the protection of St. [illegible], head of the celestial army, to communicate with the spirit of a certain person, a spirit whose answers had always been in conformity with Catholic doctrine. The Sacred Roman Congregation replied, 'As matters stand, it is not allowable.' And the voice of the Vicar of Jesus Christ confirmed the sentence of the Inquisition."

Father Franco gives the following reasons why the Roman Church has thus decreed. Spirits are indeed called up, but who can say whether they are not evil and deluding spirits? In his own words:

"Were we certain that the spirits who profess to be this or that person were good, serious, and beneficent spirits, such as saintly souls must necessarily be, were they permitted to perform the great miracle of return from the other world, and manifest themselves to us, and work wonders at the seances, contrary to nature and therefore inexplicable, the case might be different. But the opposite is the case. Worse than this, the spirit which presents itself at seances often shows plainly that he can be no other than the being branded a hundred times by Jesus Christ in the Gospel as 'the unclean spirit.'"—Translation made for The Literary Digest.

THE FRATERNAL ORDER.

How It Is Viewed from the Standpoint of Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Who Presents Some Trenchant Truths.

To the Editor:—Of late there has been much written pro and con, as to what should be done to bring Spiritualism up to the standard as a movement. This same question was asked in the late Convention, but no one answered it, with the exception of the reference made in the President's report to Dr. Alex Caird's proposition of organizing on the fraternal basis.

Since the Doctor's proposal along this line, there have been many views expressed, and mostly against it, but I note that those who oppose it do not have anything better to put in its place. I have known the Doctor for a long time, and I know he has a fertile mind in the suggestive line, and can keep an army at work, and as a rule his suggestions succeed when worked out.

We all realize that there is need of something being done in a solid, practical way, that Spiritualism may grow and become the power it is destined to be; but everyone seems so afraid of trying any plan of action—only the one of drifting with the tide.

Now every sane man and woman knows that anything, to be built up stably and effectually, must have some line of systematic procedure, and I am inclined to think the Doctor has struck a key-note that will lead to something very beneficial when developed in a proper manner. I do not mean as an insurance affair, or a social affair, with with all the red-tape of the average fraternal society, but as an order of basic union and line of procedure.

Spiritualism is the PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE, based upon demonstrable facts which at once take it out of the beaten paths of the past. It is more than a religion; it is more than a science; it is more than a reformation; it encompasses all of these and holds each in its place. And only he who takes hold of Spiritualism from this plane gets anything of an idea of its power and use.

Now, Spiritualists come from all degrees of intellectual unfoldment and church ideas, as well as from the fields of agnosticism and doubt, and to bring anything like harmony out of all this, we must strike some ground where all of these can meet. To try to bring them to the purely religious standpoint we have a troup of would-be leaders coming up with their definitions of God, Infinite Intelligence, etc., and it becomes at once worse than a confusion of tongues—it is an UPROAR, and just outside of this troup stand some of the strongest and best minds of the day, such as Clara Watson, a woman after my own heart; Prof. Lockwood, J. Clegg Wright, and many that have done more to light the way of human progress than all the gods of the past and present.

Then when we would make it a science, the majority of us have such weak brain power that we get lost and discouraged in the close work of its study, and drop off here and there until only a few remain; and when we would make it a great power of reformation, all the imps of partisanism are let loose, and you are at once branded as an Anarchist, and are to be feared. So where are we?

I do believe we could come together on a common basis of fraternal understanding where we would all agree that life is continuous; that communication and communion is a fact, and that man as a whole needs sometimes to pray, sometimes to study, and sometimes to readjust. Then let each work in his own line, and remember, first and foremost, that it is the man that has a few ideas who is the best to teach. The man of words simply makes 'a noise, but leaves us where we were.

The Spiritualists are asking why don't we have more young speakers? and why don't the general public attend our meetings more? I believe, for simply this: You have grown to depreciate capacity. The men and women of capacity are not supported in any manner on our platform. First, you say we cannot understand them; second, they charge too much. We need not think that men and women of brains are going to waste their time with us unless we give them at least half as much as they can get elsewhere.

Again, if you cannot understand them, for God's sake, get up and try STRETCHING YOUR CAPACITY A LITTLE.

The only way you grow is to grapple with something you do not already know, and I believe the sooner we begin to realize what we need most is more in quality and less in quantity, we will begin to do something.

We have been trying to rake in everything and everybody, and we have secured some mighty BIG BLANKS. Let us have the few that have some stability, and these will in time bring the whole. All the men and women that have really placed Spiritualism where it is, have been men and women who knew something naturally, and the spirit world had something to work with.

Why do you love and recall Mrs. Colby Luther?

Because she had capacity, and said things you did not believe, or understand at the time.

Why do you love A. J. Davis?

Because he wrote and spoke things the world did not understand or like at the time.

Now, let us get down and try at least to do something in concert, and to the best of our ability, from the basis that we know life is continuous; that man's nature is many-sided, and to develop it calls for deeds, as well as words; and remember that "unless we hang together we will hang singly."

In union there is strength. Spiritualism is the Capstone of the NOW. Let us prove ourselves worthy of it.

SOMETHING EXTRAORDINARY.

Finding of Body Awed Negroes—Garment of Man's Mother Floated on Water and Went Down Where Dead Body Lay—Did the Man's Spirit Cause the Phenomenon?

In the finding of the body of Andrew Ward, the negro who fell overboard and was drowned at Churchill's wharf, the circumstances were of such nature as to arouse all the superstitious characteristics natural to the more ignorant colored people.

The search for the body of the drowned man had been carried on steadily ever since the drowning. Every known practical means of making a dead body float was tried, without avail, and it was not until a suggestion made by Henry Brasher, an old negro, which seemed ridiculous, had been followed that the body was recovered.

Brasher advised that one of the undergarments of the dead man's mother be wrapped in a newspaper at the home and not opened till the water's edge was reached, then opened and allowed to float on the water until it sunk, and that immediately under the place where the garment sunk the dead body would be found.

At first this suggestion was scoffed at as the product of a superstitious mind. Brasher insisted that the plan had always proven its efficacy when tried, and finally, yielding to the insistencies of the large number of persons, including A. L. Pitts, who were interested in the search for the body, the plan was tried, and its success caused those looking on to speak in whispers and place themselves in awed attitudes.

A garment from the home of dead man's mother was got and was wrapped in a piece of newspaper, under the direction of Brasher, who added the necessary mysterious passes and muttered appeals to the spirit, whoever or whatever that might have been. Brasher then set up a weird chant and carefully deposited the bundle in the water.

For fully thirty minutes the bundle floated around on the water, and finally becoming saturated, sank to the bottom of the slip. Immediately a pair of hooks was called for and were lowered directly under the spot where the bundle sank out of sight. The hooks had been dragged but a few feet when the resistance indicated that something had been caught. The rope was hauled in, and dangling to the hooks was the body of Ward.

Exclamations of wonder were on the lips of the large crowd of negroes lined up along the dock as the body was hauled into a boat and quickly carried to a landing place. Even the incredulous white persons who looked on through curiosity were thoroughly surprised at the efficacy of the plan adopted.

At the time the plan was put into successful operation there were a number of responsible white persons present, all of whom testified to the accuracy of the story. The body of the negro was taken to his home, the coroner being notified.

Since Tuesday afternoon Pitts, a white employe of the Ocean Steamship Company, has been engaged in an effort to recover the body, and he was in the boat when the grappling hooks caught on the body of Ward.—Savannah (Ga.) Daily News.

ANIMALS HAVE SOULS.

So Says a Natural Clairvoyant, Who Has Often Witnessed Them.

To the Editor:—I have been subject to dream and visions from the cradle, and have seen the spirit form of nearly all kinds of animals. I have fed cattle and hogs on these prairies for the wealthy, and I always love to have some pets, and would make pets of the hogs or steers, or whatever I was caring for, and a few days after these animals were sent to the slaughter-house, I was sure to see their spirits back in their old feed-lots, and those that I had petted would come to me manifesting pleasure, just as they were in the habit of doing.

One cold day, a little Bantam rooster got chilled. I took it in to the stove to see if I could revive it, but could not, and in a few minutes I saw its spirit as lively as ever.

I have been asked if their spirits live forever. I don't know, neither do I know that the spirit of man lives forever. Nature takes this physical body away from us, and we are more ethereal, more refined, as it were, after being through the "Mills of the Gods."

What of the spirit man?

He only retains his second body for a period, and it is absorbed by the forces of nature. Now, then, how many more times is nature going to take these bodies from us? does anyone know?

Last spring I lost one of my best brood mares. She lingered a couple of days, and a few hours before she died I saw clairvoyantly her spirit walking around, and apparently well as ever.

Do animals think? Can they send their thoughts by telepathy?

Some years ago I was working a team of draft horses; one of them was very intelligent. One night while I was sound asleep, I wakened up suddenly, and saw his nose right in my face. I got up and went to the barn, and found him lying with his hind foot over the halter and could not get up till loosened.

I was working for an old farmer. He told me to put some unslacked lime in the watering trough, and it would not get green. I put in too much, and the horses would not drink it after working hard all day in the hot sun. I put them in the barn without water. Three times during the night one of the horses sent his thoughts so strongly that he wakened me. It may be said some spirit wanted me to get up and water the horses. Well, may be it was.

I have been experimenting in telepathy. When a person sends his thoughts to me with a strong desire, I meet that person in dreamland, and they tell me what their desire is. I meet these animals the same way.

I would like to say here that the so-called dumb brutes have a higher degree of intelligence than they have ever been credited with.

A Sketch From The Book of Life.

As Vividly Portrayed by Lyman C. Howe, Illustrating the Trend of a Busy Life.

It has been several months since my last attempt to interest progressive readers in my thought, and we are all of us situated several hundred millions of miles from the island of space from which we then surveyed our environments. During all of active days I have not been idle or indifferent. When not using the axe or scythe, the spade or hoe, or skimming the social cream from the distillations of genius at Lily Dale, or ministering to the sad souls that bowed at the altar of death, I have found use for all the time that my strength could appropriate in various other ways.

The intellectual tonics dispensed in rich abundance from the platform, by such brilliant minds as Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood, Dr. Warne, J. Clegg Wright, Cora L. V. Richmond, Tillie U. Reynolds, R. S. Lillie, Laura G. Fixen and others at Lily Dale, are lasting values that do much for the make-up of life and the permanent improvement of the race. One of the most interesting and important of all the attractions at this famous camp is the children's progressive lyceum, so ably and efficiently conducted by Mrs. Amelia Peterson of Grand Rapids, Mich. She loves the work and the children, and the children love her.

I was surprised by a phone call from my good friend, A. M. Weiss of St. Louis, Mo., whose beautiful and talented companion has reported her wonderful experiences in her visits to Mars. I knew her well, and saw parts of the manuscript several years before they appeared in print. They read like a fairy tale. Whatever may be thought of them as scientific revelations, I am confident of the entire sincerity, and truthfulness of the medium, whose name was Sara Weiss. She was a woman of spotless character and high morality. Mr. Weiss invited me to Lily Dale for a visit, and I stayed with him at the Leolyn two days and nights, and enjoyed rare social interchanges, and reminiscences long to be remembered. It had been ten years since we last met, and death had taken his treasure as well as ours. But, with us, he realizes the beneficence of the great change, and awaits in the lonesome valley the rising of the infinite morning that will bring in its fragrant breath the bright visions of love in the flashing forms of our translated darlings. Those sweet days at Lily Dale will be a bright spot in memory while time shall last; AND THE THOUGHT OF THE SHAMEFUL MOCKERY OF SOME PRETENDED MEDIUMS, TRADING IN SACRED SENTIMENTS, AND CASTING A SHADOW OF SUSPICION OVER LONG-TRUSTED EVIDENCE, AND SHAKING FAITH IN HUMAN NATURE, IS PAINFUL TO SINCERE INVESTIGATORS

Next came a wire call from Port Huron, Mich., and there I met the family and friends of Hon. James H. White, who went out suddenly on the morning of May 3, just five months after the transition of his life companion. He was well as usual and full of cheer when he retired, but answered not the call in the morning. He looked peaceful and happy as if asleep and enjoying pleasant dreams.

AMES H. WHITE Was No Ordinary Man—Successful in Business. He Was Chosen to Represent the People in the State Legislature, But He Never Showed Any Political Vanity, and Was Just and Generous in His Dealings With All.

A Spiritualist for forty years, he was frank and free in avowing his faith to all who cared to hear it. He was prominent as treasurer of the camp at Haslett Park and used his money freely for the cause. Later he took hold of the camp at Island Lake, without which it could never have been organized. I think he was out about $3,000 there, and perhaps as much more at Haslett Park.

A few such men as he in every camp association would make a success of all.

From Port Huron, home where a variety of labors engaged my time until June 2, when I joined the State Association in a meeting at the Temple Church in Buffalo, where H. W. Richardson, Dr. Austin, Tillie U. Reynolds, Carrie Twing, and Anna L. Gillespie made the hours lively and sweet with thought, new and old, and feelings which are deeper than thoughts, and the soil from which they are fertilized. There, too, were "tests" by Tillie Reynolds, Mrs. Ripley and others, and some of them appeared strikingly real.

Scarcely home for work when I was called back to conduct funeral services in memory of Bro. Wm. Webster of Orchard Park, or Webster Grove, whose life-habits, and therefore his character, had been moulded in accord with the superior teachings of Spiritualism and the Harmonial Philosophy as interpreted by A. J. Davis. Such a life comes to the open gate of death with serene confidence and attractive ideals, with only cheerful anticipations and quiet resignation. Around the hallowed hour that closed forever the mortal senses, all sweet memories wreathe themselves in a halo of progressive prophecies, a light to the spirit within. A loving wife was comforted by the spiritual gospel, and other relatives shared the hope and promise of a reunion in the bye-and bye.

Alternate work of head and hands, writing, speaking, and garden work, with some long journeys by rail and some shorter ones, interspersed with efforts to rally the exhausted functions of nature in sleep, and coaxing vitality from the secret stores of psychic dreams, kept time busy until another call to say the last words in loving memory of my old-time friend, Jerry E. Johnson of Nashville, N. Y., took me over Chautauqua hills, where forty-six years ago his farm house on the summit was a center of attraction for spiritual seekers, and where speakers scorned by the Christian society, found a warm welcome. Here Geo. W. Taylor, Mrs. E. L. Watson (then Elizabeth Lowe) and myself were at home. Faithfully the good man lived his religion, and Spiritualism lighted his way to the end. His only son lives at South Bend, Ind. The last rites were conducted in the old home, June 28, around which so many associations of the early days and early workers have left their shadows and benedictions in the psychic echoes of the long ago.

THE NEXT CALL, JULY 8, Came from Buffalo, Where, July 9, I Conducted the Services in Memory of Mrs. Cook, at 2 p. m., and the body was conducted to the crematory and all of its atomic sympathies and chemical bonds were severed forever.

Various experiences spanned the days from July 8 to August 8, when the news of Mrs. Curran's death at Lily Dale, shocked and stunned us all.

As a quiet and sorrowful listener, I sat under the impressive utterances of Dr. Warne, I. W. Pope and Mrs. Cadwallader, who conducted the services in an impressive manner. I had known her and worked with her at various camps for twenty years, and only the most cordial and pleasant agreement attended all our associations. Her going leaves a void that cannot be wholly filled. Her faithful devotion to the cause, and her generous interpretation of Spiritualism as related to all the needs of the age, and all the issues of life, will remain a living monument to her worth and work, and hallow her memory wherever she was best known. To think of her, and wreathe her life with the pleasant memories, breathing incense like immortal flowers along the aisles and vistas of the faded years, is to exalt our spiritual natures, and unite the sympathies of two worlds, and improve our relations with both.

AS THE DAYS Hastened Away, and the Approaching Celebration of Mrs. Fidelia Barnsdall's Eightieth Birthday Gave a Zest to Anticipation, a wire call hurried me away, and so I missed the notable jubilation. A ride of 282 miles took me to Boonville, 36 miles north of Utica, N. Y., where I met the family and friends of Thomas Tanner (I am not sure that I have got the Christian name correct), and the gospel of Spiritualism shed a halo upon all the shadows and made bright the vision of hope, and soft the pains of sorrow that hallow the memory of the dead. Mr. Tanner had made a noble record, and left a deep impression upon the intellectual, moral and social atmosphere of society. He was conspicuous as a progressive reformer, and a delegate to the convention that nominated John C. Fremont for president in 1856. Spiritualism was his religion and the light to his life, and a solace in the last ordeal. It comforts his widow and family, and his choice for funeral service was faithfully carried out. After the long ride in the stifling heat, and choking dust, it was pleasant to repose in a restful home; even though the shadow of death was in the air.

BUT I MUST NOT Rest Long Anywhere, for the Varied Demands of Life Require a Constant Readiness to Respond to such calls as come, often when and where least expected. A pleasant night in Utica, the whilom home of Roscoe Conkling, and David Jones, founder and editor of the Olive Branch, I rested, visited, and took in the fragrant twilight at the home of Frank Merrills, and Friday morn I started homeward. Arriving about 8 p. m. [illegible] dispatch from Alvin Richardson of Lansing, of love for me to Jewettville, where a host of our group awaited the hour to honor the memory of Mrs. Kester, whose rather sudden going left a deep heavy sob in the air of her quiet home. Tenderly we culled the sweet blossoms of her faith, and presented the gospel evidence that souls never die, and love lives through every change. A ride of twelve miles in the choking dust and stifling heat, to the burial place, was a severe tax; but I found a trolley from the cemetery to Buffalo, where rest and social cheer in the home of Mrs. Dr. Matteson, resuscitated my energies and sent me home rejoicing.

A complimentary benefit surprised me at Lily Dale, and made easy some hard places in the rugged road of life, while it impressed my consciousness with the sweet sense of royal friendship and generous impulses which testify to the divinity of love and the loyalty of human nature. For such tokens I am deeply grateful. My work at camp was limited to Pioneer Day, in which Cora L. V. Richmond and Carrie Twing participated.

A pleasant visit at our home, with Miss Dessie Wertz, Mrs. E. H. Messersmith and Amelia Peterson and Maggie Turner gave Mrs. Howe a social treat and fittingly unitized all the variations of the camp season, in rare intellectual, spiritual and social interchanges, long to be remembered.

Among the activities of September were some readings from Professor Mattison's Spirit Rappings Unveiled, published in 1855. I would like to quote some of the learned professor's wisdom(?) but must reserve that for another writing. It is useful to look over the spiritual hieroglyphics of those early times in the history of Spiritualism, and compare with present realizations.

A CALL FROM Sherman Started Me Out Early Sunday Morning, September 30, While the Rising Day Shook the Frozen Vapors From her wings, and the brisk breezes brought shivers from the North pole that shook my nerves to the center, and an hour's wait at Westfield, with no shelter or fire, and a seven-mile carriage ride at the trolley terminus, landed me shivering and shaking, an hour late, at the home where a large audience was assembled in honor of Wm. Pettis, deceased, and wondering ignorance listened for the first time to the gospel of Spiritualism. Another ride of seven miles by private carriage, and a trolley trip to Jamestown, brought me shivering to the door of Frank Barnes, whose amiable wife is a devoted and active Theosophist. She was a Spiritualist thirty years ago, but thought she had found something better in the undemonstrable assumptions of reincarnation, and repetitious cycles, ever returning to the physical basis for a new start in spiritual ascension. But she, with many others, has a gentle spirit, and large fraternal fellowship for all good works.

OCTOBER FOUND ME in Hamilton, Canada, Where a Vigorous Young Society, With S. S. King for President, Is Growing.

After the first Sunday's work I wheeled down to Rochester, N. Y., to join Dr. Austin's army of intellectual giants, in dedicating the splendid church recently purchased by the Spiritualists of that city, and I wish I could inspire 20,000 Spiritualists who have some spare change, to send to Dr. Austin from 50 cents to $5 each, and clear the church of debt and give Brother Austin an earnest of their appreciation.

DR. PEEBLES Left Us Friday Afternoon to Proceed on His Fifth Journey Around the World! To Speak of the Splendid Work Done There by Mrs. Russegue, Tillie U. Reynolds, Mr. Fenner, Dr. Peebles and Others, would extend this letter beyond its already overdone limits. But back to Hamilton for a month, I was entertained in the pleasant home of Burton Ford, walked four miles each Sunday to and from the hall—twice each way—spoke at funeral of Brother Hill between the morning and evening lectures, and our audiences steadily increased until the last Sunday evening the hall was full—I think every seat occupied. As this was my last Sunday with the Hamilton people, and a splendid audience showed their appreciation and good will, it seemed fitting that I serve them to an extra entertainment. Accordingly I started down the long winding stairs, just at the appointed minute for meeting to begin. I was in some haste, the light dim and flickering, and my eyes dependent upon artificial lenses, do not measure space as of old.

I thought I was on the last step, and stepped off expecting to stand firmly on the floor. But lo! I was five or six steps from the floor, and of course plunged headlong down the stairs, striking my left arm and wrist on the edge of a step, and my body crashing on to it, my head plowing against the railing and wall, and for a few seconds I thought my time had come, my work done for this world, and my head split in the middle! But inside of ten minutes I was facing the large audience and delivering gospel freely. During the lecture I forgot the pain, but it did not forget me, and put in some sharp twists which lasted all night, and for several days following. Nevertheless I started home Monday, carrying satchels in both hands to trains—sixty rods between depots in Buffalo. I arrived at Dunkirk in the darkness and rain, started for trolley with a stranger friend carrying one satchel, and my foot caught an unseen obstacle, and again I came down with a crash on the hard pavement, my bruised arm and wrist taking the shock; but in twenty seconds I was on my feet, satchel in hand, making for the car.

Was all this, and more like it, bad luck? Were these tumbles accidents? I count these experiences rare good luck. How many of our boys of three score and ten, can duplicate them without breaking half a dozen bones? But with all of these circuses I came through with every bone sound. My wrist swelled and pained for several days, and is still lame.

AFTER ALL THIS I Was in Trim for My Engagement in Pittsburgh, for November. There the "Lower Lights Are Burning." There the Spiritualists Own a Fine Church in a splendid locality in Oakland district on Bouquet street. A prospective park of splendid proportions greets the gaze of church goers as they stand at the eastern entrance. The great Carnegie Library looms in the near approaches, and growing beauty rustles in the leafy bowers and the shining shadows of the morning, and the white whispers of the evening stars. There a sweet spirit of devotion to all truth inspires the air and exalts the bearing of all. There BRO. C. L. STEVENS presides, and with a lively interest touches the souls of the people and encourages a broad-gauge religion and spiritual science. His voice is a tonic to speakers and audience. He has a good word for all except frauds; and is not hasty in judging suspected characters. He loves humanity and holds Spiritualism its great interpreter, and mediumship a SACRED AGENCY IN BRINGING "LIFE AND IMMORTALITY TO LIGHT." He is the right man in the right place. I believe all the members love and honor him, as he does them.

Brother Evans, the blind singer, inspires the hours with music fresh from his soul, and the people appreciate him and his music. Bro. Dixon and family are faithful supporters of the church, and exemplify the New Gospel by their lives. The Ladies Aid devotes some two hours each Thursday afternoon to psychic readings, followed by a lecture in the evening.

THE CHILDREN'S LYCEUM Is Healthfully Active Each Sunday Morning. The Bright Faces of the Little Ones Furnish a Better Chapter for Profitable Study than Any Chapter in the Bible.

They are Bibles of nature, sparkling with revelations that illumine infinitude. Adults can profitably spend two hours a week, at least, in studying these New Testaments, and opening a correspondence with the "inner sense of the word" as it shines from these centers of immortality.

The munificence of two women made possible the possession of this church, free of all incumbrance, while many others assisted generously, according to their means. It looks as if it had come to stay, and to grow in influence and usefulness. So far as appeared to me, a good spirit prevails, and unselfish work animates the officers and members. Mrs. Stevens frequently donates a month of lectures, inspired by her superior guides, and counsellors. She inspires the spiritual intellect and harmonizes the souls of the people. Bro. John Grayburn enjoys all and reaches for the best that heaven can give. I stayed over Wednesday to meet and hear Mrs. Ham who gave the church her services Tuesday evening, which I think netted from $30 to $40.

She is popular in Pittsburgh, and I did not hear of any suspicious reflections against her integrity as a medium, or as woman. I missed my good cheery friends, A. D. Field and wife, who have moved, I believe, to New York City. Brother Matthews faithfully ministers to the needs of thinkers, by supplying them with The Progressive Thinker, the Sunflower and Reason, besides some wholesome books from the active brain of Prof. Lockwood, Dr. Peebles, Dr. Austin, Hudson Tuttle and others.

Every such suggestion presented to the sight encourages people to read; and the more they read the more they realize the value of reading as a means of spiritual improvement and a source of pleasure.

G. H. Brooks follows me in Pittsburgh, and after him C. Fannie Allyn, I think.

And now Mr. Editor, and patient (or impatient) reader, forgive this infliction, and I promise not to repeat it—until I get a chance. Meanwhile remember that I am young and full of spiritual juice, and ready to answer calls for funerals, weddings, lectures or camps for 1907. Address 170 Liberty street, Fredonia, N. Y.

"How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds make ill deeds done.—King

History of the English Bible.

An Exceptionally Important Document for the Student to File Away for Future Reference.

Mary [as set forth in the Quarterly Review] ascended the throne in 1553, and reigned five years." During that period neither Bible nor Testament was printed in England. Rogers, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, and others, who had so largely assisted in giving the Scriptures to the English people in their own tongue, were burnt at the stake; and some of the noblest of England's worthies were driven from their native country, and forced to seek an asylum in Geneva.

In that city, where the profound Biblical scholarship, impassioned eloquence, and extraordinary sagacity of John Calvin had effected a reformation in both church and state, the minds of the English exiles were turned to the necessity of an improved translation of the sacred scriptures. None of those hitherto published satisfied critical scholars.

The "Great Bible" was even less satisfactory than that of Tyndale, and the interpolations introduced into it from the Vulgate [the old Romanist Latin version of the Scriptures] tended in many cases seriously to mislead the inquirer after truth. It was therefore resolved to prepare and issue a new translation.

Geneva was at that period a place singularly adapted for the successful accomplishment of such a work. It was the center of Biblical learning. Calvin and Beza, with others, were engaged in a critical revision of Olivetan's French version; a revised Italian version was also in preparation under the editorial care of Gallars and Beza.

Robert Stephen, who had already distinguished himself in Paris both as a profound scholar and careful editor, was then an exile in Geneva, where, in 1551, he published his famous Greek Testament side by side with the Vulgate and Latin of Erasmus.

Before leaving Paris he had printed two editions of the Hebrew Bible, to one of which was attached the Commentary of Kimchi on the Minor Prophets.

Other important aids were accessible to the Genevan exiles. Leo Juda's Latin version of the Old Testament was completed by Bibliander and Pellican, and printed at Zurich in 1543; a revised edition of Erasmus' translation of the New Testament was added to it in 1544. Beza's Latin version of the New Testament was printed in 1556, and excelled all its predecessors. Castallo's Latin version was published in Basle in 1551, and his French version four years later. It was, therefore, under the most favorable circumstances the revision of the English Bible was undertaken at Geneva.

The New Testament was first revised, apparently under the sole charge of William Whittingham, Calvin's brother-in-law. Whittingham was a scion of a noble English family, and was born at Holmeside Hall, near Durham, in 1524. He was educated at Oxford, and traveled extensively on the Continent, visiting many of the great seats of learning. On the accession of Queen Mary he fled to Frankfort, and soon afterwards took up his residence in Geneva. He was an accurate scholar; he had a sound judgment and a keen perception of the style and phraseology best adapted to set forth the meaning of the sacred text. In his preface he tells us that the English text "was diligently revised by the most approved Greek exemplars and conference of translations in other tongues."

This sentence accurately describes the character of his work. It was not a new translation. Tyndale's version was his basis. Stephen's recently published Greek Testament was the original text used, and none equal to it had yet appeared. The Latin translation of Beza was the chief source, or at least suggester, of his emendations. He exercised an independent judgment on each word and passage, though in the first instance his attention appears to have been called to defects by the readings of Beza or Castallo.

Indeed, in a few cases, Beza's rendering was followed in preference to that of Tyndale, though the latter was right; thus, in Luke ii:22, Tyndale reads "their," the Genevan "her;" in Gal. iv:17, Tyndale reads "you," the Genevan "us." Still Whittingham's revision was thorough, and on the whole judicious. He kept very closely to the Greek, and yet expressed the sense, for the most part, in terse and idiomatic English.

The New Testament was published on the 10th of June, 1557, in duodecimo, with a prologue by John Calvin; and the expense was defrayed mainly by John Bodley, the father of the Bodleian Library. It was the first Testament in which the text was divided into separated verses. The verses, which had originated with Robert Stephen a few years previously, had only been marked on the margin of his Greek Testament of 1551.

Another important innovation may be noted; words which had no equivalents in the original, but which were added to complete the sense, were printed in italics. Brief explanatory notes were placed upon the margin, and contributed much to make the work popular among the masses of the English people. Regarding the notes, the writer says he "omitted nothing unexpounded, whereby he that is anything exercised in the Scriptures of God might justly complain of hardness." The notes have in many cases a strong doctrinal bias.

The revision of the Old Testament was commenced immediately on the publication of the New, and went on without intermission for two years. The names of the revisers are not all known; but it is certain that in addition to Whittingham, Anthony Gilby and Thomas Sampson wrought at it, and were probably aided among others by Miles Coverdale and John Knox. The "Great Bible" was adopted as the basis; but its text was revised with very great care, and brought into closer correspondence with the Hebrew.

The revisers were manifestly men of competent scholarship and profound Biblical knowledge. They took full advantage of all external assistance. The Latin versions of Leo Juda, Sebastian Munster, and Sanctes Pagninus, and the French translation of Olivetan as revised by Calvin, were constantly consulted, and many important emendations made from them. In those books originally translated by Tyndale (Genesis—II. Chron.) the text is not much changed; but in the poetical and prophetical books the changes are so numerous that it may almost be considered a new translation. It is much more literal, and at the same time more forcible, than its predecessors.

The New Testament was again revised, evidently by a new hand, and the changes introduced, chiefly from Beza, are not improvements. The whole was completed and published in one volume, quarto, in 1560, with the following title, which fairly describes it: "The Bible: that is, the Holy Scriptures, conteyned in the Olde and Newe Testament. Translated according to the Ebrue and Greke, and conferred with the best translations in divers languages, with moste profitable annotations on all the harde places, and other thinges of great importance, as may appeare in the Epistle to the Reader. At Geneva. Printed by Rouland Hall. M.D.L.X." Queen Mary died in 1558, and Elizabeth succeeded to the throne of England. To her this Bible was dedicated.

The Genevan Bible was far superior to any that preceded it. It is confessedly the best in the English language, with the exception of the present Authorized Version. Its authors say, in their preface: "We may with good conscience protest that we have in every point and word, according to the measure of that knowledge which it pleased Almighty God to give us, faithfully rendered the text, and in all hard places most sincerely expounded the same. For God is our witness that we have by all means endeavored to set forth the purity of the Word and right sense of the Holy Ghost for the edifying of the brethren in faith and charity."

The Genevan Bible, though never formally sanctioned for public use in the churches, soon took the place in public estimation hitherto held by Tyndale's, and long continued to be emphatically the Bible of the English people. In this respect it well-nigh supplanted all others, and retained its place for eighty years, during which time it passed through about one hundred and fifty editions. The place of its origin, the manner in which it rendered ecclesiastical terms, and the tenor of its annotations, endeared it to the hearts of the puritans of England and the Presbyterians of Scotland. It may be added that it was the first English Bible printed in Roman type, all previous to it having been in "black-letter." It was also the first which had its text divided into verses.

Soon after the accession of Elizabeth the heads of the English Church, under the leadership of Archbishop Parker, began to consider the propriety of preparing a version of the Bible which might be authorized by the rulers of Church and State, and acceptable to all sects and classes in the nation. None of those yet published had attained that desired end; and it began to be felt that even the best of them did not fully represent the advances already made in Biblical literature. Parker resolved at length to divide the Bible into a number of sections, and to portion them out for translation or revision among a select few, whose position in the Church, and established character for scholarship, might tend to give their production weight with the public. Each man, on completing his section, was to send it back to the Archbishop for final revision and approval. So far as can now be ascertained, fifteen men were engaged in the work, of whom eight were prelates, namely, Alley, Davies, Sandy's Horn, Grindel, Parkhurst, Cox, and Guest. From the fact that the majority of the revisers were Bishops the version was called "The Bishops' Bible." The revision was begun in 1564, and the Bible was published in 1568, in a magnificent folio volume, printed by Richard Jugge, with the simple title, The Holie Bible. It was, no doubt, an improvement on "The Great Bible," for it omitted most of the interpolations from the Vulgate, and to some extent amended the text, adopting the best renderings of the Genevan, and giving a number of new and happy translations from the Greek, in the New Testament. But on the whole it was not satisfactory, and it disappointed the expectations of the learned.

The scholarship of the editors appears to have been defective, especially in Hebrew, and the plan followed by Bishop Guest in regard to the Psalter was calculated to corrupt, rather than amend, the version. He thus explains in a letter to Parker: "I have not altered the translation but where it gave occasion to an error. Where in the New Testament one piece of a Psalm is reported I translate it in the Psalms according to the translation thereof in the New Testament!"

The pernicious effect of such an uncritical mode of procedure may be easily imagined. A new edition of The Bishops Bible appeared in 1572, the New Testament portion being further revised. Still it did not command the confidence of the learned; it did not satisfy the wants of the Church; and it did not gain the affections of the people, who continued to prefer the Genevan. "The Bishops' Bible," however, deserves the attentive consideration of every student, for it formed the basis of our Authorized Version, although the latter was prepared on different and far sounder principles.

The Roman Catholic translation of the Scriptures, although it had little influence upon the formation of our English Bible, demands a brief notice in a historical and critical point of view. It was only under strong pressure from without the version was undertaken and issued. Some leading Roman Catholic divines had charged the various Protestant versions with grievous errors and gross misrepresentations of the Divine Word; they felt themselves, therefore, bound to establish their charges by producing a translation of their own under the infallible sanction and guidance of the Church.

The New Testament was first undertaken. The translation was made, not from the Greek original, but from "the Authentic text of the Vulgate." Its authors were certain English refugees at Rheims, where it was published in 1582. Its title is as follows: "The New Testament of Jesus Christ, translated faithfully into English out of the Authentical Latin, according to the best corrected copies of the same, diligently conferred with the Greeke, and other editions in divers languages: with * * Annotations, and other necessarie helpes, for the better understanding of the text, and specially for the discoverie of the corruptions of divers late translations, and for the clearing of controversies in religion, in these dales."

The promoters of the version were Gregory Martin, a graduate of Cambridge, and Cardinal Allen, or Alleyn. The latter was educated at Oxford, and was a distinguished scholar. He held a living in England, but, on the accession of Elizabeth, he retired to Louvain, and afterwards to Douay. He was instrumental in founding seminaries at Douay, Rheims, and Rome, for the purpose of supplying the Roman Catholics of England with trained priests.

A WORTHY ENTERPRISE.

A Texas Spiritualist Issues a Call for Help.

Dear Spiritualist friends everywhere, I hope you will pardon me if I should ask anything of you which would offend or cause you to think that I am asking too much of you.

What I want to say is this: Our president of the Texas National Association of Spiritualists, Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, Fort Worth and Mrs. L. S. Gardner, Beaumont, Texas, came and assisted in holding a ten days' meeting at our park (the Mills Park), in August, and I am sure that the seed sown will do much good.

Mrs. Hinsdale is certainly a fine inspirational speaker, and all that I have heard say aught concerning her lectures (and that is several, and not Spiritualists), say that she is the finest speaker they ever heard. Indeed Mrs. Hinsdale is a fine speaker, and a self-sacrificing woman, and full of goodly zeal.

Mrs. Gardner brought joy and comfort to those to whom she gave messages, through her independent slate-writing. Indeed I must say her messages are truly wonderful, and although those who could not account for the wonderful power in Mrs. Gardner, acknowledge that it was something mysterious.

We certainly had a good meeting, in spite of much orthodox opposition, and I have heard many say they will surely come if we have a meeting next year.

Now, good Spiritualists, let me tell you what myself, two sisters and brother have done: We sacrificed a good deal to get this meeting this year, both money and time, and I fully realize that I am not going to stay on this earth plane but just a little while, and I want to do all I can for the cause of one of the grandest truths that have ever been brought to this earth, and that is by the angel world. Now, we want you to help us so we can have a grand Spiritual Camp here at our park. We cannot afford to sit with folded hands and closed pocketbooks and think that just a few can do all the work that is needed to be done for our great cause.

We purchased from the M. E. Church a large and commodious tabernacle which we desire to move on our park grounds, also about seventy seats. This tabernacle will accommodate a very large audience.

It will cost at least $150, or $200, to move and erect the tabernacle on our grounds. We have bought and paid our money for the property, and it is quite a little job to move it. Now, friends, if you want to help us and want to have one of the finest camp grounds in the state, we beg you to help us in this cause.

Of course there is a great deal of other work that will have to be done to get the grounds in first class condition. I have just thought of a little plan that I think everyone can help in, it is this: I have gotten up a very nice stereo postal card, and it folds up like a book for mailing; when it is unfolded it is a nice stereo view. If you have a friend you wish to send one of these nice stereo views to, you can fold it up (and it has the appearance of a common postal card), and mail it to a friend. The views are views of Park and Camp ground, twelve different views. I have gotten this up myself, and it is a very nice piece of art; the views are genuine, finest grade photographs and not cheap photo-to-engravings. This work is as fine as those sold by agents for 20 cents, and 25 cents apiece.

Now, I am going to send one dozen of these different views to everyone who will send me $1.25, postage prepaid.

Now, dear friends, everyone can help by sending me $1.25 for these views. You can see these grounds just the same as if you were here, by looking them over through the stereoscope.

All the profit I make on these views will go for the camp ground and to help pay expenses for the cause of Spiritualism in our grand old state. So I hope all will see the great good they can do by helping in this grand work.

And now I hope that those who see will help with a heart that's open and free, and when we all meet in the haven of rest, we will sing glad songs with our loved and blest.

IN THE DYING YEAR.

Dear Old Year, within the silence,
As I sit and watch you go;
Softly to the realm of by-gone,
With your load of joy and woe;
Think I of the countless blessings,
Unto many lives you've given;
While from others, tender, human,
Fondest ties were sadly riven.

Some have welcomed tiny strangers,
Some have entertained as guest
Death, who called their dear ones homeward,
Oft we question which is best;
Some have met success and triumph,
Fame has smiled upon their way;
But the multitude go toiling,
Bravely on from day to day.

In my life have been few changes—
One, it made my heart most sore,
A new grave upon the hillside,
With the tall trees bending o'er.
Thus, Old Year, I watch your passing
Slowly through Time's open gate;
You have left me Hope's fair blossom
For the rest I, trusting, wait.

Planetary Professor Foretells Events and Quickly Reads the Lives of People, Though Thousands of Miles Away.

Sends Letters to the Rich and Poor Alike, in Which He Advises Them on Important Affairs.

Offers Free Test Reading to All Who Write at Once.

In his office in New York city, surrounded by charts and dials of strange designs, Prof. Albert H. Postel studies daily over the lives of men and women who have written to him for advice on affairs of business, love, speculation, travel, marriage, health and the important events of life.

The accuracy of recent predictions made by this eminent Astrologer has caused many of his friends to believe that he possesses a supernatural power, but he modestly asserts that his predictions are due alone to a scientific understanding of natural laws. The many thankful letters Prof. Postel has received from the people who have benefited by his advice furnish ample proof that he is sincere in his work and has a kindly feeling towards humanity. The following from a minister of the gospel is a sample:

Washington, D. C., Dec. 30.

My dear Prof. Postel:—Your chart came to hand this morning, thanks, also your note by separate mail. Your straight-forward methods and business-like spirit, in contrast to ——, please me and inspire confidence. Honorable men will always be honored. Good men may not always be a grand success but will merit respect. Your treatment of me has been that of a true gentleman and I will be pleased to commend you to any needing knowledge in the science of Astrology.

Respectfully,

(REV.) T. C. EASTON, D. D.

A Frightful Teaching.

Those writers so very prolific in predicting great calamities about to fall on the earth, sending all its inhabitants to the "demnition bow-wows," should be prevailed upon to take cognizance of remarkable prophecies in the past.

As all have been instructed, there was one Jesus, who is said to have lived 1900 years ago, who tried his hand at forecasting terrible events which were to transpire during the then generation. He said, abridged:

"The sun shall be darkened, the moon shall not give light, the stars shall fall from heaven, the powers shall be shaken, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn, then shall the son of man come in the clouds, and with a great sound of a trumpet he shall gather his elect from one end of heaven to the other."

The time of this awful calamity was fixed by his saying, Matt. 24:34:

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all of these things be fulfilled."

It was doubtless because of the nearness of the accomplishment of this prediction, this same teacher taught his disciples, to take no thought of the morrow," to "give all they have to the poor," to "neither toil nor spin" but be on the constant watch for the signs which would usher in the event.

The early Christians are represented to have been earnest believers in the certainty that "the end is near, even at the door."

The agitation continued, and as the 10th century approached Mosheim says:

"The whole Christian world was covered at this time with a thick and gloomy veil.* * * A notion now prevailed of the immediate approach of the day of judgment. * * The deepest consternation and anguish prevailed. * * Prodigious numbers of people abandoned all their civil connections, and their parental relations, and, giving over to the churches or monasteries all their lands, treasures, and worldly effects, repaired with the utmost precipitation to Palestine, where they imagined Christ would descend from heaven to judge the world."

This good Christian author says:

"The opulent attempted to bribe the Deity, and the saintly tribe, by rich donations, conferred upon the sacerdotal and monastic orders, who were regarded as the immediate vice-gerents of heaven. Palaces, temples and noble edifices, both public and private were suffered to decay, and were deliberately pulled down, from a notion they were no longer of any use."

Observe: Thirty generations had passed, and yet the end did not come. False prophets continued to rise, and frighten the world by the interpretation of prophecies, fixing the grand consummation as "at the door."

Fifty-five generations had passed, to 1832, when Wm. Miller made his wonderful revelations, and the Christian world was again shaken with the belief that the end was at hand. The Mormon faith was really an offshoot of that teaching, as were the Adventists, a Christian sect still in being.

Spiritualist mediums, imbued with this false Christian faith, have told of the approaching end, and have almost frightened some people out of their wits; but time jogs on, and will in spite of all these foolish predictions. The sun will continue its light, and the earth, the planets, all the heavenly hosts, will continue their course, and the trumpet will never sound, for the universe was not constructed to be destroyed, but is as enduring as is eternity.

Not Complimentary.

The Pope, while commenting on the troubles with France, is reported to have said: "The largest center of Catholicism is in the United States." It is not believed America will receive this as a compliment.

How to Make Hypocrites.

The art of making religionists who act a false part untruthful professions of belief, opinions or feelings, is an easy one to learn. A person with moderate education, reared from infancy in the belief of the dominant religion, listens to a ranting hypnotist, known as a revivalist. He accepts as truth all he says, and is soon brought under psychologic influence. In clerical parlance he is converted to the faith of the hypnotist, and soon after, still under magnetic control, is baptized and inducted into the church. Perhaps with more than average native talent, he is selected by friends, and is prepared for the ministry. His education is directed to biblical and theological literature, without any attention to the sciences, or to Oriental history outside that of an ecclesiastical character.

In due time our convert is ordained a cleric and enters on his ministry, with an implied obligation that he will advocate the inculcations of his church creed, and defend it from attacks from every source. This position brings the preacher in contact with older men, those of advanced thought. New questions arise and he investigates. He becomes satisfied he has been falsely taught. He looks about; but to vacate his pulpit is to plunge into financial ruin. He determines to hold his place, and educate his parishioners to a full knowledge of what he has learned. A few able sermons, showing the fallacy of their creed, when his noble intentions are interrupted by some ignoramus who never had a thought above that instilled into his mind in childhood. The cry of heresy is set up, a church trial follows, and the advanced scholar is pushed aside, and ignorance triumphs.

Instead of urging the teacher to advance in knowledge, and impart what he learns to his fellows, to retain his position he must practice the arts of the hypocrite, preach what he does not believe, and what he knows is false.

The man of common intelligence knows a virgin never did and never can give birth to a son, but the cleric must teach it, and insist his communicants shall believe it. He knows man never fell and in consequence of that fall, became subject to death because Eve ate of forbidden fruit; but he must teach it. He knows the Bible is a collection of ancient myths and fictions; but he must teach it is the inspired Word of God, or surrender his living.

And thus, like the whipped horse which keeps within his traces fearful of punishment, he apes the hypocrite, and is likely to go through life preaching what he knows is false.

A Mixed Religion.

As often suggested in these columns, Christianity is a mixed religion. Immediately preceding it, and its real parent, was Roman Paganism, evidenced by its inheritance of every distinguishable feature of that cult, even to the retention of its Pontifex Maximus—Supreme Bishop, the Pope, and the canonization of their lesser gods, whose names now adorn the saint's calendar. The student who learns the leading features of the ancient Roman hierarchy has a vivid likeness of Roman Catholicism at the time of the Protestant revolt in the 16th century.

Then search for the origin of Roman Paganism, and the inquirer finds it is a conglomerate, a sort of pudding stone, which is composed of pebbles, gravel and sand, water worn fragments of rock torn from their parent beds, and rounded by attrition as they rolled together along the bed of some ancient river, then bound together by silicious and argillaceous cement. Each fragment of such conglomerate had a history of its own before severed from its parent habitat. So Roman Paganism was a merger of Zoroastrianism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, embracing portions of Akkadian, Babylonian, Egyptian and Grecian mythology, all carried along by waves of Western emigration, converging and solidifying at Rome, from which point, under a new name, it has radiated world-wide.

Good scholars, take these suggestions to thought; then turn your rays of mental vision in the direction indicated, and follow them with critical research for long years in ancient tomes, and you will come to the same conclusion with this writer. It is they whose learning is limited, to sacerdotal literature who will controvert our position.

And Still They Come.

This time it is Rev. Dr. Wm. Austin Smith, of St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, who repudiates the virgin birth of the Junior God of the church, Jesus. Rev. Dr. Crapsey and Rev. Cox of Cincinnati, cannot have all the honor of repudiating a heathen cult during 1906.

At the time Jesus is alleged to have been born, and for many preceding centuries, persons of distinction were supposed to have been begotten by the Gods. Alexander the Great claimed this distinction, as did Julius Caesar, and Augustus Caesar. Both the latter were worshiped as gods, and this worship of Augustus continued for 600 years after his death.

When the name of Jesus was substituted in Roman paganism, in place of Bacchus, the latter was canonized as a saint, and it appears as such in the Roman Catholic calendar, and Jesus was awarded divine honors. As a God, he had to be generated by a god, and be born of a virgin, and this ridiculous claim, propagated by cowled monks, sustained by a corrupt priesthood, is the base of the dominant religion.

COL. OLCOTT AND MISS ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Col. Olcott is a leader among Theosophists. His experiences in India, and his investigation of Occult subjects in all parts of the world, will give special importance and significance to the sentiments he utters. His lecture on "THE DANGERS OF PSYCHISM," reads like a fairy tale in some respects, and will lead Spiritualists into a new realm of thought, and will interest them greatly.

There are many things in Theosophy in perfect harmony and accord with the truths of Spiritualism, and the sentiments of Col. Olcott as expressed in his lecture, will be read with great interest in consequence of the stubborn fact that among Spiritualists themselves there is a GREAT CONFLICT of opinion—many points still unsettled, and this state or condition in our ranks will tend to give special value to the lecture by Col. Olcott which will appear in The Progressive Thinker January 19.

And of no less value and interest will be the lecture by Miss Elizabeth Harlow on the same subject, "THE DANGERS OF PSYCHISM," which will appear in the paper of January 26. The two lectures, from different standpoints, are masterly productions, reported expressly for The Progressive Thinker, and every Spiritualist in the United States should read them. Those who do not read this paper can not, of course, keep posted in current Occult or Spiritualistic events. Every SAMPLE copy we send out this week should bring in at least two new subscribers.

PLEASE UNDERSTAND.

A Valuable Book.

We find on our table a nicely printed book of near 300 pages bound in cloth, lettered with gold, bearing the title of "Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas," by Hudson Tuttle, and printed by "The Tuttle Publishing Company, Berlin Heights, Ohio."

Opening the bright pages of the book, we find it printed with clear, new type, on calendared white paper, with fine black ink, which will commend its reading to the aged, because of its distinctness. It is divided into two parts, thirteen chapters of which are devoted to the evolution of the God idea; followed by sixteen chapters with the evolution of the Christ idea. Then there is an appendix with several very instructive articles for illustrating at greater length important facts treated of in the body of the work.

We have already taken time, stolen from other pressing duties, to read many instructive chapters. It is admirably and graphically written, and in language all can comprehend. Like a sensible author catering to English readers, Mr. Tuttle had no occasion to blur his pages with untranslated Greek, Latin or French, a habit among many always to be condemned. As the title indicates, Mr. Tuttle has gone back to the beginning, so far as the historic period goes, to trace the origin of the God idea, and the idea of a Messiah. The reader is instructed in every sentence. It does not matter if the ideas are not new to him, they are so beautifully, logically and eloquently presented the reader is enchanted, and is reluctant to lay the book down when other duties press.

We would love to make many quotations for these columns, but "Copyright 1906" greets us on one of its first pages, so we are compelled to ask our patrons who wish to share the pleasure of reading the book with the multitude of others who will do so, to order a copy from the author at Berlin Heights, Ohio, else from The Progressive Thinker office; $1.25 will pay the bill, whether mailed to the purchaser, or to some good friend by whom he wishes to be lastingly remembered by sending him or her a copy as a New Year's gift. Our word for it, the book cannot be read by a person of brains without pleasure and instruction.

Special Privileges for None.

The French Parliament, on Dec. 21, by an affirmative vote of 413 to 166, passed the pending bill divorcing church and state, thus sustaining the executive's recent order in the same direction. The pope, it is stated, has expressed his willingness to accept the situation, provided Catholics are placed in the same condition in France as they are in the United States, Brazil, Great Britain and Holland.

All religious orders, everywhere, should be placed on a common footing by the state, and should sustain themselves without government help. If they cannot do so they should go to the wall. Special privileges should not be extended to any religious sect in any country.

The Great Work.

A Student of Independent Spiritual Unfoldment Expresses His Views.

You have asked me, as a student of Natural Science, to write an article on the subject of the above named book, for publication in The Progressive Thinker. It is not an easy task to accomplish with satisfaction to myself. It is much less likely to be a satisfaction to your readers, more especially those who have not yet read the book referred to.

But you have my promise, and I shall therefore do the best I can under the circumstances. I shall not, however, attempt to review the book. For the only review that would do justice to it IS THE BOOK ITSELF. And I want to say at the outset that I sincerely hope your readers will not rely upon the "reviews," the comments, the criticisms and the discussions of the book which may appear in this paper or elsewhere. For if they do, they will never get the true spirit, purpose and meaning of its message. This is because the work must be taken chapter by chapter, in its natural sequence, and with its own careful and exact definitions in mind, in order to understand its full meaning and purpose.

I have a very strong feeling that there are no people in the world for whom its message will accomplish more good than the honest and earnest Spiritualists all over the world; provided they accept the invitation which it offers to them to read it free from prejudice, and do not try to read into its lines any but the meanings which the author has expressed.

This feeling is doubtless founded upon the fact that for many years I was proud to call myself a Spiritualist. I spent years in the personal investigation of Spiritualistic phenomena. I have been a personal witness to every important phase of mediumship. I have hundreds of close personal friends who are loyal Spiritualists and whom I love and respect with all my heart. I have the MOST PROFOUND CONSIDERATION FOR THEM AND FOR THEIR HONEST CONVICTIONS AS TO THE VALUE OF SUBJECTIVE MEDIUMSHIP.

I do not think that anything could have changed my own convictions on that subject but my personal contact with, and study in, the School of Natural Science. And although to-day I would no more become a party to any seance (which involved the subjective control of a medium in any form or phase whatsoever), than I would become a party to the enslavement of my fellow man in any other form; nevertheless, I can hardly say that I regret having spent so many years investigating the phenomena of mediumship, because I am convinced that it was the knowledge I gained through those years of personal investigation that enabled me to understand and appreciate the position and the work of the Great School of Natural Science.

Through my fellowship with, and admiration for, Spiritualists during the greater part of my life, I have come to appreciate how difficult it is for them to understand that it is possible for communication between the two worlds to be established through any other process than that of mediumship.

I have observed how natural it is for them to claim everything as "mediumship" which involves such communication, and I am just wondering if there will be any among them who will make such a claim concerning the "INDEPENDENT METHOD OF SPIRITUAL UNFOLDMENT," which is outlined in this book. It is just possible that the thoughtless may do so, without taking the time or the trouble to read the book, but I cannot conceive how any honest Spiritualist can do so after once having read the book through from beginning to end and made a study of the two distinct "Methods" unfolded.

Personally I can say that I KNOW that such a claim, if made, is absolutely without foundation. I have made a thorough PERSONAL TEST of both methods, and I know that they are absolutely irreconcilable. They are exact antitheses in every respect. They are as directly opposite as East is opposite from West, or as Truth is opposite from Falsehood.

It was this extreme difference in method of procedure, that first attracted my attention to the work of Natural Science. Like most good Spiritualists, I was inclined to believe that there could be but one way, and that the way of mediumship. I was naturally skeptical as to this "Independent Method." But the more I read the books of the School, and the deeper I got into their spirit and understanding, the more I was convinced that it was a subject entirely worthy of my own personal consideration and investigation.

The results of that investigation are indicated by what I have already said. I am now able to speak from ABSOLUTE PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE sufficiently far to assure your readers that INDEPENDENT SPIRITUAL UNFOLDMENT DOES NOT DEVELOP "MEDIUMSHIP."

Anticipating the possible claims of those who do not yet know the difference between "Subjection" and "Independence," as these terms are employed in the book, I desire to make just one point with your readers, most of whom I regard as my personal friends, and that is this:

This book contains a GREAT TRUTH which is at the foundation of all true Spiritual Unfoldment. It is a truth which will affect you as it has done me, if you will but make the study as I have done, and will not rely upon others to do your reading of the book.

If I had it in my power to do so, I do not believe there is a greater personal favor I could bestow upon any reader of The Progressive Thinker than to say that which would induce him or her to read THE GREAT WORK for himself or herself, before venturing to draw any conclusions concerning it, and especially before assuming to pass any opinions upon its contents.

With sincere good wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to The Progressive Thinker and to each and all of its readers, not forgetting its Editors and Publishers.

Fraternally, A STUDENT.

Mr Francis has my name and address.

A Distinguished Convert.

Now comes the announcement that Marconi, the inventor and developer of wireless telegraphy, has become a convert to Spiritualism. And why not? Spiritualism is the religion of science. It is not founded on faith, but on knowledge, and the ablest minds of the last fifty years, who have had the bravery to investigate have become convinced there is no death, and that they who have laid aside the habiliments of earth life, can still, under favorable conditions, communicate with loved ones yet in the flesh.

We have seen it stated that Edison, the great American inventor, is in fact a Spiritualist.

Not Harmony.

All is not harmony among Catholics as to the pending troubles with France. Cardinal Lecot, Archbishop of Bordeaux, is reported to be dissatisfied with the policy of the Vatican which he strongly criticised, and even expressed anger at the Pope's bad advisers. In Naples the anti-clerics organized a procession, to proceed to the French consulate and present an address congratulating France on the stand taken in church matters. They were interrupted by the police.

Another Announcement.

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them

THE WORKS OF A. J. DAVIS.

Their Great Value and Significance Pointed Out by a Veteran Spiritualist.

If Spiritualists realized the value and importance of the works of Andrew Jackson Davis to the cause of Spiritualism they would not allow them to remain out of print for one moment. Without the philosophy views which were unfolded for the first time in his great work, "The Principles of Nature and Her Divine Revelations," physical manifestations from the spirit world would have proved of but little value to the world, and a true history of the beginnings of the movement would demonstrate this fact.

At that time the more intelligent portion of the people had broken away from the creeds of all the various churches and sects, and had learned to rely upon their own reason and intuition, but had no well-grounded views of the meaning and purpose of life as manifested in their conscious experience. While the rest of the world were sunk into the mazes of supernaturalism and the voice of Nature was not heard in their intuitions, his new light from heaven was unfolded to the world for the first time in Davis' great work. It was a revelation in the world's thought infinitely greater than that effected by the Copernican system of Astronomy, and wide as the universe in its scope.

The works of A. J. Davis in disabusing the public mind of its false and unnatural views of religion, and revealing the use and meaning of life, have conferred incalculable benefit upon the world, and furnished the only reasonable view of anything connected with religion. That the "Harmonial Philosophy" is to be the foundation of "The Religion of the Future" is as certain as any of the great processes of the world of Nature, and the best way to hasten such an era, and the supreme duty of Spiritualists, is to keep the expositions of these sublime principle before the public.

The work antedated by two or more years the manifestations at Rochester, and in the meantime had prepared the minds of a large number of its readers, who had imbibed its philosophy, to intelligently appreciate the naturalness of the manifestations from the spirit world, that had hitherto been regarded as miraculous and supernatural, entirely out of touch with, and having nothing in common, with our human every-day life. Without minds imbued with the principles unfolded in Davis' works, spiritual manifestations would have made but little intelligent headway in the world, and what advance it would have made would have been of questionable value to mankind. New religious sects would have arisen, and we should have had a repetition of the mental bondage and superstition that have cursed the world during all the past years.

Something Startling!

Two Leading Minds to Start a New Vibration Among Spiritualists and Thinkers Generally Commencing Jan. 19th.

Col. Olcott, the great Theosophist and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of our leading inspirational speakers, will both entertain our readers on the "Dangers of Psychism," from diametrically different standpoints. The lecture by the distinguished Colonel will be answered by Miss Harlow in her own inimitable way, both constituting something of great value to Spiritualists. Now is the time to send in your subscriptions, with an additional subscriber, and thus keep up with the advancing procession instead of following in the rear.

The Progressive Thinker is a THOUGHT-PROMOTER. It leads its readers constantly into new fields and ENRICHES THEIR MINDS with something they never thought about before. In fact, those who do not peruse THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER week after week are not posted in regard to the general trend of our Cause in SPIRITUAL AND OCCULT MATTERS, hence so far as accurate information is concerned, they must take a rear seat.

In order to illustrate more fully Occult Matters, we had a lecture by COL. OLCOTT, on "THE DANGERS OF PSYCHISM," reported in full expressly for The Progressive Thinker, and also a reply thereto by the versatile and eloquent ELIZABETH HARLOW.

Col. Olcott is the one great man among Theosophists. India and Its Occultism are an open book to him, he having lived there for many years and become familiar with the Mahatmas, and his address on the "DANGERS OF PSYCHISM" will excite very great interest among Spiritualists everywhere, and particularly will the comprehensive and exhaustive reply thereto by ELIZABETH HARLOW AWAKEN A PLEASANT VIBRATION ALL ALONG THE LINE!

The interest in The Progressive Thinker is becoming more intense all the time, and all the prominent speakers and mediums in the land have apparently selected it for their official organ, ignoring almost without exception the Organ of the Fakes in Chicago—an organ that exploits all the dishonest mediums, whose notices are carefully excluded from our columns. Honest mediums and speakers know full well that their names would be soiled if used in connection with Elsie Reynolds, the materializing medium, and the creator of bogus spirits, with artificial toggery; if used in connection with Fallis, the exposed spirit artist; with Winans, whose bushel of trick-spirit-paraphernalia was captured at Hot Springs, Ark.; with the Nichols Sisters, with their bogus spirits, and many others of like ilk, who are exploited in their special organ, the Light of Truth. Are not honest mediums and speakers defiled by having their names mentioned in a paper that exploits such a class? Are not the meetings in this city and elsewhere condoning fraud to a certain extent when they seek the columns of that paper, for their reports, thus aiding in its support? There is not, we repeat, one promient, widely-known lecturer in the land, but what would shrink from having his name mentioned in that paper, feeling it would be defiled thereby. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Prosecution Abandoned.

The prosecution for heresy against Rev. Cox of Cincinnati, has been abandoned, so he will continue his ministerial services in an orthodox church, denying Jesus was born of a virgin; that he was sired by a God, or that his body was reanimated and ascended to heaven.

The fact is: If all clerics who repudiate the impossible story of Jesus' birth and resurrection were silenced, only numskulls would remain.

There would be more happiness in the world if we would rejoice more with others instead of feigning sympathy with their sorrows.—Max Bewer.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

Fame is not got by seeking it. All such pursuit is vain. It may very well come about that a man will succeed through tact and various artifices in making for himself some sort of name. But if there is no inner worth, all will prove empty and ephemeral.—Goethe.

The Wonderful Medium.

Mr. T. W. Stanford's Seances With that Remarkable Personage, Charles Bailey—Tablets Brought from Ancient Nineveh—The Spirit Gough Delivers a Characteristic Temperance Lecture—Other Items of Importance, as Reported in The Harbinger of Light, Melbourne. Australia.

Several noticeable things have occurred at the sittings during the last month. Chief among these was the bringing of an appert for the first time from Thibet, that almost unknown land, but full of occult teachers and students. Dr. Whitcomb said: "This is the first apport brought from a practically unknown land, as it is almost terra incognita, although the British forces have lately been through the country after severe fighting. Very little is known, however, of the inner life of the Llamas. But we spirits can penetrate where no Englishman has yet gone."

Taking up the apport from the table, and which is named "Tal," he described the dark-colored leather straps and appendage as being worn either round the neck or carried on the arm of the devotee as a talisman. It is about a foot in length, and has two straps, which finish in a hidden receptacle, the whole being made from the skin of the tail of a Yak. Inside the little receptacle at the bottom of the piece of skin a wooden tablet of fir is secreted bound round with paper covered with Sanscrit writing, and kept in position by a moveable band of leather. There are also higher up the straps four or five bone rings. The piece of paper is sacred, and forms a talisman.

"You have seen pictures," Dr. Whitcomb said, "of prayer wheels, which contain prayers wound on a spool. Sometimes these pieces of paper wear out like everything else, but they are sacred and this is what they do with them. The Grand Llama priest takes the pieces of paper off the spool, and they are bound round a piece of wood and placed in the skin here. * * I think the choicest of the prayers are selected for this purpose."

On the same evening two tablets came. Abdul explained what can be well understood by those who know the potencies and imponderability of matter that a tablet "comes first like a cloud, which becomes light and full of sparks." This cloud gets smaller and denser, then thickens, and becomes a tablet like the one brought, and as it was before its disintegration through scientific, spiritual and natural forces from a tablet. In addition to the address given below by Mr. Gough, the great temperance lecturer, when in the flesh, one of the most instructive came through Rev. W. H. Witherow, entitled "A Glimpse of Heaven," and will find place in the December issue.

The following is a brief record of Kit circles held since September 14:

8th Seance, Sept. 21st.—A night of extraordinary power. Address by Sig. Valetti. Phenomena. Tablet brought from ancient Nineveh, the first of a series. This was a beautiful apport covered with hieroglyphic writing, which will be translated by Dr. Robinson later on. Another apport was thrown on the table with the sound of tinkling bells. This proved to be a chain of ornamental metal, in size like that of a Lord Mayor's chain, and worn round the neck of the married women of Equatorial Africa as a talisman. In a hidden receptacle was a charm made of wood with hieroglyphic characters, with four marks that indicated the number of children the woman had borne. The tinkling sound came from a number of brass coins hung round the chain.

9th Seance, Sept. 28th.—Address by Mr. Gough on "Temperance." Phenomena, second tablet. Plant grown by Yogi from mango seed marked and taken home by a clergyman present. It grew about two inches in a few minutes; the seed examined after was found to be marked with the initials of the gentleman mentioned. Spear heads embedded in soft clay.

10th Seance, Oct. 5th.—Address by Rev. W. H. Witherow, "Is Spiritualism Satanic?" Phenomena. Three tablets and a remarkable nest, large and covered outside and in with feathers which the bird, a large one, was said to take from turkeys or other birds handy.

11th Seance, Oct. 12th.—Great power apparent, and said to be on "both sides" by Dr. Whitcomb. Address by Rev. W. H. Witherow on "A Glimpse from Heaven." Two tablets came immediately, light being down but a second or two, and a tablet caught in hands by Abdul. The other "apport" from Thibet is described in full above.

It is with much pleasure that the following address by Mr. Gough, the temperance lecturer, is given for the benefit of Harbinger readers:

Mr. John B. Gough:—My name is Gough. I thank you very much for your welcome. I am so pleased to be able to speak to my fellows once more. I am so thankful to-night that progress is eternal, and that when I laid down my worldly burden I was permitted to enter into the progressive life where I cannot cease from well doing.

I suppose most of you—or all of you—have read the works of that novelist, Charles Dickens. Dickens makes one of his characters say: "Death does not change us more than life"; this statement is true. Let me make a confession to-night. When I became an advocate of temperance and a Christian, I believed that death worked certain changes in the spiritual state of man. To-night I know that I was in error, and that if a man die in his evil state he will pass into the unseen and remain in that condition until of his own free will he chooses to rise out of it. Therefore, it should be a great warning to every one of you to be careful how you live.

The subject to-night I call "A Spiritual Crusade." You know that after being for many years a drunkard, I was rescued as a brand from the burning. I am thankful to-night when I look back from my spiritual home to my earth state, and I shudder when I think what might have been my spiritual condition. I am thankful for the ambassadors of God and of righteousness and of temperance, and to old Joel Stratton, who put his hand upon my shoulder, and said, "Won't thou come with us, friend?" Oh, yes. How they labored during those weeks of terrible temptation to which I was exposed, and when the demon of alcohol beset me and would have dragged me back to my former condition, they supported me with words of comfort in those dark hours of my trial, and I am thankful to-night to know that they were successful.

Death has not changed my thoughts upon this great subject, but I wish to-night to make an explanation. First let me say I do not speak as a fanatic, but as one who has tasted in earthly life of a hell and felt the hell pangs which a man suffers who has lost his will, and man, the noblest work of God, has become a thing, has become a creature in the hands of an appetite and is being dragged down into the abyss. There is something worse than the torments of hell—the material hell of some people; it is the unsatisfied cravings of the poor drunkard, the debauchee, who roams unsatisfied, tormented and accursed. This is hell enough for any human soul, and knowing the awful misery that is created amongst you, and having seen the other side of the picture, the awful torments, the punishment of an avenging conscience, that is on the spiritual side, I say my desire, my earnestness is intensified to help and succor others, and pluck them as I was plucked—a brand from the burning.

So this is my excuse, if excuse is needed, for returning, and through one of my fellows sounding out the warning one hundred times more earnestly than I did from the platforms of England and America. Let me say I am not fanatical; alcohol may be a good creature of God, and in the right mind a man may partake of it and not be injured excepting in the fact that his example may lead a weaker one to destruction.

I am so thankful that after life's fitful fever I can again speak to you upon this subject. In the days of my flesh I was very anxious that my poor utterances should be written down that they might be printed so that the world, after I had passed perhaps from their remembrance, might read the warning words of one who had suffered, one whose life was quickly becoming a blank. Oh, the horror of a wasted existence, of opportunities gone and of a life misspent!

This spiritual crusade, then, to-night, is one that can be taken up and carried forward with great prospect of success, because it is permitted for the spiritual identity to manifest himself or herself, and with added knowledge and experience speak of that which they do know and testify that which they have seen. Understand me, I am not come to speak to you who lead clean, sober lives, except to warn you, but to say this—As you go along, and if I understand rightly your ambition is to help mankind, and as strong drink—over-indulgence in alcohol is one of the greatest factors in the degradation of mankind—I say there is a grand prolific field for work before you. I say, that as Spiritualists, true to your colors, preaching the religion of humanity as you go along your wayside journey, if you see one fallen by the wayside or in danger, no matter how low down in the abyss of degradation, be not dismayed, remember that a Gough once was low down and was saved from that awful condition!

May the persistent efforts of one who, knowing the evil and the punishment entailed, sought out of love for his brethren to snatch such a one from the evil to come. Be helpful! Oh, there is a grand field for you! While you are telling people that man is immortal, add the words "Be careful how you live upon the earth plane in the flesh life, because of the very fact that you are immortal." You are building up character, you are molding and shaping that future, and how shall you enter into that life as a drunkard and a debauchee, sunk in lust and drunkenness?

Oh, my friends, you know something of the horrors and the degradation of human life through over-indulgence in alcohol, but if you could but peep within the veil and see there the spirits imprisoned, oh, it would shake your soul, and you would register a vow that as you taught that man was immortal, as you taught the brotherhood of the great human family, you would set before them the terrors and the dangers of a life misspent.

Do not mistake me. There are other evils besides the evils of drunkenness, but it appears to me this one evil generates others and absorbs and covers them all. It appears to me that if this one evil could be wiped away the laboring classes especially would benefit by it. Oh, the brilliant minds that have sunk underneath this fell destroyer! and the men who cannot withstand the onslaughts of this demon are the brainy people. Alcohol strikes at the brain of man, it destroys the will power and man becomes a thing. In place of being able to say "I am master and you are my slave, and I will use you as a creature of God," it becomes your master, and at last says, "Stay thou there and do as I bid." Tamerlane once built a pyramid of skulls, but to-night if it were possible to do it, you could build a pyramid that would reach almost to the clouds with skulls of those who have gone down in the onslaught of the demon alcohol.

Remember this, that alcohol kills twice. It kills the body and destroys the soul; it destroys the spiritual life, and there in the prison house are millions of those who were slaves to appetite, shut up this night with unsatisfied desires crying aloud in their torments, and the only comfort that I have, and that is a great and a grand and a noble one, is that eventually they will be liberated and taught the error of their ways. The appetite shall be mastered and the drunkards at last, though perhaps they will sit in lowly places, shall be saved from their appetite and from the evil.

Oh, my friends, it is for you who are humanitarians to tell the people the truth, not as some fanatics would teach—remember this, I am not in sympathy with fanatical temperance people, but I speak as one who knows, who has felt the loss of self-respect. Ah, do you know how men and women fall? Because it lowers them in their own estimation; and when a man or woman loses self-respect, they go down and down! The demon says, "Here cover it up, drown your thoughts; drink again, drink and be merry, for to-morrow you die."

Yes, my friends, I am thankful to-night to be able to tell you that I am not dead. John B. Gough is still alive, and if I have permission to go up and down through your earth plane selecting men and women to speak through, or being permitted to speak through those agents which you call "sensitives"—all new terms to me because in my day I would not tolerate such a thing as spirit return—I will be pleased to use such instruments and will not be tired in speaking of this theme because I know now and have seen the other side of the picture.

I do not come to speak scientifically, I do not know anything about physiology, I do not tell you that so many ounces of alcohol will destroy your physical body, I do not know anything about therapeutics, but I do know that the over-indulgence in alcohol will destroy you, spirit, soul and body! And as one who has the best interests of my brothers and sisters at heart, as one who has been plucked out of the fire, I come back with all the earnestness and intensity I am capable of and say, rescue the drunkard!! Do not pass by and say, "He brought himself to it." Perhaps in a like environment you, too, might have sunk into that awful degradation, but, with a cheery word, say to the lost one, so sunk in drunkenness, "Come, my brother," as Joel Stratton said to me.

Do not be afraid to place your hand upon his shoulder. How well do I remember the magnetism of that hand laid upon me as I stood upon that bridge contemplating the destruction of my sin-sick soul and body, when he said with kindly voice, "Wilt thou not come with me, friend?" God bless the Quakers! They are not ashamed of what they believe and to put it into practice, too. If I could rouse sympathy for the fallen I shall then have done something for humanity's sake. Go down into the slums of your city—no need to go to the East End of London nor to the slums of New York and Chicago—go down to the slums of your own city and you will see what drink is doing for the people!

Be not carried away by the arguments of some about building hotels and erecting breweries. It may be a good thing for some people's pockets, but set over against all that what is good for the suffering and what the spiritual loss, and I say that you will agree with me that something should be done—and because of humanity. I have been told upon your earth plane there has been a discussion why people do not go to church. I know why thousands will not listen concerning the future life. It is because all that is good and noble within them is under a cloud. But after my conversion I believed, as I believe now, that deep down in the human heart, covered up perhaps, very deep, you may lay your finger on that which is human, you may appeal to some soft spot in the heart.

Once in a city of the United States of America, passing one night down the thoroughfare, I saw a man standing with his back to the wall, intoxicated. I approached him and looked, and I said, "Friend, why don't you go home? My brother, you should not stand here making use of that language." With an oath he said, "Home! home! What is the use of going home? I have no home, it is hell!" Ah, yes, he had made it hell. Subsequently I found that he had driven a good wife into the street, and then he had sold little by little everything to supply himself with drink, trying to appease the cursed craving; and I looked at him and said, "Oh, my friend, I am sorry to see you like this to-night. Don't you know you are a man?" In his muddled state, he said, "A man? Why (mentioning the name of a publican) he just now called me a pig!" "No," I said, "men sometimes lower themselves or debase themselves with the swine, but you are a man, God-begotten, you belong to God. You are His; you have an immortal spirit. Where are you going to spend the future? Was not your mother a good woman?" Looking at me, he said, "Yes, my mother was a good woman." Then he turned round and said, "I will go home," and I besought him to let me go with him.

I visited him several times, with the result that I weaned him from drink. I helped him as others had helped me. It was hard work. Sometimes he would slip and fall, but I believed there was good in the man, and he passed to spirit life a sober man. Oh, my friends, to save one life, to rescue one, is worth all the effort and labor that you can put forth.

This is the spiritual crusade that I am engaged in. I am so pleased, again I say, that I have a knowledge of spirit return and of the good that may be done through it. Do not, my friends, do not be led astray with the empty talk of some who would question the good that can be done by the spirits of men and women who can return. Do not listen to those who say it is Satanic! Satan stands forth personified as Alcohol, and if I am fighting alcohol I fight Satan. Though the personal evil influence does not exist, yet there are any number of evil influences and you may call them Satans if you will; but they are to be withstood and their influence made null and void, and men and women may be rescued to be lights in the firmament of love."

MRS. LOIE F. PRIOR in Melbourne, Australia—This Well Known Lady's Lectures and Tests Have Been Well Received in That Far-off Land, Creating Unusual Interest.

After a most successful season in New Zealand, Mrs. Prior accepted the invitation of the V. A. S. to occupy their platform during the month of October on her way to England. At the first lecture, given at the Austral Hall on October 7, her subject was "The Resurrection Morn," and she was welcomed by a large and enthusiastic audience. On the following Sunday evening she spoke on the scientific basis of Spiritualism and its future in relation to religious thought, the lecture being one of the best that Mrs. Prior has given in Melbourne. Other excellent lectures followed, and the concluding and fifth lecture of the series will be given on November 4, the subject of which will be advertised in next Saturday's daily papers. A most important aspect of Mrs. Prior's work is represented by her "Demonstrations of Immortality," which have taken place each Tuesday night during the month at the Upper Athenaeum Hall. At these meetings every one of her clairvoyant descriptions have been recognized, and the Christian names, which Mrs. Prior sometimes hears clairaudiently, and at others sees written in illuminated letters, are remarkably correct. At the two last meetings flowers were brought by many in the audience, which proved a link to the spiritual presences wishing to give messages.

A most successful "Welcome" meeting was given to Mrs. Prior, on October 12, at the Austral Hall, which was decorated under the supervision of a Ladies' Reception Committee. A farewell meeting is also announced for Monday evening, Nov. 5, at Austral Hall, and Mrs. Prior will start on her journey to England with the hearty good wishes of the crowd of friends she has made in Melbourne.

W. J. COLVILLE in Tasmania, Australia—Since Mr. Colville's Memorable Week of Debate in Melbourne on His Return from W. Australia and Adelaide, He Has Been Lecturing in Launceston and Hobart.

Mr. W. F. Ford, the veteran Spiritualist of Launceston, writes enthusiastically of the four lectures delivered by Mr. Colville in that city. "From the first lecture, 'The Conquest of Heredity and Environment,' Mr. Colville," he says, "established himself with those who were privileged to hear him, as one of the most gifted exponents of the Higher Thought. His final lecture will long be remembered as the most masterly exposition of its kind. He is far and away the best lecturer," Mr. Lord adds, "that has ever visited this city during my long residence here. He cleared away so much of the straw from the true grain, that Spiritualist and Theosophist alike must feel ever indebted to him, and I, as a Spiritualist, am truly thankful that I have heard him, as his visit has confirmed me more than ever in the truth of my convictions." A long and favorable notice of Mr. Colville's two first lectures appeared in the Launceston Examiner.

At Hobart Mr. Colville's work was still more publicly recognized. In the Mercury of October 20, more than a column report appears of his first lecture on "Ideals and How We May Realize Them." The chair was taken by Dr. Gerard Smith. At the end of a detailed report of the lecture, the Hobart Mercury says, "Mr. Colville is pre-eminently a teacher. His orderly presentation of a tremendous array of facts crowded into a two hour's lecture, is in itself a most interesting phase of his work." His ability in this respect "shows him to be possessed of the best type of eloquence a public speaker can command." Mr. Colville is now in New Zealand till November 30, when he sails to U. S. A.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PAIN—This is the Title of the Eighth Lecture Delivered Before the Spiritualists of Milan, at Their Lecture Hall in that City, and is from the Pen of Signor Alessandro Turbiglio. It Is a Scholarly Production Like Its Predecessors.

The writer reviews the opinions held on the subject by many ancient and modern thinkers, but does not appear to have met with that wise little book, "The Mystery of Pain," by the late James Hinton. Looking at the origin of pain, whether physical or moral, it seems to be occasioned by a conscious or unconscious disregard of or disobedience to natural laws enacted by Supreme Wisdom for the welfare and happiness of mankind; that disregard or disobedience is generally the result of ignorance; and the pain we experience is necessary in order to admonish us of the existence of those laws, and of our imperative duty to make ourselves acquainted with them, in order to bring ourselves into conformity with the Divine Will which expresses itself in those laws. Pain, then, is part of our education and discipline, and its value is not inconsiderable, when we come to consider it as a means of educing in all who suffer, a feeling of sympathy for others who are similarly afflicted. Without its quickening and stimulating power, our natures would probably become hard and callous. But the sympathy called forth by the pain undergone by others, rendered comprehensible to us by personal experience, is really a deeply religious feeling and powerfully auxiliary to our spiritual growth. And when that sympathy is universal and binds the whole human race together as by a chain of gold; then, as Signor Turbiglio observes in the concluding sentence of his lecture, "all mankind will be united in an ideal of immense pieta (the word signifies both piety and pity in the Italian language, and in the sublime conception of a future in which all men, with a smile of peace, tranquility and love, will complete the sad journey from the cradle to the tomb—from one form of existence to another more full and more perfect."

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

In Relation to Spiritualism and the Soul's Advancement.

Are our lamps trimmed and burning, sister, brother?
Are we holding forth to all our light?
Does our every thought and act toward each other,
Prove allegiance to the Cause of Right?

It behooves us to ask ourselves the above questions, especially at this time when the world itself is turning its face heavenward, and the hungry cry of human souls borne from every wind of doctrine, from every walk of life, is ringing out clear and distinct, with no uncertain sound, asking Spiritualists for the BREAD OF LIFE with which to satisfy their longing for positive knowledge of the continuity of life in the, to them, "unknown beyond."

What are we going to do about it? What have we found in the Great Storehouse of knowledge? Is there not more than enough for us and them? Is it right for us who have entered into "the Promised Land" to refuse to show others who are so tired of the soul-stunting food of theology, the bridge on which we ourselves crossed? Do we not know that all mankind are brethren, and that we are all God's children, regardless of race, kindred or color?

Then if we know it, why do we not practice what we preach? Why do some want to "set up shop," as it were, and "peddle" Spiritualism as though it were a common thing? Is it not more reasonable to believe that what is good for one is good for all? How much confidence can we have in those who, although they claim to have the Key of Knowledge to that which is to lift humanity out of the slums of despair and bondage, are wont to "hide their light under a bushel," and sell for so MUCH A PEEP that which every right-minded Spiritualist holds to be sacred.

How is God's kingdom to be set up on earth unless the "money changers" of the present day, who are continually defiling "God's Temple" (the temple of their own souls), as well as "The Temple of Truth, Spiritualism, are cast out? Even though it may be necessary to scourge them.

I like the ring of the reports of the N. S. A. convention, held in Chicago. Those reports show the strength of the great Tidal Waves of Truth that are refusing to be held in check, and every true Spiritualist should consider it not only a duty, but a privilege to be allowed to strengthen the hands of those brave, unfaltering, heroic officers who control our National vessel which is laden with sweet fragrance of spiritual truths, in their noble efforts to bring the glorious gospel of Spiritualism to every soul in purity, chastity and love.

If Spiritualists everywhere will rally to the call for help, and respond with as many dollars as they can possibly spare, toward making our N. S. A. self-supporting, we will have home missionaries visiting our home cities, and pouring floods of light into our very midst, opening the very Flood Gates of Heaven, and causing the "manna" of spiritual fruit to fall thick and fast among us.

I wish Brother Francis would open a column in The Progressive Thinker in which to receive voluntary pledges for the N. S. A., from individual members, or Spiritualists who are situated so as to be isolated from any society. I am willing to pledge $5 instead of the one requested by the committee, to be paid before January 1, 1907. While the N. S. A. is so valiantly standing for truth in every department of our cause, we are wondering what disposition is to be made of the so-called developing mediums who are willing to throw their own hypnotic influence over any and all sensitives whom they come in contact with, for the almighty dollar, many times, no doubt, interfering with development that otherwise would have a rich harvest for humanity, and often engrafting twigs of their own sensual nature, causing thorns and briars to spring up instead of flowers and fruit.

It certainly is time for humanity to know by being told directly by those who have learned, perhaps by bitter experience, to select their instructors in regard to spiritual unfoldment from among competent teachers in the spirit spheres, for there are many worthy ones climbing life's ladder in "The beyond," who are not only willing but anxiously waiting an opportunity to lend a hand to earth's children. Of course if there is any information that one mortal can give another in regard to mediumistic unfoldment, that is all right; but everyone should keep their reason uppermost, weigh and accept or reject, as reason dictates.

Again I ask, what are we going to do about these things? Which side are we going to line up on?

Is it not about time for Spiritualists to be considering something in regard to the continuity of life in the beyond, aside from the fact that we live? For my part the message concerning how we live and what is our condition in spirit life, is of far more importance than the knowledge, 'No Death," priceless as is the knowledge that death is only re-birth of the spirit out of our "house of clay." The knowledge that our lives here are building our "home over there," to me is of far more value. We can and must conquer environments and circumstances, and eradicate from our lives all that is unseemly, unchaste and wrong. Hence we can say with our angel teachers,

A solid foundation, ye children of earth,
Is found in the knowledge that death is re-birth.
The soul is immortal—a truth of great worth—
Each spirit is proving that comes back to earth.

Man Is a Spirit.

"As the Mountains, the cloud-bearing Alps and Andes, are in geological perspective attenuated into undulating vapor and fire-mist, so the scientific and philosophic thought of this century idealizes matter into a vibratory force or power."

That man is a spirit, acting through bodily organs in this material world is not a doctrine of yesterday. It is a very ancient doctrine. At an early period in the history of reflective thought, philosophers pronounced the sensible world merely an appearance, solid-seeming as it looks and feels. They saw that to persons differently endowed in the matter of senses, or with additional senses, it would be no longer the world which it seems to be to us, constituted as we are at present, but quite different. Power is an all-inclusive word in the universe, covering both mind and matter; and all force or power is in the last analysis spiritual. Light is strictly a spiritual fact of consciousness, for the vibrating ether is not luminous. Light, sound, odor, taste, exist nowhere except in ourselves; for, in the sublime phrase of Lewes, "Nature, in her insentient solitude, is eternal darkness and eternal silence."

Matter is the pliant garment of spirit, which is constantly woven "in the roaring loom of Time." Not that we are all-in-all, because there is a power, not ourselves, constantly interacting with our inner self, and thus producing the phenomenal world which environs us, Mill says our feelings and thoughts are the only things which we directly know to be real. Matter is a mere assumption to account for our sensations. Instead of the world containing us, it is being constantly created by us in connection with the eternal animating power, for which or whom there is no name. Thus modern thought, so far from being materialistic, as the theological reactionists affirm, is idealizing matter.

As the mountains, the cloud-bearing Alps and Andes, are in geological perspective attenuated into undulating vapor and fire-mist, so the scientific and philosophic thought of this century idealizes matter into a vibratory force or power.

Death, which Mill defines to be a mere cessation of the stimulus of the sensible world, makes us spirits, pure and simple, or clothes us doubtless with a more subtile, pervasive, and beautiful corporeality. The migration to "the land of souls" as Byron calls it, is evidently not much of a journey. It is simply a change of corporeal costume. In the light, then, of current physiology and psychology, the human body is literally a breathing-house, not made with hands, as Coleridge calls it, exactly adapted to the temporal and temporary use of the spirit or "inner man," who peers through its eyes as windows, makes the hands the executive organs of his will, the tongue the exponent of his thoughts, and ears and nostrils the avenue of distinct classes of sensations, pleasurable or otherwise.

The brain is as supreme among the organs of spirit in position as it is in function, it being the capital or crown of the corporeal shaft, and the chosen seat, with its intricate nerve-labyrinths, of the mind, which is enthroned in it as a citadel. The lungs give buoyancy, animation and locomotiveness. The great Swedenborgian psycho-physiologist, Wilkinson, likens them to a balloon tethered in the chest. He says: "The breathing lungs are the barometer that indicate the peace or the power of the storm of the soul; the heart is the animal man himself; hearing is a new-born palace of the air, whose shakes are music and whose winds are speech. And the eye, round like the world and rolling on its axis, communes afresh with the whole possessions of light, and sees all, from the sun to the landscape, in the gloss of that glory which is the image of the truth." Man the real man, whether in the flesh or out of it, is a spiritual being and as such belongs to the realm of which material phenomena are but manifestations.

Mental power depends upon the size of the brain only in a general way. The proposition is open to so many qualifications that it is of but little account in discussing the mental power in connection with the brain of races or individuals. The size of the hat which a man wears is no criterion of the bulk varies according to peculiarities of race. The ancient Peruvians, an intellectual people, were remarkable for their very small skulls and for brains averaging in weight less than those of many idiots.

All physiologists agree now that the gray matter of the brain surface, called the cortex, is the seat of all the processes connected with sensation and thought. The greater part of the brain, the white matter, consisting of bundles of fibers underneath and within the gray layer, is not the seat of the mental powers. The fibers serve as conductors to and from the gray matter. The gray matter is the definite seat of the conscious mind. The gray matter of the brain surface is so arranged as to subserve specific functions, but only in certain localities in its substance, and each physical function probably has its seat in a certain area of the organ. The destruction of one particular area of the gray only 564 millimeters, and that of Darwin only 563 millimeters. Many men of only average and less than average intelligence have larger heads. Brain whatever of his intellect. The circumference of Napoleon's head was layer involves no loss of sight; the injury of another area entails no loss of hearing.

Is the true theory then that of the Aeolian harp theory that sensation and thought are the products of vibrations through a specially arranged mechanism? Well, the amount of mentality is not determined by the amount of gray matter. The size of the brain is no index of consciousness in its various forms of sensation, perception and thought. The mean brain weight of Englishmen is smaller than that of Swedes, Bavarians, Hessians or Bohemians. Of these five races, the brain weight of the Bohemian is the greatest—1.20 grams more than that of the Englishman. The brain of Helmholtz, one of the greatest men of modern times, weighed hardly 45 ounces, and that of Dr. Dollinger, the historian, weighed only 37.7 ounces, below the average weight of the normal European brains, which is 49 ounces. On the other hand even among paupers Prof. Marshall found thirteen brains weighing above 60 ounces each, more than five ounces more than the weight of Daniel Webster's brain. These facts, and many similar ones can be given, are sufficient to indicate that mental capacity is not correlated with brain weight. And it is not true that the more gray matter in the brain one has, the more thought capacity he possesses.

Man has two brains, just as he has two eyes; one-half of the gray matter is in the right brain, the other half in the left brain. Yet one of these brains can do all the thinking, as one of the eyes can do all the seeing that is necessary. Persons have lived for years with only one hemisphere in working order, without any impairment of the mind. Neither the eye nor the gray matter of the brain is the source of light. The amount of gray matter in the cranial cavity does not determine man's power, nor does his personality depend upon the amount of this substance.

These are scientific facts, and they should be sufficient to set to thinking those who believe that the brain is the source of thought and that the mind is but an aggregate of functions of the brain. Evidently the mind uses the brains as an instrument and the conformation and quality of the brain have much to do with the quality of the thought which finds expression through this organ. But the latest and most thorough investigations of physiology as well as of psychology negative the materialistic conception that brain produces thought and that mind is a product of brain activity.

In the gray matter of the brain is the seat of the thinking capacity; but the brain produces thought no more than the violin produces music. An intelligent force back of the violin produces the music, and an intelligent force back of the brain produces the thought manifested through the brain, the instrument of the mind.

Henry McDonald says that his daughter, aged 11, sat for development several months, and now writes poetry inspirationally. He writes: "She has written two pieces a week on all manner of subjects. She is never over twenty minutes writing so many verses."

Mr. J. S. Drake and his wife, Mrs. Maude Lord Drake, well and favorably known in Chicago, passed through the city last week on their way East to visit relatives residing at No. 104 Kennilworth Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Golden Center Spiritualist Society meets at Star Lodge Hall, No. 378 S. Western avenue, between Harrison and Polk streets. Conducted by Prof. McLane and J. E. Coe.

Frank L. Seiferth writes from "Lawrence," but gives no name of State, hence no one will know to what "Lawrence" his notice applies, as there are many such towns in the United States. Will writers be careful to give the state as well as the town?

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society listened to a fine discourse last Sunday evening by Dr. J. A. Marvin, comparing the religion of the orthodox church with Spiritualism. All present enjoyed it very much. Mr. Fraser gave a short talk, followed by Mrs. Harper and Mrs. Moore with messages, which were well received. R. Gilray is to speak on the 30th, and Dr. C. S. Tisdale on January 6. Dr. Tisdale will give the audience more knowledge of the ancient order of the Magi, which is very interesting. We will not hold circles on New Year's night, but on Tuesday, the 8th of January. Mr. Fraser will be present and conduct it."

Mrs. Geo. Williams writes: "The Ladies' Spiritualist Temple Fund Society of Fullerton street, Cleveland, Ohio, held its annual meeting on Thursday evening, Dec. 21, 1906, to elect officers to serve for the ensuing year of 1907: President, Mrs. E. Gray; first vice-president, Mrs. W. J. Barker; second vice-president, Mrs. Mary Lottig; treasurer, Mrs. H. Prindle; secretary, Mr. C. A. Sollinger; assistant secretary, Mrs. George Williams; trustee, Mr. Barker; musical director, Mr. Eckert; pianist, Mrs. F. Henwood. Brother Edgerly will be with us until the close of this year, and his sermons are fine and uplifting, giving to strangers plenty of food for thought. For the months of January and February, 1907, Brother W. F. Peck of Missouri, will be with us."

C. Kirchner writes: "Mrs. C. Parkhurst, speaker and test medium of Baltimore, who held very successful meetings in Chicago and Rockford, has left for her home, but will return for an engagement in February with the Spiritual Science Church of Rockford. Any society desiring her services the latter part of February and March, would do well by addressing her at 917 W. Mulberry street, Baltimore, Md."

Mrs. Savage writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "It is some time since Tacoma, Wash., has sent in a report, but we are still alive and the prospects for our society are fine. Since October we have had those indefatigable workers, Dr. and Mrs. W. D. Noyes, and hope we can keep them the rest of the season. Their work has given us twenty-five new members, and we see strangers at each Sunday service. They are the first spiritual ministers ever in Tacoma, who have used the beautiful ritual of the N. S. A. in the burial of our dead and in the christening of our children, and it has been highly spoken of by those in and out of our ranks. May the angel world always send us such straightforward, honest and conscientious workers."

On Sunday, Dec. 30, Oscar A. Edgerly will conclude a very successful two months' engagement with the Ladies' Temple Fund Society of Cleveland, Ohio. That Mr. Edgerly's work has given satisfaction is indicated by the fact that the Temple Society has re-engaged him for the month of January, 1908. With the exception of September, 1907, Mr. Edgerly's time is all engaged until February, 1908.

G. H. Brooks arrived home from Pittsburg, Pa., on New Year's day, having closed a very successful and pleasant month's engagement with the First Spiritual Church of that city, of which C. L. Stevens is president. Mr. Brooks will remain nearly two weeks at his home, No. 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., and will respond to calls for funerals. About the 12th of the month he expects to return to Wisconsin to resume his labors there in the interest of the State Society.

P. A. Norman writes: "I like The Progressive Thinker more every year, and among my choice current literature, your valuable Progressive Thinker is my favorite. I hope it will stick to the everlasting truth, and fearlessly expose all frauds and mock mediumship which has done such uncountable damage to the cause of true Spiritualism."

J. C. F. Grumbine is planning to visit many eastern and western camps during the next season. He begins with the opening of the State Spiritualist Convention at Hartford, Conn., May 4 and 5, where he speaks for the fourth season. Camp meetings wishing to secure his services for three or more lectures, can address him at 24 Strathmore Road, Brookline, Mass.

H. E. Martin writes from No. 49 Dudley Place, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "My wife, Mrs. Jennie Martin, writes to me from Sandusky, Ohio, where she is lecturing for the Psychic Research Society: 'I feel more at home now. I had good meetings Sunday afternoon and evening. The lectures were appreciated, and the readings highly praised and all recognized. People were very pleasant. Mr. Jackson is a fine, intelligent man, and makes a good chairman. He leads in singing and plays the piano. To precede my lecture, he read a poem. Miss Zonver, who entertains me, is a fine woman.' As my wife is very modest, I will help her. She is a real spiritual, high-minded woman. If any society wants a speaker, we would be pleased to have them write to us. Her terms are: Her expenses and entertainment, and what the society feels able to pay."

Samuel A. Huntington, Malden, Mass., writes of the Progressive Spiritualist Society, Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant St., Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president: "At the afternoon circle, Mrs. Caster, Mrs. Morton, Mr. Patch, Mr. Greenlaw and Mrs. E. R. True made short, but very interesting addresses on "Truth Wherever It May Be Found," and "Attendance at Spiritual Meetings," and Mrs. Carter gave several messages. The evening meeting opened with a beautiful praise service. Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, of Somerville, Mass., occupied the platform as speaker and message bearer. She prefaced her work by reading a beautiful poem entitled, "Dying," and chose the same title for her subject. Mrs. Harding gave a very beautiful address; she is a fine medium. Mrs. Nellie E. Abbott, of So. Lawrence, Mass., will be our next speaker on Sunday evening, December 30, and Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Unity Church, Boston, Mass., every Thursday evening during January, 1907."

Mamie Young writes: "Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koontz, pastor Divine Spiritual Church, had an unusually interesting meeting Sunday afternoon and evening. Her lectures are always interesting and instructive on spiritual development lines, and the tests given by her guides are always looked forward to for the consoling and cheering words from spirit life."

Harry J. Moore has found it necessary to resign as speaker for the First Spiritualists (Temple) Society of San Diego, Cal., after serving November and December of a winter's engagement. He will remain in San Diego from one to three months longer with the hope of fully recovering his health which has been impaired as a result of overwork. Address him there, General Delivery, until further notice.

Wallace H. Moore, Shepard, Ohio, writes: "In my notice in your late issue of Mrs. Marian Carpenter's work here in Columbus your printer has made me say of her that she rarely condemns the sin. To leave that error uncorrected would be doing the lady great injustice and make it quite embarrassing to the writer. It should read, 'She has great charity for the sinner, but severely condemns the sin.'"

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Dr. Geo. Fuller of Boston, Mass., who has been lecturing for the First Association, will be succeeded by E. W. Sprague and wife, for January and February. Dr. Fuller is a well-known speaker, and is open for engagements. His address is Onset, Mass. Mrs. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., and Alfred Terry were the message bearers after each lecture. Mr. Alfred Terry holds meetings in Smith's Hall every Sunday evening, assisted by Miss Susie C. Clarke, of Dorchester, Mass. Mrs. M. J. Stephens and Mrs. Price, assisted by Mrs. Willid, Mrs. H. D. Morgan, secretary for the First Association, gave an entertainment for the children's lyceum. These socials are well attended. The Temple League holds meetings as usual at Pythian Temple, Mrs. Farrow, president."

Correspondent writes: "It affords us great pleasure to announce through the columns of this progressive paper that on Sunday, Dec. 16, the stork visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morton Hartwell, 1104 High street, Racine, Wis., and left a bright little star in the material form of an eight-pound girl, little Mabel Estelle. We hope that her life may prove one of sunshine and happiness to all around her, and that the Star of Hope may shine forth in the future life as it has already started to do."

Mrs. W. C. Selbrede writes from Billings, Mont.: "I have the pleasure of announcing that the Rev. G. C. Love, one of the prominent lecturers and faithful workers for the cause of Spiritualism on the Pacific coast, stopped over in Billings on his way home from the National Spiritualists' Association, and conducted a series of lectures here. He is a good speaker, and gave the people a much better understanding of the Bible. His tests were above the average, and all recognized. We expect him to make us a visit again on his return East in the spring."

Favorable reports from the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., still continue to reach us. On the evening of December 23, the rostrum was occupied by home talent, and Christmas day was the principal subject discussed. The president, Daniel McDougal, followed Mr. Booth, both indicating the Pagan origin of the day, and both addresses were generously applauded. A Mrs. King was called from the audience by the president, who made a brief but very beautiful address, inspired by the loved ones on the other shore, that delighted every listener. Dr. Hammond followed with messages which were recognized by all to whom they were given. The Society is still on the upgrade, with prospects as bright as any other in the state.

W. F. Peck will serve the Cleveland, Ohio, Spiritualist Society during the months of January and February. Societies or individuals within easy reach can secure his services for week nights on reasonable terms. He will also officiate at weddings and funerals when called upon. He may be addressed in care of C. W. Henwood, 10821 Hampden avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

C. A. Andre writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The New Thought Society is having excellent meetings this season. They opened in October with Mrs. Carpenter of Detroit as speaker. Her talent was recognized and well appreciated; her work was fine. Mrs. D. A. Morrill followed her. We hope to secure her for our meeting on Sunday of Holiday week. She goes to Lake Helen, Fla., in the near future for two months. We feel justified in praising her work. She is a highly respected citizen of our beautiful city, and although comparatively young in the work, her lectures are the equal of any speaker on any platform in the country. The Ladies' Aid is doing a great work and everything is going on nicely. On next Sunday evening, Mrs. Belle Fellar, another of our home workers will occupy our rostrum. We would be pleased to hear from speakers for January, February and March, who are in easy reach of our city. Our secretary is T. J. Haynes, Grand Rapids, Mich., Soldiers' Home Station."

C. L. Hatch writes from 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass.: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual, and a very interesting meeting was held, Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse presiding in the absence of the president. This was the closing session of the year, and a very enjoyable time was spent. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles was the speaker of the evening. Others were present and took part. Next Friday evening we will hold New Year's seance in the afternoon. Business meeting will be held and members are requested to be present at 4 p. m., sharp, so as to finish the business of the year. Election of officers at close of other regular business. Mattie E. A. Albe, president; A. J. Haynes, secretary."

COMSTOCK LOSES U. S. SALARY.

Reformer Ousted as Postal Inspector, on Art Student's Complaint.

Washington, Dec. 29.—Announcement is made to-day that Anthony Comstock of New York, has been dismissed as a postoffice inspector, a $1,500 position he had held for thirty-four years. The action was taken on complaint of the Art Student's League, which held it was not right that Mr. Comstock should be able to walk into any postoffice and exxamine the mail addressed to any individual or corporation, breaking the seals of letters as he saw fit. As president of the Society for the Suppression of Vice Comstock draws an annual salary of $5,000, and has perquisites.—Special Correspondent of the Chicago Journal.

BOOK REVIEW.

A Dialogue on Religion. Between Rev. John Jutz, S. J., and Dr. T. A. Bland.

This is a booklet of forty pages, printed in clear type on fine paper, and bound in elegant flexible leatheret covers. Price 25 cents.

Father Jutz is a Roman Catholic priest of the order of Jesuits who has for many years been in charge of the Holy Rosary Mission at Pine Ridge, S. Dak. Dr. Bland, as our readers know, is one of the most scholarly and progressive scientists and literary men of the age, author of "In the World Celestial," "Pioneers of Progress," and other popular books.

In 1891 the Doctor visited Pine Ridge Indian Agency as the representative of the Indian Defence Association, and Father Jutz being in full accord with his views of Indian policies, invited him to be his guest. During his visit this dialogue occurred. It is not a debate, as the priest simply asked questions, which Dr. Bland answered. Those questions and answers cover the whole ground of the difference between the dogmas of the Roman Catholic and orthodox Protestant churches and liberalism, as represented by Unitarians, Spiritualists, etc., and also the history of the conspiracy by which the pagan Emperor of Rome subverted the primitive apostolic church and established in its stead the despotic hierarchy known as the Roman Catholic church, a religio-political institution that dominated the world for 1500 years; brought on the dark ages, and still exercises vast power for evil, but which is destined to be swept away by the rising tide of free thought and the sublime revelations of Spiritualism. This dialogue will be an eye-opener to Protestants as well as Catholics, and a most valuable hand-book for Spiritualists and other liberals. It is written in a spirit so admirable, that it cannot offend even the most orthodox.

At the close of this dialogue, Father Jutz said, "We have had a long talk and to me a very interesting one. You are a great historian, Dr. Bland; you have given me much to think about and many things to look into. I still think you are wrong on religion, but you are a good man; I love you as a brother and hope to meet you in heaven."

To this Dr. Bland responded, "You are a good man, Father Jutz; you are a great deal better than your creed or you could not hope to meet a heretic in heaven. I sincerely hope and firmly believe that we will meet in heaven."

This beautiful brochure of liberal thought is for sale at this office.

TEST CONDITIONS.

To Spiritualists and Spiritualist Mediums Everywhere.

I have prepared test conditions by which I hope to prove that spirit manifestations emanate from a source outside of any mortal person.

I will say that I approach this subject in the spirit of honest and hopeful investigation. For a number of years I was an unquestioning believer in the truth of Modern Spiritualism. In later years mind-reading, telepathy, hypnotism and other phases of psychic science have made such inroads into the field once pre-empted by Spiritualism as have set me again to investigating to discover whether or not there is sufficient evidence, not explainable in other ways, in which to intrench a belief in Spiritualism as a scientifically demonstrated fact.

Finally I have arrived at this conclusion: If some scrap of information can be given me which, by the nature of things does not and can not rest in the mind of any mortal person, but which may later be proved to be a true fact, I am obliged to accept the demonstration as one of spirit power, and when the same is repeated in a multiplied and reliable number of instances the world will have to accept Spiritualism as a demonstrated fact of science.

With the end in view of providing a manifestation of the above character, I have, in collaboration with my venerable mother, an ardent Spiritualist, placed in a small basket several small bundles of parlor matches, the most accurate pains being taken to prevent either of us or any other person from knowing either the number of bunches or the number of matches in any bunch and yet the number of either is not so great but that the number of each may be determined by mere inspection. This basket was then closed and wrapped and cross wrapped with thread, the knots of which and all intersections were sealed with wax. This basket rests upon the sideboard in the dining-room of my home at 811 So. Sixth street, this city.

We now invite all persons with mediumistic power to tell us the number of bunches of matches and the number of matches in each bunch. When we have twenty or more of these answers this basket will be opened in the presence of a number of honest investigators among whom shall be at least two of the most reputable Spiritualists of this city. If any two answers coincide and are correct we will accept the proof. If but one answer is correct, the medium giving it will be asked to give a second and a third demonstration under like conditions. If two out of three of his answers are correct it will regarded as satisfactory. To each person giving us a correct answer, corroborated by at least one other correct answer, either by himself or by another medium, will be sent a check for $50 for his trouble or, if he declines compensation, we will pay this sum to any charity he may designate.

We request that all persons interested, aid us in publishing this proposed test among the mediums of his acquaintance or knowledge and to each one requesting it will be sent the result signed by all the parties participating and present, at the opening of the basket.

How Is Lightning Produced?

Undoubtedly every person has wondered how lightning is produced. I have often watched the streaks issuing from a dark cloud, and in the night flashes of lightning would make everything about me as light as day, when my mind would try to grasp the why, or how, or what produced that beautiful electrical display.

Last winter I read the opinion of some writer, but cannot now recall the name, or in what paper I read it, but think it was in The Progressive Thinker, who stated that "lightning is produced by two currents of electricity coming together from opposite directions."

This writer may have the correct solution of the phenomenon, but I will briefly relate an experience of mine that occurred in the month of September, 1905.

While sitting alone in my office, everything being quiet around me, I became oblivious to my surroundings, when I seemed to be standing up in a dark cloud far from the earth, when my attention was drawn to a small dark globule about the size of a very small shot. This globule seemed to be a magnet, drawing to itself smaller globules, or gases from every direction that flew to the first globule, or magnet, with such force that they seemed like a dark streak. While standing there a ball about the size of a man's fist was formed, and I then received the impression that the moisture in the cloud produced the condition for gases to form as above stated; and that when a certain proportion of the different gases had collected, the impact of the gases attracted caused an explosion, just as a light tap or jar to the combination of nitric acid and glycerine, called nitroglycerine will explode.

I have related my experience to several gentlemen of my acquaintance, and all agree that this solution of the phenomenon seems reasonable.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW. STRICKEN SAN FRANCISCO.

Challenge the world, and it hates you,
Rebuke the world and it smiles;
Scorn the world and it rates you
One of its own exiles.

Follow the world and it frets you
With its ever varying trend;
Lead the world, and it lifts you
With the outstretched hand of a friend.

Drawn by the mystic current,
That trolls with a subtle breath;
We yield our wine and our vintage,
To slacken the pace of death.

Abroad in the stricken city,
Shocked, and shorn of her pride;
Stung by the hissing fury,
That gorged on her vital tide.

Transcendent star of the border,
Supreme in her own conceit,
Flashing afar her ardor,
She drew the world to her feet.

Born of a drastic struggle,
Braving the trundling sand;
Pilot and prime promoter,
Of thrift on the western strand.

She sheltered the monarchs of labor,
Between the land and the sea;
Espoused to her peerless harbor,
Facing her destiny.

Discerning that only endeavor
Commands results in a race;
She smiles in the face of disaster,
And turns with a logical grace,

Confronting her dark desolation,
With a sense of returning nerve,
With a pull that baffles description,
She drew on the world's reserve.

Banquet her now, and befriend her;
Endow in fraternity's name;
Great Soul, attuned to endeavor,
Struck dumb and bedizened with pain,

From out of the smoke and the carnage,
From out of the charred frames,
Of ravishments, devastation
Of wrecked and ruined remains.

Leaped an inspiration,
Born of the lurid flames;
Sped to its installation,
By the clang of a million chains.

Clad in a broader garment,
Clothed in a firmer weave;
Spun from the senses regnant,
Housed with the soul aggrieved.

Pioneer, Pilot, Promoter,
Entrenched in the forts of the Gods;
Pledging anew for the conflict,
Combatting invincible odds.

THE SOUL'S HARP.

Not shaken like a reed, ah, no!
But like a harp so finely strung;
Touched by quick hands or fingers slow,
That play the tender chords among.

Joy makes a glad, enraptured strain;
Hope breathes a sweet, triumphant tone;
More low the quivering notes of pain;
Love has a song that's all its own.

Grief sings, but in a minor key,
While memory her fond hand lays
Upon the strings. Old melody
Brings back the scenes of other days.

The summer birds at early morn,
Cannot outvie the songs of youth;
Whose music in the heart is born
Of courage, innocence and truth.

Tired, we listen as they play,
Those unseen fingers, soft and fair,
Of homes beyond time's shadowed way,
And loving ones who wait us there.

But, dear, the sweetest chords to me,
That on the harp were ever played,
Within your soul so tenderly,
Were those by deepest sorrow made.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To the Friends of the Lyceum.

May I once again call your attention to the need of united effort and support of the most important work of Spiritualism. We hope to issue a Lesson Quarterly for our children, but must have some interest shown to warrant it. The Quarterly would contain lessons for each Sunday, responsive readings, gems of thought, and order of exercises. It could be issued for ten cents a quarter. How many do you want?

We have also pretty lyceum pins, costing but five cents each; $4 per hundred, or $2 for fifty. Each member should wear one.

The N. S. A. authorizes me to offer three banners to be given to the three schools showing the best record during the coming year. No matter how small your lyceum may be now, you have a fair chance to earn the lovely banner if you show progress during the year.

All lyceums desiring to compete for the prize, send not later than January 15, the number of pupils enrolled, average attendance, general conditions, and names of officers; these will be duly filed, and we will advise your secretary thoroughly regarding the duties of competitors. Let me have your hearty sympathy and support that we may make this work beneficial to old and young children.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Colorado Talks Back.

The chairmen of the Republican and Democratic State Central Committees of Colorado have denied the statements set forth in a widely copied dispatch from Denver, to the effect that woman suffrage is a failure in that state. Republican Chairman Vivian says the "interview with recognized leaders of the dominant parties" took place in the too imaginative brain of some reporter.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

MAHOMET His Birth, Character and Doctrine. By Edward Gibbon. This is No. 6 of the Library of Liberal Classics. It is conceded to be historically correct, and so exact and perfect in every detail as to be practically beyond the reach of adverse criticism. This work will be found intensely interesting. Price, 25 cents.

Talleyrand's Letter to the Pope. This work will be found especially interesting to all who would desire to make a study of Romanism and the Bible. The historic facts stated, and the keen, teaching review of Romish ideas and practices should be read by all. Price 25 cents.

THUMBSCREW AND RACK. Torture implements employed in the 15th and 16th centuries for the promulgation of Christianity, with pictorial illustrations. By George E. Macdonald. Price, 10 cents.

The Wonderful Medium.

Mr. T. W. Stanford's Seances With that Remarkable Personage, Charles Bailey—Tablets Brought from Ancient Nineveh—The Spirit Gough Delivers a Characteristic Temperance Lecture—Other Items of Importance, as Reported in The Harbinger of Light, Melbourne. Australia.

Several noticeable things have occurred at the sittings during the last month. Chief among these was the bringing of an apport for the first time from Thibet, that almost unknown land, but full of occult teachers and students. Dr. Whitcomb said: "This is the first apport brought from a practically unknown land, as it is almost terra incognita, although the British forces have lately been through the country after severe fighting. Very little is known, however, of the inner life of the Llamas. But we spirits can penetrate where no Englishman has yet gone."

Taking up the apport from the table, and which is named "Tal," he described the dark-colored leather straps and appendage as being worn either round the neck or carried on the arm of the devotee as a talisman. It is about a foot in length, and has two straps, which finish in a hidden receptacle, the whole being made from the skin of the tail of a Yak. Inside the little receptacle at the bottom of the piece of skin a wooden tablet of fir is secreted bound round with paper covered with Sanscrit writing, and kept in position by a moveable band of leather. There are also higher up the straps four or five bone rings. The piece of paper is sacred, and forms a talisman.

"You have seen pictures," Dr. Whitcomb said, "of prayer wheels, which contain prayers wound on a spool. Sometimes these pieces of paper wear out like everything else, but they are sacred and this is what they do with them. The Grand Llama priest takes the pieces of paper off the spool, and they are bound round a piece of wood and placed in the skin here. * * I think the choicest of the prayers are selected for this purpose."

On the same evening two tablets came. Abdul explained what can be well understood by those who know the potencies and imponderability of matter that a tablet "comes first like a cloud, which becomes light and full of sparks." This cloud gets smaller and denser, then thickens, and becomes a tablet like the one brought, and as it was before its disintegration through scientific, spiritual and natural forces from a tablet. In addition to the address given below by Mr. Gough, the great temperance lecturer, when in the flesh, one of the most instructive came through Rev. W. H. Witherow, entitled "A Glimpse of Heaven," and will find place in the December issue.

The following is a brief record of the circles held since September 14:

6th Seance, Sept. 21st.—A night of extraordinary power. Address by Sig. Valetti. Phenomena. Tablet brought from ancient Nineveh, the first of a series. This was a beautiful apport covered with hieroglyphic writing, which will be translated by Dr. Robinson later on. Another apport was thrown on the table with the sound of tinkling bells. This proved to be a chain of ornamental metal, in size like that of a Lord Mayor's chain, and worn round the neck of the married women of Equatorial Africa as a talisman. In a hidden receptacle was a charm made of wood with hieroglyphic characters, with four marks that indicated the number of children the woman had borne. The tinkling sound came from a number of brass coins hung round the chain.

9th Seance, Sept. 28th.—Address by Mr. Gough on "Temperance." Phenomena, second tablet. Plant grown by Yogi from mango seed marked and taken home by a clergyman present. It grew about two inches in a few minutes; the seed examined after was found to be marked with the initials of the gentleman mentioned. Spear heads embedded in soft clay.

10th Seance, Oct. 5th.—Address by Rev. W. H. Witherow, "Is Spiritualism Satanic?" Phenomena. Three tablets and a remarkable nest, large and covered outside and in with feathers which the bird, a large one, was said to take from turkeys or other birds handy.

11th Seance, Oct. 12th.—Great power apparent, and said to be on "both sides" by Dr. Whitcomb. Address by Rev. W. H. Witherow on "A Glimpse from Heaven." Two tablets came immediately, light being down but a second or two, and a tablet caught in hands by Abdul. The other "apport" from Thibet is described in full above.

It is with much pleasure that the following address by Mr. Gough, the temperance lecturer, is given for the benefit of Harbinger readers:

Mr. John B. Gough:—My name is Gough. I thank you very much for your welcome. I am so pleased to be able to speak to my fellows once more. I am so thankful to-night that progress is eternal, and that when I laid down my worldly burden I was permitted to enter into the progressive life where I cannot cease from well doing.

I suppose most of you—or all of you—have read the works of that novelist, Charles Dickens. Dickens makes one of his characters say: "Death does not change us more than life"; this statement is true. Let me make a confession to-night. When I became an advocate of temperance and a Christian, I believed that death worked certain changes in the spiritual state of man. To-night I know that I was in error, and that if a man die in his evil state he will pass into the unseen and remain in that condition until of his own free will he chooses to rise out of it. Therefore, it should be a great warning to every one of you to be careful how you live.

The subject to-night I call "A Spiritual Crusade." You know that after being for many years a drunkard, I was rescued as a brand from the burning. I am thankful to-night when I look back from my spiritual home to my earth state, and I shudder when I think what might have been my spiritual condition. I am thankful for the ambassadors of God and of righteousness and of temperance, and to old Joel Stratton, who put his hand upon my shoulder, and said, "Won't thou come with us, friend?" Oh, yes. How they labored during those weeks of terrible temptation to which I was exposed, and when the demon of alcohol beset me and would have dragged me back to my former condition, they supported me with words of comfort in those dark hours of my trial, and I am thankful to-night to know that they were successful.

Death has not changed my thoughts upon this great subject, but I wish to-night to make an explanation. First let me say I do not speak as a fanatic, but as one who has tasted in earthly life of a hell and felt the hell pangs which a man suffers who has lost his will, and man, the noblest work of God, has become a thing, has become a creature in the hands of an appetite and is being dragged down into the abyss. There is something worse than the torments of hell—the material hell of some people; it is the unsatisfied cravings of the poor drunkard, the debauchee, who roams unsatisfied, tormented and accursed. This is hell enough for any human soul, and knowing the awful misery that is created amongst you, and having seen the other side of the picture, the awful torments, the punishment of an avenging conscience, that is on the spiritual side, I say my desire, my earnestness is intensified to help and succor others, and pluck them as I was plucked—a brand from the burning.

So this is my excuse, if excuse is needed, for returning, and through one of my fellows sounding out the warning one hundred times more earnestly than I did from the platforms of England and America. Let me say I am not fanatical; alcohol may be a good creature of God, and in the right mind a man may partake of it and not be injured excepting in the fact that his example may lead a weaker one to destruction.

I am so thankful that after life's fitful fever I can again speak to you upon this subject. In the days of my flesh I was very anxious that my poor utterances should be written down that they might be printed so that the world, after I had passed perhaps from their remembrance, might read the warning words of one who had suffered, one whose life was quickly becoming a blank. Oh, the horror of a wasted existence, of opportunities gone and of a life misspent!

This spiritual crusade, then, to-night, is one that can be taken up and carried forward with great prospect of success, because it is permitted for the spiritual identity to manifest himself or herself, and with added knowledge and experience speak of that which they do know and testify that which they have seen. Understand me, I am not come to speak to you who lead clean, sober lives, except to warn you, but to say this—As you go along, and if I understand rightly your ambition is to help mankind, and as strong drink—over-indulgence in alcohol is one of the greatest factors in the degradation of mankind—I say there is a grand prolific field for work before you. I say, that as Spiritualists, true to your colors, preaching the religion of humanity as you go along your wayside journey, if you see one fallen by the wayside or in danger, no matter how low down in the abyss of degradation, be not dismayed, remember that a Gough once was low down and was saved from that awful condition!

May the persistent efforts of one who, knowing the evil and the punishment entailed, sought out of love for his brethren to snatch such a one from the evil to come. Be helpful! Oh, there is a grand field for you! While you are telling people that man is immortal, add the words "Be careful how you live upon the earth plane in the flesh life, because of the very fact that you are immortal." You are building up character, you are molding and shaping that future, and how shall you enter into that life as a drunkard and a debauchee, sunk in lust and drunkenness?

Oh, my friends, you know something of the horrors and the degradation of human life through over-indulgence in alcohol, but if you could but peep within the veil and see there the spirits imprisoned, oh, it would shake your soul, and you would register a vow that as you taught that man was immortal, as you taught the brotherhood of the great human family, you would set before them the terrors and the dangers of a life misspent.

Do not mistake me. There are other evils besides the evils of drunkenness, but it appears to me this one evil generates others and absorbs and covers them all. It appears to me that if this one evil could be wiped away the laboring classes especially would benefit by it. Oh, the brilliant minds that have sunk underneath this fell destroyer! and the men who cannot withstand the onslaughts of this demon are the brainy people. Alcohol strikes at the brain of man, it destroys the will power and man becomes a thing. In place of being able to say "I am master and you are my slave, and I will use you as a creature of God," it becomes your master, and at last says, "Stay thou there and do as I bid." Tamerlane once built a pyramid of skulls, but to-night if it were possible to do it, you could build a pyramid that would reach almost to the clouds with skulls of those who have gone down in the onslaught of the demon alcohol.

Remember this, that alcohol kills twice. It kills the body and destroys the soul; it destroys the spiritual life, and there in the prison house are millions of those who were slaves to appetite, shut up this night with unsatisfied desires crying aloud in their torments, and the only comfort that I have, and that is a great and a grand and a noble one, is that eventually they will be liberated and taught the error of their ways. The appetite shall be mastered and the drunkards at last, though perhaps they will sit in lowly places, shall be saved from their appetite and from the evil.

Oh, my friends, it is for you who are humanitarians to tell the people the truth, not as some fanatics would teach—remember this, I am not in sympathy with fanatical temperance people, but I speak as one who knows, who has felt the loss of self-respect. Ah, do you know how men and women fall? Because it lowers them in their own estimation; and when a man or woman loses self-respect, they go down and down! The demon says, "Here cover it up, drown your thoughts; drink again, drink and be merry, for to-morrow you die."

Yes, my friends, I am thankful to-night to be able to tell you that I am not dead. John B. Gough is still alive, and if I have permission to go up and down through your earth plane selecting men and women to speak through, or being permitted to speak through those agents which you call "sensitives"—all new terms to me because in my day I would not tolerate such a thing as spirit return—I will be pleased to use such instruments and will not be tired in speaking of this theme because I know now and have seen the other side of the picture.

I do not come to speak scientifically, I do not know anything about physiology, I do not tell you that so many ounces of alcohol will destroy your physical body, I do not know anything about therapeutics, but I do know that the over-indulgence in alcohol will destroy you, spirit, soul and body! And as one who has the best interests of my brothers and sisters at heart, as one who has been plucked out of the fire, I come back with all the earnestness and intensity I am capable of and say, rescue the drunkard!! Do not pass by and say, "He brought himself to it." Perhaps in a like environment you, too, might have sunk into that awful degradation, but, with a cheery word, say to the lost one, so sunk in drunkenness, "Come, my brother," as Joel Stratton said to me.

Do not be afraid to place your hand upon his shoulder. How well do I remember the magnetism of that hand laid upon me as I stood upon that bridge contemplating the destruction of my sin-sick soul and body, when he said with kindly voice, "Wilt thou not come with me, friend?" God bless the Quakers! They are not ashamed of what they believe and to put it into practice, too. If I could rouse sympathy for the fallen I shall then have done something for humanity's sake. Go down into the slums of your city—no need to go to the East End of London nor to the slums of New York and Chicago—go down to the slums of your own city and you will see what drink is doing for the people!

Be not carried away by the arguments of some about building hotels and erecting breweries. It may be a good thing for some people's pockets, but set over against all that what is good for the suffering and what the spiritual loss, and I say that you will agree with me that something should be done—and because of humanity. I have been told upon your earth plane there has been a discussion why people do not go to church. I know why thousands will not listen concerning the future life. It is because all that is good and noble within them is under a cloud. But after my conversion I believed, as I believe now, that deep down in the human heart, covered up perhaps, very deep, you may lay your finger on that which is human, you may appeal to some soft spot in the heart.

Once in a city of the United States of America, passing one night down the thoroughfare, I saw a man standing with his back to the wall, intoxicated. I approached him and looked, and I said, "Friend, why don't you go home? My brother, you should not stand here making use of that language." With an oath he said, "Home! home! What is the use of going home? I have no home, it is hell!" Ah, yes, he had made it hell. Subsequently I found that he had driven a good wife into the street, and then he had sold little by little everything to supply himself with drink, trying to appease the cursed craving; and I looked at him and said, "Oh, my friend, I am sorry to see you like this to-night. Don't you know you are a man?" In his muddled state, he said, "A man? Why (mentioning the name of a publican) he just now called me a pig!" "No," I said, "men sometimes lower themselves or debase themselves with the swine, but you are a man, God-begotten, you belong to God. You are His; you have an immortal spirit. Where are you going to spend the future? Was not your mother a good woman?" looking at me, he said, "Yes, my mother was a good woman." Then he turned round and said, "I will go home," and I besought him to let me go with him.

I visited him several times, with the result that I weaned him from drink. I helped him as others had helped me. It was hard work. Sometimes he would slip and fall, but I believed there was good in the man, and he passed to spirit life a sober man. Oh, my friends, to save one life, to rescue one, is worth all the effort and labor that you can put forth.

This is the spiritual crusade that I am engaged in. I am so pleased, again I say, that I have a knowledge of spirit return and of the good that may be done through it. Do not, my friends, do not be led astray with the empty talk of some who would question the good that can be done by the spirits of men and women who can return. Do not listen to those who say it is Satanic! Satan stands forth personified as Alcohol, and if I am fighting alcohol I fight Satan. Though the personal evil influence does not exist, yet there are any number of evil influences and you may call them Satans if you will; but they are to be withstood and their influence made null and void, and men and women may be rescued to be lights in the firmament of love."

MRS. LOIE F. PRIOR in Melbourne, Australia—This Well Known Lady's Lectures and Tests Have Been Well Received in That Far-off Land, Creating Unusual Interest.

After a most successful season in New Zealand, Mrs. Prior accepted the invitation of the V. A. S. to occupy their platform during the month of October on her way to England. At the first lecture, given at the Austral Hall on October 7, her subject was "The Resurrection Morn," and she was welcomed by a large and enthusiastic audience. On the following Sunday evening she spoke on the scientific basis of Spiritualism and its future in relation to religious thought, the lecture being one of the best that Mrs. Prior has given in Melbourne. Other excellent lectures followed, and the concluding and fifth lecture of the series will be given on November 4, the subject of which will be advertised in next Saturday's daily papers. A most important aspect of Mrs. Prior's work is represented by her "Demonstrations of Immortality," which have taken place each Tuesday night during the month at the Upper Athenaeum Hall. At these meetings every one of her clairvoyant descriptions have been recognized, and the Christian names, which Mrs. Prior sometimes hears clairaudiently, and at others sees written in illuminated letters, are remarkably correct. At the two last meetings flowers were brought by many in the audience, which proved a link to the spiritual presences wishing to give messages.

A most successful "Welcome" meeting was given to Mrs. Prior, on October 12, at the Austral Hall, which was decorated under the supervision of a Ladies' Reception Committee. A farewell meeting is also announced for Monday evening, Nov. 5, at Austral Hall, and Mrs. Prior will start on her journey to England with the hearty good wishes of the crowd of friends she has made in Melbourne.

W. J. COLVILLE in Tasmania, Australia—Since Mr. Colville's Memorable Week of Debate in Melbourne on His Return from W. Australia and Adelaide, He Has Been Lecturing in Launceston and Hobart.

Mr. W. F. Ford, the veteran Spiritualist of Launceston, writes enthusiastically of the four lectures delivered by Mr. Colville in that city. "From the first lecture, 'The Conquest of Heredity and Environment,' Mr. Colville," he says, "established himself with those who were privileged to hear him, as one of the most gifted exponents of the Higher Thought. His final lecture will long be remembered as the most masterly exposition of its kind. He is far and away the best lecturer," Mr. Lord adds, "that has ever visited this city during my long residence here. He cleared away so much of the straw from the true grain, that Spiritualist and Theosophist alike must feel ever indebted to him, and I, as a Spiritualist, am truly thankful that I have heard him, as his visit has confirmed me more than ever in the truth of my convictions." A long and favorable notice of Mr. Colville's two first lectures appeared in the Launceston Examiner.

At Hobart Mr. Colville's work was still more publicly recognized. In the Mercury of October 20, more than a column report appears of his first lecture on "Ideals and How We May Realize Them." The chair was taken by Dr. Gerard Smith. At the end of a detailed report of the lecture, the Hobart Mercury says, "Mr. Colville is pre-eminently a teacher. His orderly presentation of a tremendous array of facts crowded into a two hour's lecture, is in itself a most interesting phase of his work." His ability in this respect "shows him to be possessed of the best type of eloquence a public speaker can command." Mr. Colville is now in New Zealand till November 30, when he sails to U. S. A.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PAIN—This is the Title of the Eighth Lecture Delivered Before the Spiritualists of Milan, at Their Lecture Hall in that City, and is from the Pen of Signor Alessandro Turbiglio. It Is a Scholarly Production Like Its Predecessors.

The writer reviews the opinions held on the subject by many ancient and modern thinkers, but does not appear to have met with that wise little book, "The Mystery of Pain," by the late James Hinton. Looking at the origin of pain, whether physical or moral, it seems to be occasioned by a conscious or unconscious disregard of or disobedience to natural laws enacted by Supreme Wisdom for the welfare and happiness of mankind; that disregard or disobedience is generally the result of ignorance; and the pain we experience is necessary in order to admonish us of the existence of those laws, and of our imperative duty to make ourselves acquainted with them, in order to bring ourselves into conformity with the Divine Will which expresses itself in those laws. Pain, then, is part of our education and discipline, and its value is not inconsiderable, when we come to consider it as a means of educing in all who suffer, a feeling of sympathy for others who are similarly afflicted. Without its quickening and stimulating power, our natures would probably become hard and callous. But the sympathy called forth by the pain undergone by others, rendered comprehensible to us by personal experience, is really a deeply religious feeling and powerfully auxiliary to our spiritual growth. And when that sympathy is universal and binds the whole human race together as by a chain of gold; then, as Signor Turbiglio observes in the concluding sentence of his lecture, "all mankind will be united in an ideal of immense pieta (the word signifies both piety and pity in the Italian language, and in the sublime conception of a future in which all men, with a smile of peace, tranquility and love, will complete the sad journey from the cradle to the tomb—from one form of existence to another more full and more perfect."

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

In Relation to Spiritualism and the Soul's Advancement.

Are our lamps trimmed and burning, sister, brother?
Are we holding forth to all our light?
Does our every thought and act toward each other,
Prove allegiance to the Cause of Right?

It behooves us to ask ourselves the above questions, especially at this time when the world itself is turning its face heavenward, and the hungry cry of human souls borne from every wind of doctrine, from every walk of life, is ringing out clear and distinct, with no uncertain sound, asking Spiritualists for the BREAD OF LIFE with which to satisfy their longing for positive knowledge of the continuity of life in the, to them, "unknown beyond."

What are we going to do about it? What have we found in the Great Storehouse of knowledge? Is there not more than enough for us and them? Is it right for us who have entered into "the Promised Land" to refuse to show others who are so tired of the soul-stunting food of theology, the bridge on which we ourselves crossed? Do we not know that all mankind are brethren, and that we are all God's children, regardless of race, kindred or color?

Then if we know it, why do we not practice what we preach? Why do some want to "set up shop," as it were, and "peddle" Spiritualism as though it were a common thing? Is it not more reasonable to believe that what is good for one is good for all? How much confidence can we have in those who, although they claim to have the Key of Knowledge to that which is to lift humanity out of the slums of despair and bondage, are wont to "hide their light under a bushel," and sell for so MUCH A PEEP that which every right-minded Spiritualist holds to be sacred.

How is God's kingdom to be set up on earth unless the "money changers" of the present day, who are continually defiling "God's Temple" (the temple of their own souls), as well as "The Temple of Truth, Spiritualism, are cast out? Even though it may be necessary to scourge them.

I like the ring of the reports of the N. S. A. convention, held in Chicago. Those reports show the strength of the great Tidal Waves of Truth that are refusing to be held in check, and every true Spiritualist should consider it not only a duty, but a privilege to be allowed to strengthen the hands of those brave, unfaltering, heroic officers who control our National vessel which is laden with sweet fragrance of spiritual truths, in their noble efforts to bring the glorious gospel of Spiritualism to every soul in purity, chastity and love.

If Spiritualists everywhere will rally to the call for help, and respond with as many dollars as they can possibly spare, toward making our N. S. A. self-supporting, we will have home missionaries visiting our home cities, and pouring floods of light into our very midst, opening the very Flood Gates of Heaven, and causing the "manna" of spiritual fruit to fall thick and fast among us.

I wish Brother Francis would open a column in The Progressive Thinker in which to receive voluntary pledges for the N. S. A., from individual members, or Spiritualists who are situated so as to be isolated from any society. I am willing to pledge $5 instead of the one requested by the committee, to be paid before January 1, 1907. While the N. S. A. is so valiantly standing for truth in every department of our cause, we are wondering what disposition is to be made of the so-called developing mediums who are willing to throw their own hypnotic influence over any and all sensitives whom they come in contact with, for the almighty dollar, many times, no doubt, interfering with development that otherwise would have a rich harvest for humanity, and often engrafting twigs of their own sensual nature, causing thorns and briars to spring up instead of flowers and fruit.

It certainly is time for humanity to know by being told directly by those who have learned, perhaps by bitter experience, to select their instructors in regard to spiritual unfoldment from among competent teachers in the spirit spheres, for there are many worthy ones climbing life's ladder in "The beyond," who are not only willing but anxiously waiting an opportunity to lend a hand to earth's children. Of course if there is any information that one mortal can give another in regard to mediumistic unfoldment, that is all right; but everyone should keep their reason uppermost, weigh and accept or reject, as reason dictates.

Again I ask, what are we going to do about these things? Which side are we going to line up on?

Is it not about time for Spiritualists to be considering something in regard to the continuity of life in the beyond, aside from the fact that we live? For my part the message concerning how we live and what is our condition in spirit life, is of far more importance than the knowledge, 'No Death," priceless as is the knowledge that death is only re-birth of the spirit out of our house of clay." The knowledge that our lives here are building our "home over there," to me is of far more value. We can and must conquer environments and circumstances, and eradicate from our lives all that is unseemly, unchaste and wrong. Hence we can say with our angel teachers,

A solid foundation, ye children of earth,
Is found in the knowledge that death is re-birth.
The soul is immortal—a truth of great worth—
Each spirit is proving that comes back to earth.

Man Is a Spirit.

"As the Mountains, the cloud-bearing Alps and Andes, are in geological perspective attenuated into undulating vapor and fire-mist, so the scientific and philosophic thought of this century idealizes matter into a vibratory force or power."

That man is a spirit, acting through bodily organs in this material world is not a doctrine of yesterday. It is a very ancient doctrine. At an early period in the history of reflective thought, philosophers pronounced the sensible world merely an appearance, solid-seeming as it looks and feels. They saw that to persons differently endowed in the matter of senses, or with additional senses, it would be no longer the world which it seems to be to us, constituted as we are at present, but quite different. Power is an all-inclusive word in the universe, covering both mind and matter; and all force or power is in the last analysis spiritual. Light is strictly a spiritual fact of consciousness, for the vibrating ether is not luminous. Light, sound, odor, taste, exist nowhere except in ourselves; for, in the sublime phrase of Lewes, "Nature, in her insentient solitude, is eternal darkness and eternal silence."

Matter is the pliant garment of spirit, which is constantly woven "in the roaring loom of Time." Not that we are all-in-all, because there is a power, not ourselves, constantly interacting with our inner self, and thus producing the phenomenal world which environs us, Mill says our feelings and thoughts are the only things which we directly know to be real. Matter is a mere assumption to account for our sensations. Instead of the world containing us, it is being constantly created by us in connection with the eternal animating power, for which or whom there is no name. Thus modern thought, so far from being materialistic, as the theological reactionists affirm, is idealizing matter.

As the mountains, the cloud-bearing Alps and Andes, are in geological perspective attenuated into undulating vapor and fire-mist, so the scientific and philosophic thought of this century idealizes matter into a vibratory force or power.

Death, which Mill defines to be a mere cessation of the stimulus of the sensible world, makes us spirits, pure and simple, or clothes us doubtless with a more subtile, pervasive, and beautiful corporeality. The migration to "the land of souls" as Byron calls it, is evidently not much of a journey. It is simply a change of corporeal costume. In the light, then, of current physiology and psychology, the human body is literally a breathing-house, not made with hands, as Coleridge calls it, exactly adapted to the temporal and temporary use of the spirit or "inner man," who peers through its eyes as windows, makes the hands the executive organs of his will, the tongue the exponent of his thoughts, and ears and nostrils the avenue of distinct classes of sensations, pleasurable or otherwise.

The brain is as supreme among the organs of spirit in position as it is in function, it being the capital or crown of the corporeal shaft, and the chosen seat, with its intricate nerve-labyrinths, of the mind, which is enthroned in it as a citadel. The lungs give buoyancy, animation and locomotiveness. The great Swedenborgian psycho-physiologist, Wilkinson, likens them to a balloon tethered in the chest. He says: "The breathing lungs are the barometer that indicate the peace or the power of the storm of the soul; the heart is the animal man himself; hearing is a new-born palace of the air, whose shakes are music and whose winds are speech. And the eye, round like the world and rolling on its axis, communes afresh with the whole possessions of light, and sees all, from the sun to the landscape, in the gloss of that glory which is the image of the truth." Man the real man, whether in the flesh or out of it, is a spiritual being and as such belongs to the realm of which material phenomena are but manifestations.

Mental power depends upon the size of the brain only in a general way. The proposition is open to so many qualifications that it is of but little account in discussing the mental power in connection with the brain of races or individuals. The size of the hat which a man wears is no criterion bulk varies according to peculiarities of race. The ancient Peruvians, an intellectual people, were remarkable for their very small skulls and for brains averaging in weight less than those of many idiots.

All physiologists agree now that the gray matter of the brain surface, called the cortex, is the seat of all the processes connected with sensation and thought. The greater part of the brain, the white matter, consisting of bundles of fibers underneath and within the gray layer, is not the seat of the mental powers. The fibers serve as conductors to and from the gray matter. The gray matter is the definite seat of the conscious mind. The gray matter of the brain surface is so arranged as to subserve specific functions, but only in certain localities in its substance, and each physical function probably has its seat in a certain area of the organ. The destruction of one particular area of the gray only 564 millimeters, and that of Darwin only 563 millimeters. Many men of only average and less than average intelligence have larger heads. Brain whatever of his intellect. The circumference of Napoleon's head was layer involves no loss of sight; the injury of another area entails no loss of hearing.

Is the true theory then that of the Aeolian harp theory that sensation and thought are the products of vibrations through a specially arranged mechanism? Well, the amount of mentality is not determined by the amount of gray matter. The size of the brain is no index of consciousness in its various forms of sensation, perception and thought. The mean brain weight of Englishmen is smaller than that of Swedes, Bavarians, Hessians or Bohemians. Of these five races, the brain weight of the Bohemian is the greatest—1.20 grams more than that of the Englishman. The brain of Helmholtz, one of the greatest men of modern times, weighed hardly 45 ounces, and that of Dr. Dollinger, the historian, weighed only 37.7 ounces, below the average weight of the normal European brains, which is 49 ounces. On the other hand even among paupers Prof. Marshall found thirteen brains weighing above 60 ounces each, more than five ounces more than the weight of Daniel Webster's brain. These facts, and many similar ones can be given, are sufficient to indicate that mental capacity is not correlated with brain weight. And it is not true that the more gray matter in the brain one has, the more thought capacity he possesses.

Man has two brains, just as he has two eyes; one-half of the gray matter is in the right brain, the other half in the left brain. Yet one of these brains can do all the thinking, as one of the eyes can do all the seeing that is necessary. Persons have lived for years with only one hemisphere in working order, without any impairment of the mind. Neither the eye nor the gray matter of the brain is the source of light. The amount of gray matter in the cranial cavity does not determine man's power, nor does his personality depend upon the amount of this substance.

These are scientific facts, and they should be sufficient to set to thinking those who believe that the brain is the source of thought and that the mind is but an aggregate of functions of the brain. Evidently the mind uses the brains as an instrument and the conformation and quality of the brain have much to do with the quality of the thought which finds expression through this organ. But the latest and most thorough investigations of physiology as well as of psychology negative the materialistic conception that brain produces thought and that mind is a product of brain activity.

In the gray matter of the brain is the seat of the thinking capacity; but the brain produces thought no more than the violin produces music. An intelligent force back of the violin produces the music, and an intelligent force back of the brain produces the thought manifested through the brain, the instrument of the mind.

Henry McDonald says that his daughter, aged 11, sat for development several months, and now writes poetry inspirationally. He writes: "She has written two pieces a week on all manner of subjects. She is never over twenty minutes writing so many verses."

Mr. J. S. Drake and his wife, Mrs. Maude Lord Drake, well and favorably known in Chicago, passed through the city last week on their way East to visit relatives residing at No. 104 Kennilworth Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Golden Center Spiritualist Society meets at Star Lodge Hall, No. 378 S. Western avenue, between Harrison and Polk streets. Conducted by Prof. McLane and J. E. Coe.

Frank L. Seiferth writes from "Lawrence," but gives no name of State, hence no one will know to what "Lawrence" his notice applies, as there are many such towns in the United States. Will writers be careful to give the state as well as the town?

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society listened to a fine discourse last Sunday evening by Dr. J. A. Marvin, comparing the religion of the orthodox church with Spiritualism. All present enjoyed it very much. Mr. Fraser gave a short talk, followed by Mrs. Harper and Mrs. Moore with messages, which were well received. R. Gilray is to speak on the 30th, and Dr. C. S. Tisdale on January 6. Dr. Tisdale will give the audience more knowledge of the ancient order of the Magi, which is very interesting. We will not hold circles on New Year's night, but on Tuesday, the 8th of January. Mr. Fraser will be present and conduct it."

Mrs. Geo. Williams writes: "The Ladies' Spiritualist Temple Fund Society of Fullerton street, Cleveland, Ohio, held its annual meeting on Thursday evening, Dec. 21, 1906, to elect officers to serve for the ensuing year of 1907: President, Mrs. E. Gray; first vice-president, Mrs. W. J. Barker; second vice-president, Mrs. Mary Lottig; treasurer, Mrs. H. Prindle; secretary, Mr. C. A. Sollinger; assistant secretary, Mrs. George Williams; trustee, Mr. Barker; musical director, Mr. Eckert; pianist, Mrs. F. Henwood. Brother Edgerly will be with us until the close of this year, and his sermons are fine and uplifting, giving to strangers plenty of food for thought. For the months of January and February, 1907, Brother W. F. Peck of Missouri, will be with us."

C. Kirchner writes: "Mrs. C. Parkhurst, speaker and test medium of Baltimore, who held very successful meetings in Chicago and Rockford, has left for her home, but will return for an engagement in February with the Spiritual Science Church of Rockford. Any society desiring her services the latter part of February and March, would do well by addressing her at 917 W. Mulberry street, Baltimore, Md."

Mrs. Savage writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "It is some time since Tacoma, Wash., has sent in a report, but we are still alive and the prospects for our society are fine. Since October we have had those indefatigable workers, Dr. and Mrs. W. D. Noyes, and hope we can keep them the rest of the season. Their work has given us twenty-five new members, and we see strangers at each Sunday service. They are the first spiritual ministers ever in Tacoma, who have used the beautiful ritual of the N. S. A. in the burial of our dead and in the christening of our children, and it has been highly spoken of by those in and out of our ranks. May the angel world always send us such straightforward, honest and conscientious workers."

On Sunday, Dec. 30, Oscar A. Edgerly will conclude a very successful two months' engagement with the Ladies' Temple Fund Society of Cleveland, Ohio. That Mr. Edgerly's work has given satisfaction is indicated by the fact that the Temple Society has re-engaged him for the month of January, 1908. With the exception of September, 1907, Mr. Edgerly's time is all engaged until February, 1908.

G. H. Brooks arrived home from Pittsburg, Pa., on New Year's day, having closed a very successful and pleasant month's engagement with the First Spiritual Church of that city, of which C. L. Stevens is president. Mr. Brooks will remain nearly two weeks at his home, No. 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., and will respond to calls for funerals. About the 12th of the month he expects to return to Wisconsin to resume his labors there in the interest of the State Society.

P. A. Norman writes: "I like The Progressive Thinker more every year, and among my choice current literature, your valuable Progressive Thinker is my favorite. I hope it will stick to the everlasting truth, and fearlessly expose all frauds and mock mediumship which has done such uncountable damage to the cause of true Spiritualism."

J. C. F. Grumbine is planning to visit many eastern and western camps during the next season. He begins with the opening of the State Spiritualist Convention at Hartford, Conn., May 4 and 5, where he speaks for the fourth season. Camp meetings wishing to secure his services for three or more lectures, can address him at 24 Strathmore Road, Brookline, Mass.

H. E. Martin writes from No. 49 Dudley Place, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "My wife, Mrs. Jennie Martin, writes to me from Sandusky, Ohio, where she is lecturing for the Psychic Research Society: 'I feel more at home now. I had good meetings Sunday afternoon and evening. The lectures were appreciated, and the readings highly praised and all recognized. People were very pleasant. Mr. Jackson is a fine, intelligent man, and makes a good chairman. He leads in singing and plays the piano. To precede my lecture, he read a poem. Miss Zonver, who entertains me, is a fine woman.' As my wife is very modest, I will help her. She is a real spiritual, high-minded woman. If any society wants a speaker, we would be pleased to have them write to us. Her terms are: Her expenses and entertainment, and what the society feels able to pay."

Samuel A. Huntington, Malden, Mass., writes of the Progressive Spiritualist Society, Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant St., Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president: "At the afternoon circle, Mrs. Caster, Mrs. Morton, Mr. Patch, Mr. Greenlaw and Mrs. E. R. True made short, but very interesting addresses on "Truth Wherever It May Be Found," and "Attendance at Spiritual Meetings," and Mrs. Carter gave several messages. The evening meeting opened with a beautiful praise service. Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, of Somerville, Mass., occupied the platform as speaker and message bearer. She prefaced her work by reading a beautiful poem entitled, "Dying," and chose the same title for her subject. Mrs. Harding gave a very beautiful address; she is a fine medium. Mrs. Nellie E. Abbott, of So. Lawrence, Mass., will be our next speaker on Sunday evening, December 30, and Rev. F. A. Wiggin, of Unity Church, Boston, Mass., every Thursday evening during January, 1907."

Mamie Young writes: "Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koontz, pastor Divine Spiritual Church, had an unusually interesting meeting Sunday afternoon and evening. Her lectures are always interesting and instructive on spiritual development lines, and the tests given by her guides are always looked forward to for the consoling and cheering words from spirit life."

Harry J. Moore has found it necessary to resign as speaker for the First Spiritualists (Temple) Society of San Diego, Cal., after serving November and December of a winter's engagement. He will remain in San Diego from one to three months longer with the hope of fully recovering his health which has been impaired as a result of overwork. Address him there, General Delivery, until further notice.

Wallace H. Moore, Shepard, Ohio, writes: "In my notice in your late issue of Mrs. Marian Carpenter's work here in Columbus your printer has made me say of her that she rarely condemns the sin. To leave that error uncorrected would be doing the lady great injustice and make it quite embarrassing to the writer. It should read, 'She has great charity for the sinner, but severely condemns the sin.'"

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Dr. Geo. Fuller of Boston, Mass., who has been lecturing for the First Association, will be succeeded by E. W. Sprague and wife, for January and February. Dr. Fuller is a well-known speaker, and is open for engagements. His address is Onset, Mass. Mrs. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., and Alfred Terry were the message bearers after each lecture. Mr. Alfred Terry holds meetings in Smith's Hall every Sunday evening, assisted by Miss Susie C. Clarke, of Dorchester, Mass. Mrs. M. J. Stephens and Mrs. Price, assisted by Mrs. Willid, Mrs. H. D. Morgan, secretary for the First Association, gave an entertainment for the children's lyceum. These socials are well attended. The Temple League holds meetings as usual at Pythian Temple, Mrs. Farrow, president."

Correspondent writes: "It affords us great pleasure to announce through the columns of this progressive paper that on Sunday, Dec. 16, the stork visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morton Hartwell, 1104 High street, Racine, Wis., and left a bright little star in the material form of an eight-pound girl, little Mabel Estelle. We hope that her life may prove one of sunshine and happiness to all around her, and that the Star of Hope may shine forth in the future life as it has already started to do."

Mrs. W. C. Selbrede writes from Billings, Mont.: "I have the pleasure of announcing that the Rev. G. C. Love, one of the prominent lecturers and faithful workers for the cause of Spiritualism on the Pacific coast, stopped over in Billings on his way home from the National Spiritualists' Association, and conducted a series of lectures here. He is a good speaker, and gave the people a much better understanding of the Bible. His tests were above the average, and all recognized. We expect him to make us a visit again on his return East in the spring."

Favorable reports from the Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., still continue to reach us. On the evening of December 23, the rostrum was occupied by home talent, and Christmas day was the principal subject discussed. The president, Daniel McDougal, followed Mr. Booth, both indicating the Pagan origin of the day, and both addresses were generously applauded. A Mrs. King was called from the audience by the president, who made a brief but very beautiful address, inspired by the loved ones on the other shore, that delighted every listener. Dr. Hammond followed with messages which were recognized by all to whom they were given. The Society is still on the upgrade, with prospects as bright as any other in the state.

W. F. Peck will serve the Cleveland, Ohio, Spiritualist Society during the months of January and February. Societies or individuals within easy reach can secure his services for week nights on reasonable terms. He will also officiate at weddings and funerals when called upon. He may be addressed in care of C. W. Henwood, 10821 Hampden avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

C. A. Andre writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "The New Thought Society is having excellent meetings this season. They opened in October with Mrs. Carpenter of Detroit as speaker. Her talent was recognized and well appreciated; her work was fine. Mrs. D. A. Morrill followed her. We hope to secure her for our meeting on Sunday of Holiday week. She goes to Lake Helen, Fla., in the near future for two months. We feel justified in praising her work. She is a highly respected citizen of our beautiful city, and although comparatively young in the work, her lectures are the equal of any speaker on any platform in the country. The Ladies' Aid is doing a great work and everything is going on nicely. On next Sunday evening, Mrs. Belle Fuller, another of our home workers will occupy our rostrum. We would be pleased to hear from speakers for January, February and March, who are in easy reach of our city. Our secretary is T. J. Haynes, Grand Rapids, Mich., Soldiers' Home Station."

C. L. Hatch writes from 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass.: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual, and a very interesting meeting was held, Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse presiding in the absence of the president. This was the closing session of the year, and a very enjoyable time was spent. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles was the speaker of the evening. Others were present and took part. Next Friday evening we will hold New Year's seance in the afternoon. Business meeting will be held and members are requested to be present at 4 p. m., sharp, so as to finish the business of the year. Election of officers at close of other regular business. Mattie E. A. Allbe, president; A. J. Haynes, secretary."

COMSTOCK LOSES U. S. SALARY.

Reformer Ousted as Postal Inspector, on Art Student's Complaint.

Washington, Dec. 29.—Announcement is made to-day that Anthony Comstock of New York, has been dismissed as a postoffice inspector, a $1,500 position he had held for thirty-four years. The action was taken on complaint of the Art Student's League, which held it was not right that Mr. Comstock should be able to walk into any postoffice and exxamine the mail addressed to any individual or corporation, breaking the seals of letters as he saw fit. As president of the Society for the Suppression of Vice Comstock draws an annual salary of $5,000, and has perquisites.—Special Correspondent of the Chicago Journal.

BOOK REVIEW.

A Dialogue on Religion. Between Rev. John Jutz, S. J., and Dr. T. A. Bland.

This is a booklet of forty pages, printed in clear type on fine paper, and bound in elegant flexible leatheret covers. Price 25 cents.

Father Jutz is a Roman Catholic priest of the order of Jesuits who has for many years been in charge of the Holy Rosary Mission at Pine Ridge, S. Dak. Dr. Bland, as our readers know, is one of the most scholarly and progressive scientists and literary men of the age, author of "In the World Celestial," "Pioneers of Progress," and other popular books.

In 1891 the Doctor visited Pine Ridge Indian Agency as the representative of the Indian Defence Association, and Father Jutz being in full accord with his views of Indian policies, invited him to be his guest. During his visit this dialogue occurred. It is not a debate, as the priest simply asked questions, which Dr. Bland answered. Those questions and answers cover the whole ground of the difference between the dogmas of the Roman Catholic and orthodox Protestant churches and liberalism, as represented by Unitarians, Spiritualists, etc., and also the history of the conspiracy by which the pagan Emperor of Rome subverted the primitive apostolic church and established in its stead the despotic hierarchy known as the Roman Catholic church, a religio-political institution that dominated the world for 1500 years; brought on the dark ages, and still exercises vast power for evil, but which is destined to be swept away by the rising tide of free thought and the sublime revelations of Spiritualism. This dialogue will be an eye-opener to Protestants as well as Catholics, and a most valuable hand-book for Spiritualists and other liberals. It is written in a spirit so admirable, that it cannot offend even the most orthodox.

At the close of this dialogue, Father Jutz said, "We have had a long talk and to me a very interesting one. You are a great historian, Dr. Bland; you have given me much to think about and many things to look into. I still think you are wrong on religion, but you are a good man; I love you as a brother and hope to meet you in heaven."

To this Dr. Bland responded, "You are a good man, Father Jutz; you are a great deal better than your creed or you could not hope to meet a heretic in heaven. I sincerely hope and firmly believe that we will meet in heaven."

This beautiful brochure of liberal thought is for sale at this office.

TEST CONDITIONS.

To Spiritualists and Spiritualist Mediums Everywhere.

I have prepared test conditions by which I hope to prove that spirit manifestations emanate from a source outside of any mortal person.

I will say that I approach this subject in the spirit of honest and hopeful investigation. For a number of years I was an unquestioning believer in the truth of Modern Spiritualism. In later years mind-reading, telepathy, hypnotism and other phases of psychic science have made such inroads into the field once pre-empted by Spiritualism as have set me again to investigating to discover whether or not there is sufficient evidence, not explainable in other ways, in which to intrench a belief in Spiritualism as a scientifically demonstrated fact.

Finally I have arrived at this conclusion: If some scrap of information can be given me which, by the nature of things does not and can not rest in the mind of any mortal person, but which may later be proved to be a true fact, I am obliged to accept the demonstration as one of spirit power, and when the same is repeated in a multiplied and reliable number of instances the world will have to accept Spiritualism as a demonstrated fact of science.

With the end in view of providing a manifestation of the above character, I have, in collaboration with my venerable mother, an ardent Spiritualist, placed in a small basket several small bundles of parlor matches, the most accurate pains being taken to prevent either of us or any other person from knowing either the number of bunches or the number of matches in any bunch and yet the number of either is not so great but that the number of each may be determined by mere inspection. This basket was then closed and wrapped and cross wrapped with thread, the knots of which and all interseotions were sealed with wax. This basket rests upon the sideboard in the dining-room of my home at 811 So. Sixth street, this city.

We now invite all persons with mediumistic power to tell us the number of bunches of matches and the number of matches in each bunch. When we have twenty or more of these answers this basket will be opened in the presence of a number of honest investigators among whom shall be at least two of the most reputable Spiritualists of this city. If any two answers coincide and are correct we will accept the proof. If but one answer is correct, the medium giving it will be asked to give a second and a third demonstration under like conditions. If two out of three of his answers are correct it will regarded as satisfactory. To each person giving us a correct answer, corroborated by at least one other correct answer, either by himself or by another medium, will be sent a check for $50 for his trouble or, if he declines compensation, we will pay this sum to any charity he may designate.

We request that all persons interested, aid us in publishing this proposed test among the mediums of his acquaintance or knowledge and to each one requesting it will be sent the result signed by all the parties participating and present, at the opening of the basket.

How Is Lightning Produced?

Undoubtedly every person has wondered how lightning is produced. I have often watched the streaks issuing from a dark cloud, and in the night flashes of lightning would make everything about me as light as day, when my mind would try to grasp the why, or how, or what produced that beautiful electrical display.

Last winter I read the opinion of some writer, but cannot now recall the name, or in what paper I read it, but think it was in The Progressive Thinker, who stated that "lightning is produced by two currents of electricity coming together from opposite directions."

This writer may have the correct solution of the phenomenon, but I will briefly relate an experience of mine that occurred in the month of September, 1905.

While sitting alone in my office, everything being quiet around me, I became oblivious to my surroundings, when I seemed to be standing up in a dark cloud far from the earth, when my attention was drawn to a small dark globule about the size of a very small shot. This globule seemed to be a magnet, drawing to itself smaller globules, or gases from every direction that flew to the first globule, or magnet, with such force that they seemed like a dark streak. While standing there a ball about the size of a man's fist was formed, and I then received the impression that the moisture in the cloud produced the condition for gases to form as above stated; and that when a certain proportion of the different gases had collected, the impact of the gases attracted caused an explosion, just as a light tap or jar to the combination of nitric acid and glycerine, called nitroglycerine will explode.

I have related my experience to several gentlemen of my acquaintance, and all agree that this solution of the phenomenon seems reasonable.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

STRICKEN SAN FRANCISCO.

Challenge the world, and it hates you,
Rebuke the world and it smiles;
Scorn the world and it rates you
One of its own exiles.

Follow the world and it frets you
With its ever varying trend;
Lead the world, and it lifts you
With the outstretched hand of a friend.

Drawn by the mystic current,
That trolls with a subtle breath;
We yield our wine and our vintage,
To slacken the pace of death.

Abroad in the stricken city,
Shocked, and shorn of her pride;
Stung by the hissing fury,
That gorged on her vital tide.

Transcendent star of the border,
Supreme in her own conceit,
Flashing afar her ardor,
She drew the world to her feet.

Born of a drastic struggle,
Braying the trundling sand;
Pilot and prime promoter,
Of thrift on the western strand.

She sheltered the monarchs of labor,
Between the land and the sea;
Espoused to her peerless harbor,
Facing her destiny,

Discerning that only endeavor
Commands results in a race;
She smiles in the face of disaster,
And turns with a logical grace,

Confronting her dark desolation,
With a sense of returning nerve,
With a pull that baffles description,
She drew on the world's reserve.

Banquet her now, and befriend her;
Endow in fraternity's name;
Great Soul, attuned to endeavor,
Struck dumb and bedizened with pain.

From out of the smoke and the carnage,
From out of the charred frames,
Of ravishments, devastation
Of wrecked and ruined remains.

Leaped an inspiration,
Born of the lurid flames;
Sped to its installation,
By the clang of a million chains.

Clad in a broader garment,
Clothed in a firmer weave;
Spun from the senses regnant,
Housed with the soul aggrieved.

Pioneer, Pilot, Promoter,
Entrenched in the forts of the Gods;
Pledging anew for the conflict,
Combatting invincible odds.

THE SOUL'S HARP.

Not shaken like a reed, ah, no!
But like a harp so finely strung;
Touched by quick hands or fingers slow,
That play the tender chords among.

Joy makes a glad, enraptured strain;
Hope breathes a sweet, triumphant tone;
More low the quivering notes of pain;
Love has a song that's all its own.

Grief sings, but in a minor key,
While memory her fond hand lays
Upon the strings. Old melody
Brings back the scenes of other days.

The summer birds at early morn,
Cannot outvie the songs of youth;
Whose music in the heart is born
Of courage, innocence and truth.

Tired, we listen as they play,
Those unseen fingers, soft and fair,
Of homes beyond time's shadowed way,
And loving ones who wait us there.

But, dear, the sweetest chords to me,
That on the harp were ever played,
Within your soul so tenderly,
Were those by deepest sorrow made.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To the Friends of the Lyceum.

May I once again call your attention to the need of united effort and support of the most important work of Spiritualism. We hope to issue a Lesson Quarterly for our children, but must have some interest shown to warrant it. The Quarterly would contain lessons for each Sunday, responsive readings, gems of thought, and order of exercises. It could be issued for ten cents a quarter. How many do you want?

We have also pretty lyceum pins, costing but five cents each; $4 per hundred, or $2 for fifty. Each member should wear one.

The N. S. A. authorizes me to offer three banners to be given to the three schools showing the best record during the coming year. No matter how small your lyceum may be now, you have a fair chance to earn the lovely banner if you show progress during the year.

All lyceums desiring to compete for the prize, send not later than January 15, the number of pupils enrolled, average attendance, general conditions, and names of officers; these will be duly filed, and we will advise your secretary thoroughly regarding the duties of competitors. Let me have your hearty sympathy and support that we may make this work beneficial to old and young children.

LIFE'S PROGRESSION.

"There is no death; there are no dead."

These words stand out on the cover of Edward C. Randall's new book. They are a challenge to the orthodox world, and through all of its pages runs this challenge to those whose ideas of God, of heaven, of hell, of a future life are based strictly upon the Bible. Yet Mr. Randall believes in life hereafter, based on positive knowledge given him from the living friends passed to the life beyond. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

Colorado Talks Back.

The chairmen of the Republican and Democratic State Central Committees of Colorado have denied the statements set forth in a widely copied dispatch from Denver, to the effect that woman suffrage is a failure in that state. Republican Chairman Vivian says the "interview with recognized leaders of the dominant parties" took place in the too imaginative brain of some reporter.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Securely packed, and sent postage paid from the manufacturer, for $1.00. Address

Psychic Light. BY MRS. DRAKE.

Important Addition to Our Literature.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has a national reputation as a medium. The manifestations given through her mediumship have been most marvelous. She has written a book with this title: "PSYCHIC LIGHT—THE CONTINUITY OF LAW AND LIFE." It is a ponderous volume of 600 pages. It will hold your attention from the beginning to the end. It is chockful of stirring incidents. Price of this large volume, only $1.50 postpaid.

STARTLING FACTS, OR Deeds of Darkness Disclosed

This work devotes special attention to Auricular Confession and its relations to sacerdotal celibacy, convents, monasteries, morality and civil and religious liberty. It is intended to be an embodiment of facts and documentary evidence of the pernicious influence of the confessional; a trenchant showing up of Romanism, based upon standard Catholic authorities; an eye-opener concerning the methods and spirit, the moral turpitude and evil works of Romanism. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

God and Hudson Tuttle.

His Great Work on "The Evolution of the God and Christ Idea"--An Exceptionally Important Production for the World to Consider.

Of course we give Darwin and Wallace credit for having discovered the evolution of form life. That startling doctrine made the theologian shake his head, and prove, by the bible, that God made everything just as we now see it, and did it all inside a week. Now comes Hudson Tuttle, who drags God into the controversy, for he insists, and proves, that "God Ideas" are just as much evoluted as forms. For some thirty-five years he has been gathering the facts now embodied in a last book entitled "Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas." He most certainly proves that the God of the theologian has been evoluted, like everything else, and moulded into its present shape by time and conditions. He shows how each race started the process with its own raw material.

The human raw material in every race has been ignorance and superstition that was afraid of the unseen. This ignorance always believed that there was somebody in that unseen who could do it harm. So it made him all sorts of offerings, dead and alive, to coax him to be real good and kind.

Mr. Tuttle traces the process by which Hindus, Chaldeans, Persians, Jews, Arabians, Greeks, Romans and Christians, each and all evolved their own special "God Idea." Some of the descriptions, as of the "God Idea" worshiped by the Aztecs, are thrillingly interesting.

The following by Emma Rood Tuttle shows us that the philosopher has a helpmeet worthy of him:

"Savage, saint and sage
Have built a dream-god, like unto themselves,
And with their best conceptions fashioned him.
Man never yet has seen Him face to face,
For he is hidden in a labyrinth
Of his own laws, which he can never break,
Nor set aside for any man's appeal."

Our author next applies his process to the "Christ Idea," and has succeeded in evolving a book which will never be popular among the churches. It should be, and the present writer feels that it will be warmly welcomed by independent thinkers everywhere, for it represents an amount of research requiring time, talent and patience rare in the realm of intellect.

Having said so much for the book and its author, the present writer will now add a sort of postscript of his own, for which Philosopher Tuttle must not be held responsible.

Evolution applied to ideas shows us that Gods—being always Ideas—have changed according to conditions, like everything else. There were lizards Pontius Pilate of old times, whose appreciated in their museums. Their present day descendents but a few inches long show us that evolution works both forward and backward. And man's God Idea has been sometimes large, and sometimes small, just like those lizards. Mr. Tuttle has taken the God Idea of the past and traced it step by step to the Christ-God Idea of to-day. There he stops, but I want to travel a step further, and reach out to the God Idea of to-morrow.

That, God will be a scientific God, based upon fact; for no other God-Idea will be possible for the educated thinker. Let us then start with the known. We find in Nature just three facts as the base upon which she builds. They are intelligence, energy and substance. There is no more, and can be no less in any God-Idea or Man-Idea. That is fact number one.

Fact number two is that the tiniest conceivable speck—we will call it a unit—contains all three, and nothing more, like the whole universe. That little unit shows its energy as it attracts a mate; and its intelligence when it chooses or rejects associates. When a few units thus get together and become an atom or a molecule, we perceive more intelligence and more energy, for both intelligence and energy manifest according to conditions. Each form acts for itself, fighting its own battles. You can destroy form, but you can not destroy units, so form simply begins all over again.

The point I want to make is that intelligence without substance—that is to say without form, is impossible. An idea is intelligence manifesting through form. It is, of course, limited in a single unit or small form, but it expresses all the conditions will permit. In the crystal it can work mathematically, and repair damages, while working outside the form. Another step and it builds cells, and works inside form. We then have the vegetable and the animal, each with its intelligence, energy and substance working under and through surrounding conditions. So every form is based on idea, which is only intelligence active in form. Mr. Tuttle has been tracing this activity through man after man, and right up to to-day. And the man's limitations, even at the highest, always led him to say "there are powers above and beyond mine. They compel me to believe in something higher and more powerful than myself." Such is the "God-Idea" in the human mind. Presently that man dies. The trend of advanced scientific thought of to-day is to refuse denial to that man's immortality. A myriad facts have compelled the most prominent scientists to at least suspend judgment.

Some of us think we KNOW that that man is living a broader life than ever. He may have senses unknown to us, but he is working with intelligence, energy and substance just like our own, but under very different conditions. The substance he uses is far too refined for mortal grasp, but his knowledge and energy have now an added factor which permits his development beyond anything of which we can conceive. He has almost, or quite an unlimited quantity of time. Indeed that is the meaning we give to eternity.

In this life just as a man has grasped some brilliant new thought, or elaborated some world-needed invention, he must leave his achievements, and pass into the unseen, with perhaps no successor to catch his thought and continue his labors. But keeping firmly to the one central fact, we know that wherever he is he is, and must have intelligence, energy and substance just as during his earth life. As years count for that life by centuries and eons he is ever mastering knowledge and power out of experiences, until, if we could meet him, he would certainly appear superior to his progress would cease. No sleepy Nirvana for that man, for he is ever demanding more knowledge and more power. Now does it not follow as a matter of cause and effect that the hour will come when he will shape raw material of Cosmos into nebulous clouds, and with that gathered nucleus experiment in the evolution of a planetary system?

That is only a question of the degree of power at the disposal of himself and his associates. Such a man has become by evolution and self-development all that the mortal of to-day conceives as a God. He is really the "God Idea" of the future for the advanced mortal.

In earth life we see the man of science moulding and shaping raw material into pyramids, temples and mighty ironclads. He experiments until he succeeds. And similarly our earth history points to perpetual experiments, and countless failures, with successes here and there that seem to justify the "God-Idea" immortal in his attempt at Cosmic progress.

If some think the task too great, let us remember we know nothing of size save by comparison. If our universe and all things therein and thereon were suddenly reduced one-half, nothing would be changed for us. Man would still pose as a lord of creation. And if everything were further reduced to dust specks, man the mortal could know no difference. So we can know nothing of the labor or quantity of raw material involved in the experiment. Surely, then, it is a very rational conception that the further evolution of the God-Idea will lead the coming man to conceive of a fellow-man as sufficiently advanced amid the possibilities of the future life to play the part of world builder, if he so choose. Nay, may he not rightly claim such power and privilege as a child of the Infinite.

His raw material will embody intelligence, energy and substance, through which, working both as a unit and collectively, he will perceive the law of evolution working out details of life which this world-maker will watch with ever increasing interest.

This is a tempting subject for thought, but I now merely offer it as a suggestion of what may be the coming God-Idea which a future Hudson Tuttle may include in his scheme of progress from the savage to the divine. Meantime I heartily commend Mr. Tuttle's work to the attention of everyone interested in advanced thought, and earnest search for truth.

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Ignorance Concerning the Spiritual World and True Spiritualism.

Many professed Spiritualists complain that they know little concerning Spiritualism and life in the spirit world. Such ignorance is deplorable, considering the vast amount of reliable information there is on these subjects which can be acquired by reading spiritual communications written by advanced and wise spirits; for instance, The Letters from Spirit World, by Carlyle Petersilea; Encyclopedia of Death and Life in the Spirit World.

The trouble seems to rest with the complainants. They will not accept as true spirit communications because they conflict with their preconceived notions. They say: "Why does not Ingersoll return and give us something worthy of his greatness?"

He has returned on many occasions and given many communications, but many people will not accept his messages as genuine. Spirit Ingersoll says through Carlyle Petersilea, "If I as a spirit say as I was wont to do when in the body of flesh and blood, that I did not know anything about a future life, that there was neither God, Devil nor hell, would the questioners think I had given them something worthy of myself? I should consider that I had not. It is quite humiliating to a man to find after nearly half a century of writing, lecturing and talking, that he has been entirely mistaken from the outset; that all his high-flown words have fallen about his soul like autumn leaves, leaving him like a tree stripped and bare of its foliage; this is somewhat the way I feel at present, consequently I cannot talk to the world as I once did. If I were to say to the questioners, 'I believe I am not dead; I am immortal. I am spirit; I do not know all I thought I did;' would they consider the statement of these great truths worthy of R. G. Ingersoll? Certainly not. Why, they would say that is not at all like the great agnostic. Now I don't want to be slapped in the face because I am doing my level best to let all know I am not dead. I don't want to be told that my efforts are not worthy of me."

Permit me to reiterate what Spiritualism is: It is both a science and a religion. It teaches us how to make the best of both worlds. It is the science of life. I presume it is best that we do not know how to produce something similar to spirit raps or spiritual phenomena; that devolves entirely upon the spirits, and is really none of our business. All we can do in this matter is to furnish the proper conditions to obtain spiritual phenomena.

It seems to raise the indignation of some Spiritualists, or rather, Spiritists, to have Spiritualism called a religion; they want it considered merely as a fact, like the multiplication table, or a problem in geometry. I imagine if it went no farther than that, it would be of very little benefit to mankind. Mankind are naturally religious, and need something to comfort and console when our loved ones are translated to the spirit world. We want to know where that spirit world is located, what are the employments of its inhabitants and whether they are happy or miserable; if they are happy, how to insure that happiness. Spiritualism gives us the desired information, in fact, the religion of Spiritualism is TO BE GOOD AND DO GOOD according to the exalted teachings of wise spirits. If we do that and search diligently the spiritual scriptures we shall have no grounds for complaints.

IDEAL REFLECTIONS.

With Aspirations for Improved Spiritual and Material Conditions, Leading to Light, Happiness and Heaven.

To the Editor:—I am much pleased with many things that occur in our spiritual ranks; one of them is The Thinker; another, most of its writers. I was so impressed with the answer our most worthy Brother Peebles gave to the question: "Have the passing years deepened your faith in the angel ministry? and do you feel that when the time of parting comes that all your faith and confidence will reap fruition?"

His answer was so positive and of so much assurance that when I read it, I laid the paper in my lap, and said to my wife who was listening, that I could feel the presence of the spiritual forces around me, that were bearing testimony of our dear old brother's response. We said, "Oh! if we could only always have that hallowed influence around and about us! Our lives are not always cast in the most pleasant places; perhaps it is well. If we were always on the Mountain Top, how could we sympathize and help those in the valley?"

We have learned the lesson that if we can do no one any good, WE MIGHT AS WELL, NOT HAVE BEEN BORN. This is what I call humanitarianism.

Now, I will go just one more than good Brother Moses Hull, and say where is there room outside of Humanitarianism for Spiritualism and socialism?

I think it would sound better for our cause to go by that name, than under the cloak of religion that has been marked and permeated with blood from ancient veins.

I have no doubt Brother Peebles's answer was based upon philosophy; not that I wish to show any disrespect to phenomena or be partial to either. It has been my observation that it is those who have delved down deep into the philosophy of Spiritualism, that can answer such questions with that degree of positiveness and say "I know the angels walk with us. At times I feel their presence near me, and I confidently await the time when the purple mantle will fall upon my mortal form; the time when my eyes will open to the golden splendor of the heavenly worlds, and I shall meet those grand souls who have preceded me."

This is what I call glorious consolation. When this great truth is ushered into our intellect, then we can say, "WE KNOW!" You can close the mouths of a gainsaying world more quickly with true philosophy than in any other manner.

I have observed many cases where philosophy would, attract the attention of some very readily that had stubbornly ignored the phenomena for years: I know that I have arrested the attention of more than one who has said, "Why, I never heard it talked of in that light before," and would say, "I don't see anything bad about that." Heaven bless your dear souls, there is nothing bad in Spiritualism; it is not Spiritualism that we object to. every whit good. It is that which is

We can put so much artificial toggery to Spiritualism that it reminds one of the bible.

Now the Spiritualists are taking this superfluous part from the book as fast as they can, and when they get through with the work, we will have the finest bible in the land. Even the unthinking class will soon view it all differently than they do at the present time.

The preachers are changing, and there is a class that has always believed what their preacher said.

I saw in the Baptist paper that a good brother in recommending an elder said, "Best of all, he is loyal to the bible. He is orthodox, and that is a great thing now-a-days."

The most important question that can be possibly raised about any minister, "Is he sound in the faith?" You see there are a lot of Dr. Crapsy's just now.

Now, our government system is out of order, when we get a purer system established, and this graft (which we can rightfully call it) is eliminated, and when people will not have to steal and beg for a livelyhood, then they will flock to the banner of Spiritualism; then humanitarianism will be the ruling element; then we will have heaven in America.

It is all right to think well of the departed ones. We love them dearly, and will be so very, very glad to meet them on the higher plane. We can not go to them now only as we lift ourselves up to that plane by the right kind of living, and the right kind of thoughts. Why, I am sure there is not a day but what their presence is with me; they are dearer and nearer day by day. We can help them by living proper lives and giving them our best wishes; but how can the spirit world be happy when they behold all the misery and crime extant in the world, caused by a greed for gain. Oh, that we could be better to the living, work more for the welfare of humanity.

Oh! dear friends, I could not help but weep for joy when I read on the 20th page of the December number of Reason, what Brother Peck said of the moral hero of Asia, Gautama or the Buddha. If there is a higher type of manhood exhibited by anyone I have failed to recognize; a man who would leave all the luxuries, love of parents, a loving companion, an unborn child, a kingdom and throne, all renounced that he might lead a life of poverty, be free to labor for humanity, and free them from poverty, crime, degradation and vice. I never read of a more beautiful character in my life. This was not done for earthly gain, kingship or crown.

When I look around to-day, I behold the multitude living in palaces, surrounded by all the luxuries of life, simply living and hoping to keep them if they continue to be right saving. Now I honestly believe that ninety-nine out of every hundred of such characters have a greater love for the phenomena than they have for the philosophy. It is generally the case that the poor of the land are rich in spirit. The day will come when an excess in land, stocks and money will eat like a canker.

Let us remember, dear ones, that happiness, or heaven will never be reached till unity, a system of equality, right and justice shall have been ushered in.

About Hell.

Theologians calmly assume that the destruction or radical transformation of the old symbols is equivalent to the destruction of the things symbolized, and the alteration of the human nature which created them. For my part, I cannot even understand the doctrine that the conscience (for instance) was created by a belief in hell and will perish when hell ceases to be credible. It seem to me clear that the conscience created the old hell and will presumably create a new one, sufficient for practical purposes, whenever the ancient mythology decays.—Leslie Stephen.

Prayer: Its Uselessness and Unscientific Assumption. By Henry M. Taber. Price 10 cents.

A STRANGE PHENOMENON.

The Mystery of the Haunted Window, Illustrating the Weird Action of Occult Forces—The Port Richmond District of Philadelphia Has a Mystery so Peculiar, so Inexplicable, That It Has Driven Jerry Gilruth Almost Insane, Mystified the Entire Neighborhood, and Distracted the Detectives Who Have Been Appealed to in the Effort to solve It.

The mystery consists of nothing more or less than a window in Jerry Gilruth's room, over Kilroy's saloon. Apparently there is nothing mysterious about the window. It is five feet four inches high, and three feet two inches wide, with double sash, each sash being set with four panes of glass. The counter weights are medium weight iron, round, with an eye at the upper end, through which passes a rope—the regular window-cord rope. The lock is a common one, a catch arrangement that turns to fasten the sills together. Along the edges of the window frame are deep dents, places gouged out of the wood, marks and scars that show where the nails have been driven, where patent window fasteners have clutched the wood, where screws have wounded the sills.

Window is of Ordinary Construction.

All this description is necessary to explain that the window is an ordinary one without any material differences from any other window and seemingly in perfect repair and condition, balanced properly, and scientifically weighted. Carpenters have examined it. Window factory experts have declared it perfect. Yet there is something wrong with it.

The entire mystery resolves itself upon the fact that this window seems to open itself, in spite of locks, nails, and other devices, and that it opens only while Jerry Gilruth is asleep in the room.

It is this fact that has driven Gilruth almost insane, and yet, with celtic stubbornness and courage, he declares he will remain in that room until he has solved the mystery of the opening of the window.

Gilruth had lived in the room, taking his meals out, for nearly two years before the window began to play its amazing pranks upon him. It was not until one morning last January that he noticed anything strange. The night was cold, and he had left the window open only a few inches at the bottom. About three o'clock in the morning he woke up, conscious of cold air, and discovered the window wide open—and everything in the room frozen. The water in the pitcher was stiff. He remembered distinctly that he had arranged the window before going to bed, but, thinking perhaps he had raised it in a fit of absentmindedness before retiring, he got up, turned on the radiator full force, and closed the window again, to snatch a few winks of sleep before getting up at 7 o'clock to go to work.

Will Not Stay Closed.

Within a short time he was warm and dropped off to sleep again, but soon waked again shivering, and found the window open again. That time he was startled. He lighted the gas, looked under the bed, searched the closet, and tried the door. It was locked, yet, to satisfy himself, he unlocked it, and looked out into the hallway. There was nothing in sight. He then returned and looked down into Frankford avenue, twenty feet below. He thought it would be impossible for anyone to climb up to the window. The only way the feat could be accomplished was by climbing up on the awning frame by the signs and then on to a ledge four feet below the window sill. A light snow was on the ledge and its surface was unbroken, so he closed the window, locked it securely, so he vows, and retired.

Shortly before 7 o'clock, the coldest hour of the day, he was awakened again, half frozen—and the window was wide open. He stared at it in amazement, dressed hurriedly, locked it, and went down stairs to kick to the landlord. He claimed there was something wrong with the mechanism of the window, and a carpenter was called, who overhauled the window and reported it in perfect shape. Gilruth refused to believe it. He claimed the weights were out of order and had pulled the lower sash of the window up.

Battened Down, Again Goes Up.

Over three months passed without a move from the window—and Gilruth thought his theory was correct. He claimed the carpenter had corrected some mistake in the window weights. Then, on the morning of April 14, the window started its tantrums again. Rain was falling and a high wind was blowing. He had battened down the window tight and retired about 10 o'clock.

About 2 a. m. he waked up, with rain pouring in in torrents. The window was wide open and the heavy rain, carried by the high wind, was pouring like a cataract over the bed, which was soaked. He was angry. Arising he closed the window, wetting himself to the skin in the act, lighted the gas, and then skirmishing for dry clothes and bed clothing, finally succeeding in making himself comfortable. He lay for some time, shivering, and, just as he was dozing off, a sharp splash of cold rain in his face brought him from bed with a bound. The window was open again. He closed and locked it, and, going out into the hallway, found the hatchet and some nails and proceeded to drive two nails through the sash and into the window sill. Then he retired again to try to make up for lost time.

Nailed the Sill, Still Rises.

Exactly at 5:40, he says, he was awakened again by a deluge of rain pouring over him. The window was wide open. The nails had been pulled out as if they had offered no resistance.

Gilruth confesses that he closed the window, hastened down to Kilroy's saloon, found Pete Kilroy just opening up, and took four drinks in succession to quiet his nerves.

That night he admits he hung around the barroom until nearly midnight before he would retire. He was afraid of the window, and openly stated to his landlord that he believed the window was bewitched. The landlord went upstairs with him and together they screwed down the window, locked it, and placed a patent fastener between the two frames, besides driving nails over the bottom frame into the sill. That night the window did not open. The next night it remained undisturbed.

But the third night came the climax. Both the other windows in the room had been left open, because the evening was warm and balmy. The "haunted window," as Gilruth called it, was left nailed, screwed, battened, tied and locked down.

About 4 in the morning, Gilruth says he awoke with a start. At first he imagined he merely had been awakened in the middle of a dream. He was on the point of dropping off to sleep again when he noticed that the window was wide open—and both the other windows closed.

Apparently the screws, locks, and nails had lifted themselves out of their own accord. He sat up in bed, shivering with fright—and remained there for some time before he dared get up and make an examination. Then, although he confesses he was frightened, he got out of bed, made a careful examination of the room and the ledge outside, and closed the window.

Then he climbed back into bed determined to solve the mystery. He decided that he would remain awake and watch the window. Outside was extremely dark, the glare of the street lights upon the misty morning air relieving and yet accentuating the blackness. Every shadow caused Gilruth to jump. Every creak of the house made him start. He remained shivering from nervous fright in his bed, his eyes straining through the darkness toward the window, and his body tense with expectation, and every muscle prepared for a leap through the darkness.

The clock struck 5, and still he remained wide awake, excited and nervous. Down stairs the cuckoo clock chimed the half hour, gray light was beginning to replace the darkness, Gilruth's eyes kept closing, as weariness overcame him and as approaching daylight scattered his nervous fears. He dozed, waked with a start, dozed again, again started into wakefulness and finally his eyelids sank together and he slept.

Closes When It Is Left Open.

One minute later, he declares, he waked with a start, and the window was wide open.

That day the story of the haunted window was spread abroad, Gulruth's strange experiences were recounted. Carpenters and mechanics of all sorts were summoned to examine the window and could find nothing wrong with it. Still it continues to open. Sometimes it opens ten times a night and then it will not open of its own accord for a fortnight. Once Gilruth started to leave it open all the time to beat the spook game and then it commenced to close, apparently of its own accord, and closed with perfect persistency.

The uncanniness of the thing almost has driven Gilruth mad, but, with strange courage and perseverance, he vows to remain and solve the problem.

His hair is turning gray from worry and nervousness.

There are some who whisper that it is Gilruth himself who, while asleep, arises and opens the window—but most of the people who know about it are firm in their conviction that the window opening is the work of spirits, or spooks, or ghosts—or, perhaps, of some cruel practical joker, bent on driving Gilruth out of his room.—Chicago Tribune.

Reincarnation.

We wish to ask L. P. Wheelock if he thinks that life is ever less than nature. If so, then good-by to stability, and good-by to immortality. Now these are simply theories, advanced by L. P. Wheelock and myself, deduced from phenomena,—but, it seems to me, if life has a beginning in a germ—can develop, and grow, then it follows that it can have an end. The three principles underlying all nature, to me, are:

First, Stability of life.

Second, Evolution of matter.

Third, Aggregation of all life in Infinite Intelligence.

It depends all upon our point of view. To me there is no up, no down, no great, no small, as regards value in the universal scheme. A little screw may prove the link that holds a mighty structure together. It simply is enough that WE ARE,—and if we realize our divine inheritance we will find divinity in all things,—the expression of life becomes sacred, and our experience be colored thereby.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The Idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

RETURNED FROM AUSTRALIA

W. J. Colville, Noted Lecturer and Author, Narrates His Experiences.

To the Editor:—Permit me through your hospitable columns to inform my many friends among the readers that I have returned from Australasia and am now resuming activities in California, where my present address is 1649 Everett street, Alameda.

My extended travels in Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand were attended with considerable success. Wherever I went I was greeted with large, enthusiastic audiences, and I was permitted to meet a large number of delightful friends in a social manner. I found all over Australasia a deep and ever-increasing interest in Spiritualism and all that goes by the name of Progressive Thought, which is already popular in all the principal cities among people of the highest intelligence and culture. I have now toured the whole of Australia and am quite prepared to declare that it offers a wide and fertile field for workers who are willing to devote themselves entirely to their mission, and can stand a good deal of traveling and many varieties of climate.

That excellent pioneer monthly "The Harbinger of Light," issued in Melbourne, is constantly adding to its circulation, and under the extremely able editorship of Mrs. Chas. Bright, a singularly earnest and capable woman, exerts a wide influence for good in a community where the daily press leaves very much to be desired in the way of intelligent appreciation of psychic investigation.

"Progressive Thought" in Sydney, edited with equal ability, by Henry Cardew, is a magazine of ever increasing power and influence, and many somewhat smaller publications are also shedding much needed light.

In New Zealand I found a great many very earnest Spiritualists, and there also are a number of flourishing organizations, though the people depend chiefly upon Australia for periodical literature. The exhibition at Christchurch is a great success, and possesses high educational nature, though it is very small in comparison with the gigantic Fairs witnessed in America.

The Theosophical movement is very much alive in the Southern Hemisphere and many extremely intelligent people are openly connected with it.

I have been very fortunate in all my travels, both by sea and land, and can gladly testify to the uniform courtesy and kindness I have experienced on ship and train alike in the course of my extended voyaging. On board the 'Sonoma," which made a very peaceful, though rather slow passage between Sydney and San Francisco, I was invited to give several addresses, and I spent much time conversing enjoyably with many of the passengers on psychic theories, in which many took a decided interest.

December 13 was spent in Honolulu. The day was very wet, but we were delighted to spend several hours on shore, and all who enjoyed the hospitality and partook of the excellent lunch provided by the Royal Hawaiian Hotel will long remember the many charms of that singularly attractive hostelry which fully justifies all the lavish praise which visitors continually bestow upon it. Honolulu in winter, is superb and the climate almost perfect.

I am indebted to Dr. J. M. Peebles for occasional copies of your always interesting and instructive paper and for a copy of his late book concerning Pre-existence and many other intensely important spiritual problems. I am writing a few reviews of that excellent treatise, which is full to overflowing with thought-stimulating material. I am delighted to know that the faithful, venerable "Pilgrim" is still strong and active. Such men as he are greatly needed. I venture to hope that my book in which you kindly took a liberal interest, "Universal Spiritualism," is now in the hands of American subscribers. Every name and subscription I have taken I have forwarded to the publishers, R. T. Fenno & Co., 18 East 17th street, New York. I did not lose a cent of anybody's money through earthquake and fire in San Francisco, but the devasting elements consumed an investment on which I depended for making advance payments to insure speedy publication. Having lost that source of supply, I was compelled to canvass for subscribers in Australia and New Zealand to raise funds. I have secured 800 additional names since March 29, when I took my departure for Sydney. I have received numerous letters of inquiry and I have only this straightforward explanation to make to everybody. Advance subscribers have furnished me with capital absolutely necessary for bringing out the volume, and they receive their books at a lower price in consequence. $1 is now the fixed price, retail cost of every copy. Wishing you and all your readers the choicest of blessings in 1907, believe me yours sincerely.

THE CHRISTMAS DINNER.

Held In Unity Chapel, 180 Williams Street, Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs Messersmith, assisted by a band of workers, gave a Turkey dinner to one hundred poor children of the city. After the dinner hour a beautifully decorated Christmas Tree, laden with gifts for each child present, was distributed among the little ones. Each received a pair of mittens as well as other gifts, such as books, dolls, tops, candies, nuts, popcorn, etc.

Last year a like dinner was served to fifty little ones, and thankful to say, this year the number was increased to one hundred. A number of cheerful-givers responded very generously to a call for assistance. To them we extend a vote of thanks; also to sister Gemindes, for the use of the said Chapel; also for assistance otherwise.

Thus a good work is going on in a quiet manner, and we trust that when another year shall roll around, we may be able to feed and care for five hundred; also that the children, young and old, may be fed, not only one day out of three hundred and sixty-five, but every day during the year; not only spiritually fed, but by the food grown upon God's green earth, which is intended for all his children to have an abundance. Let one and all take interest in their brothers and sisters, as all are one great family, and in this manner many would escape the downfalls which happen to so many.

A NEW ORGANIZATION.

The Occult Club of Port Huron, Mich.

It is an organized and incorporated body under the Act. No. 171, of public Acts, 1903, in the state of Michigan. Articles of association are filed with the circuit court, county of St. Clair, state of Michigan. The principal office and place of business is at Port Huron, Mich. The purposes for which it is formed are as follows: The teaching and dissemination of Spiritualistic doctrines, propagating religious thought, examining phenomena of a psychological or occult nature, developing mediumistic powers in those manifesting a desire for the same, and the establishment and organizing of subordinate or branch clubs to aid in accomplishing the purposes above set forth.

The head club is adopting section 8, which reads: The payment of a funeral benefit of not to exceed two hundred dollars.

The qualifications required of officers and members are as follows: Any member in good standing in the club may be elected or appointed to any office. All persons of good repute in the community, who are desirous of obtaining knowledge of a spiritual character may become members of the club by making application therefor in writing and being elected by ballot at any regular meeting of the club.

The Occult Club has approved and adopted a constitution, by-laws and ritual, so that at any time there should be an occasion to suspend a member, officer or medium who may give cause for same, we can do it legally. The officers of this club shall be as follows: Elective, president, vice-president, recording secretary, financial secretary, treasurer, chaplain, usher, and guard. Non-elective, lecturer, past president, assistant usher and board of trustees.

The Preamble of the Club:—Believing as we do that the teaching and dissemination of Spiritualistic doctrines contribute to the comfort and consolation of bereaved humanity, inasmuch as it assures us of a life beyond the grave, and gives us the blessed hope of again meeting our loved ones gone before, thereby robbing death of much of its terrors, and bringing us into closer communion with the infinite author and controller of our destinies, therefore we, members of the Occult Club of Port Huron, have organized said Club with the objects of propagating religious thoughts, for examining into all phenomena of a psychological or occult nature, and for developing mediumistic power in all who desire to obtain such power. And with such objects in view, we solemnly pledge ourselves to cherish towards all people a spirit of toleration, to be charitably-minded, to be harmonious in all our gatherings, to live uprightly, and to be peaceable and law-abiding in all our dealings with each other and the public in general. We further pledge ourselves to exercise the greatest caution in accepting tests and other manifestations as genuine and reliable, so that none present at our meetings, who may be skeptically inclined shall find cause to bring reproach upon the Club. And while we invite all people interested in Spiritualistic investigation to join hands with us, and to become part of us as a Club, we propose to admit to membership such persons only whom we regard as honest in purpose, sincere in their professions, of good moral character and believers in the teachings of the Christ. To all of the foregoing we agree and now pledge our sincere support.

The Occult Club has legal protection and can sue or be sued.

Any Spiritualistic body that would like to have the protection of the Occult Club can do so by meeting the requirements of the Occult Club at Port Huron, Mich. We have three branch clubs in the state of Michigan. For further information address

An Octogenarian Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—My subscription expired with No. 888. I noticed it, felt, and sensed it, most keenly, but I wanted to see if I could live without it, in my own name. After being a subscriber for nearly its entire existence, I cannot do it. To be sure I can have it to read each week, since a lady to whom I presented it some months ago, is now a valued member of my household. But when I look back to other days or years, when trouble and sorrows were all around me, aye, almost privation and want, for I was a living illustration of poor old Jonah, having like him been called to cry against the sin, or spiritual darkness of the people, I wanted my own way, to build me a home where no living man could swear at me in it, and remain within its doors.

When my work was complete, and I could say, I owe naught but "Peace on earth, good will," there came a "whale" of a drouth for three years, and I was swallowed up. I was left on the dryest soil, I had ever known.

In my distress I unconsciously made my plaint to The Progressive Thinker, with no intent to publish my woes to the world, but the dear angels saw otherwise, and I was saved.

My home was then in a cold state. For fourteen years I have lived on this lovely Pacific coast, with climate unexcelled, and the varied beauties of nature spread out before us; till with the changes time never fails to bring, and I often feel but for the angels, that I am alone, I more than ever say, 'tis home, sweet home!

But what have I done for others? Ah, me, I have a receipt and letter from our worthy secretary of the N. S. A., in which she with thanks, tells me, the bright beings encamp very close to me. 'Tis a pleasure to compensate for all that I receive and say again, I owe naught but "Peace on earth, good will" to all.

I enclose money order to continue my good "Thinker," and like the Methodists, I wish everybody would "pray for me," that I may, with my four-score years, retain my brain and eyesight to the end which will be happily welcome.

A Gift! A Gift!

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ," a most valuable illustrated work, translated from the French by Mr. Ghandi, a learned Hindoo, is to be sent as a Gift to every subscriber of The Progressive Thinker. It has always sold for $1.00. We purchased the copyright, and now we have the exclusive privilege of publishing the work, and wholly for the benefit of our subscribers. Before sending in your order, read carefully the following:

"The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ" is a remarkable book. It supplies a veritable missing link in the history of a remarkable personage. It fills a hiatus which has puzzled Christian as well as non-Christian scholars, to account for. The New Testament account of the life of Jesus is vitally deficient, as passing over in blank silence a great many years of his earthly existence.

It is the usual understanding of Christian writers and scholars, that the public works and teachings of Jesus, except what little was done before the end of the thirteenth year of his age, were comprised in the last three years of his life. Luke says (Chap. 1:80) "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." Chap. 3:23, says, "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age."

It is indeed strange that the most remarkable character in the world's history should drop out of sight for a long period of years, comprising the larger part of his life from childhood on, and no record of that period be found. It seems the last three years of his life comprised the years of his public ministry. Where was he, and what was he doing during these years from about his thirteenth to his thirtieth year?

This remarkable book seems to answer the query. He traveled into India, the land of Buddhism and Lamaism, and there became learned in the lore of that country, he became proficient in the study of its antiquities and literature, its religions and its philosophies.

In the Buddhist monasteries of Thibet, M. Notovitch relates how he found access to some manuscripts which told of the visit of Issa (Jesus) and his life while there. This narrative fills the gap in the New Testament account, from his thirteenth year until his return and his public "showing unto Israel," as a divine teacher. The Buddhist records complete what the gospel records omit.

The translation of these Buddhist records forms an exceptionally interesting study to the general reader as well as to the more critical scholar and student of ancient religious literature.

And now we are happy to announce to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, that, having secured the plates of this remarkable book, we have concluded in this holiday season to offer this volume to them as a premium. It will be an actual gift to each one who sends in One Dollar for a year's subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and ten cents in stamps to pay the postage on the book.

Any one who is now on our list of subscribers can also secure this book as an actual gift, by sending in ten cents in stamps to pay postage on the same, and One Dollar to extend the time of their present subscription one year.

Letter From the Ohio State Missionary.

To the Editor:—It has been some time since I wrote to you but I have not been idle for all that, but my mother's condition is greatly hampering my time. I have recently spent two Sundays in Ashtabula, lecturing in G. A. R. Hall, both afternoon and evening. The society there is very busy with the building of a new temple which is to be dedicated to "Truth."

The foundation is already finished, and they are preparing to lay the corner stone. Then they will proceed to finish off the basement, which is being arranged to hold socials and suppers in.

The Woman's Aid Society is giving weekly suppers in a near by hall, and all of the proceeds are turned over to the building fund.

It is a pleasure to note with what enthusiasm and loyalty the members there are working to afford the public a comfortable place to come to and listen to the teachings of Spiritualism, without having to climb one and two flights of stairs, as is often the case. May courage attend their effort and success crown them.

On last Saturday evening I addressed the veterans of the Ohio Soldier's Home, at Sandusky, Ohio. The meeting was conducted under the auspices of the Psychic Research Society of Sandusky. Brother Walters and Brother Babcock, who are inmates of the Home, had long requested this. When President Jackson asked the audience for a subject for the evening's discourse, the Rev. Mr. Hayes, who is the chaplain of the Home offered a Scriptural passage in the New Testament, the parable of "The rich man in hell, and Lazarus in Abraham's bosom."

He also asked the question: "Why do Spiritualists lay so much stress upon the nearness or presence of their departed friends, and say little or nothing about the mission of Christ?" adding that he asked this, not in a spirit of criticism, but because he wants more light!

My inspirers led out in answers that were clear and to the point, and quoted scripture which they said was done simply to show that it contains records of psychic and spiritual phenomena.

General Khire, commandant of the Home was present, and expressed himself as very much pleased. The next day being Sunday, I lectured in the afternoon and evening at the regular meeting place of the society. A good, appreciative audience was present, and those having attended both services considered the day well spent.

December 30 I will be at home, and will spend the afternoon with the "Faithful" at Golden Rule Hall, a place that to me is hallowed because of the many truly helpful hours spent there with the children of the neighborhood in the Lyceum, and with Mr. Jones, whose presence I always feel very strongly when there.

I hope to resume my missionary work, but cannot say just when. In the meantime I will fill Sunday engagements and answer funeral calls, etc. With best wishes for a happy, prosperous New Year to ALL.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY NOTICE.

Special Notice, and Words of Explanation.

The organization of a Temple Fund Society by the last convention of the N. S. A., was to furnish a practical method for raising funds to assist auxiliary societies to secure temples in their localities. The fund will not be for any special society or place, but wherever there may be the most need. We have had some requests for help; but being in the first stage of development, we are not yet competent. The present indications are that a helping strength will soon be ours as a society for temple extension. We must first get necessary funds before we can disburse them. By the time of our next annual convention, we hope to be able to make some disbursements to local societies. We would be much gratified if that ability shall previously be given us. If the Spiritualists will rally to the development of this fund, we will at once put it into good use.

Send one dollar for annual membership fee, or a donation to secure being enrolled on the Roll of Honor, or sufficient to be a life-member. This fund is under N. S. A. supervision, and also by consent of the Temple Fund Society, in all disbursements. The fund is well guarded and carefully managed. Give it your full confidence and you will not be disappointed.

Each auxiliary society of the N. S. A., and others, also each public worker in the cause are requested by the Temple Fund Society to take a public collection for the temple fund on the second Sunday in March next. Will all of these comply, and thus make a practical contribution to our mutual cause? Make it an anniversary tribute to your spirit friends. Societies may select an official or member to be enrolled upon the Roll of Honor as a tribute to them by such donations.

Any solicitor of funds may be similarly honored. Will the speakers and mediums take some interest in this movement, that will eventually be of great help to their public work?

Localities needing help will show their worthiness of being helped by assisting this fund. This is a highly practical movement, entirely co-operative. Let us show good-will to all and assist the cause everywhere possible!

The T. F. S. would like to compile statistics of local temples in the United States. Will each society owning a temple respond and specify the worth of their edifice, any debt upon it, or if paid in full; and if possible need for help may occur. All temple statistics will help us to study the public need and give information.

Please remit funds or mail statistics to Mrs. Carrie H. Mong, Secretary, 415 S. Franklin street, Muncie, Ind., or to yours fraternally,

GEORGE W. KATES,
President.

BELIEVER IN SPIRITUALISM.

Mr. George Holland's Address at Unity Club, Created Discussion—Remarkable Phenomena in Which Departed Friends Appeared.

At the weekly meeting of the Unity club, connected with the Unitarian Church, Ottawa, Canada, Mr. George Holland delivered an address on "Some Experiences in Psychical Research," which proved to be of the most absorbing interest. Mr. Holland is a conscientious, firm believer in Spiritualism and has had experiences which certainly make the non-believer wonder. In the discussion that followed it was soon evident that all were not Spiritualists and yet no one was able to more than suggest a probable explanation of the remarkable phenomena described by the lecturer.

Mr. Holland told of conversations with departed friends, the reliability of which has passed beyond the possibility of doubt so far as he is concerned. Among those with whom Mr. Holland has conversed are his son, who was drowned at Deschenes; his grandmother; Rev. Father O'Connor, Mr. E. D. Parlow and others. Naturally the main reason for Mr. Holland's absolute faith in the genuineness of these manifestations lies in the fact that the conversations had to do with subjects upon which no medium could possibly have even the faintest knowledge. Of course Mr. Holland, in pursuit of his investigations, met with many frauds. That was to be expected, and he soon learned to distinguish between the fakir and genuine medium. During the last six years a growing sense of the genuineness of Spiritualism has grown on him and has superseded somewhat materialistic views as to man's destiny, with a strong belief in the future life beyond the grave.

In the discussion Mr. John Lambert Payne, who was a visitor at the club, told some experiences quite as remarkable as Mr. Holland's, and while he did not profess to understand the phenomena, he was an earnest seeker after knowledge. Mr. Payne has had experiences at trumpet seances in which conversations took place that no medium could have any knowledge of. Especially true was this at a seance in which the medium was a woman of very ordinary mental caliber and yet in the conversation with spirits he spoke in German and on one occasion had a departed telegrapher tick off a message on the trumpet, which he read without the slightest difficulty. This, it seemed to him, made it sure that the medium was not a party to any fraudulent work such as ventriloquism, etc.

I CAN CURE

ANY KNOWN

DISEASE

Without the Use of Medicine.

I want every man, woman and child to know that I can cure any disease that human flesh is heir to.

This is a broad statement to make, but it is true. I know it to be true, and thousands of people scattered throughout the United States, from Maine to San Francisco, that I have restored to health (in many cases after years of suffering), will vouch for the truth of this statement.

I am always looking for other cases to prove it on. If you have any ailment I can prove it to you. In fact, I want to prove it to everybody that is not enjoying good health, whether given up by the doctors or not.

No matter what the disease is or of how long standing, I am positive that I can cure them all. You should do yourself justice by investigating.

Doctors often tell their patients that they have incurable diseases. I want to tell you right here that there is not an incurable disease, and I will convince you beyond a doubt. All I ask is that you call or write me fully about your case.

I will furnish indisputable proof that I have cured people suffering from Rheumatism, Cancer, Tumors, Paralysis, Blindness, Asthma, Eczema, Consumption, Hernia, Liver Trouble, Epileptic Fits, Locomotor Ataxia, Heart Trouble, Nervous Prostration, Obesity, and a hundred other diseases doctors call incurable.

In nearly every instance I have cured these cases after the doctors had given the patient up to die.

Don't delay. Call or write at once. I treat hundreds of cases every day.

Here are names and addresses of people cured within the last few weeks. Any of them may be seen or written to and they will explain their case in detail:

Mrs. Travis, 1720 Stewart avenue, cured of a large tumor on neck.

Dr. J. W. Migreth, 261 West Madison street; liver trouble.

Mrs. Martha Thielbar, 6414 Madison avenue; tuberculosis of the bone.

Hiram Nickels, 3112 Fifth avenue; consumption.

Mrs. Frances Koehler, 222 Irving avenue; hernia.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be shown by Dr. Birkholz.

I treat all kinds of diseases by the use of vitalized flannel and absent treatment.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., JANUARY 12, 1907. NO. 894

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

What if the Influence of the Spirit World Should Leave Us?

In reading The Progressive Thinker No 887, I heartily agree with our most able Brother Paul McArthur of St. Louis. In his conclusions he said he believed we were standing on the threshold of a new era, and that we were learning the lessons of life as never before. How true it proved at our recent N. S. A. convention. Perhaps it did seem as though too much "Hot Air" was used, and perhaps it did not seem pleasant to some to hear that the work of our various workers seemed to result in so little that was visible, and that the outcome of labor could not be tabulated so as ta show up large in the footing of total columns. But I say, perhaps after all it was worth something to converse and keep alive the interests that were already gained; and that it set me to thinking, what if the interests that are now with us, and making for the best that we can hope for, should die out? What if the influence of the spiritual world should leave us?

You know we had sermons by the score all over the country on "If Christ should come to Chicago, New York, Boston, or some other city."

Too often it would seem as if the microbe pessimistic managed to work its way into the gray matter of some preacher's brain, with the result of his view the city in which he lived was Christless.

Christ would drop stone dead with fright if for once he should come and look upon the wrong doings that are part of the city life. Now, that idea is perfectly false, and just shows what fool mistakes those preachers sometimes make.

It is altogether wrong to imply that Christ is ever away from the life of any city in the world, no matter how bad or how wicked its life may be.

Do you think that the cities and the civilization of this grand country of ours has been built up without the aid, presence and sympathy of the angel world?

Do you think that the sin, sorrow and evil which manifest themselves in the lives of men among us, are living where the eyes of spirit do not follow them in sorrow and grief? If you do, then you don't know the angel world, and your estimate of divine in human life is altogether a false one. There has never been a corner stone of progress and growth laid in any land but the angel world were present and rejoiced at every promise of good that was voiced.

Did not Christ say: "Lo! I shall be with you everywhere until the end of ages." Nay, that does not tell the whole truth. Christ is more vitally present, more really with us than when he walked that old city in the days of Pontius Pilate. You know he never was appreciated in those days. He produced but little effect in the life of the city. His spirit was not felt; his mission was not understood. He was outside of the thoughts and activities of his own day, but our civilization is brimming full of life and spirits of those beyond, whether we write a business letter, or mail a social note, or close a deal in real estate, all is being influenced, and the totality of these influences are the living effects of Christ and others upon the generation.

Think what Paul has been to the race. Think of Luther, Calvin and Huss, Tyndall and Wesley, Beecher, Brooks and Ruskin, with a soul so gentle. Think of men like Lowell, Emerson, Longfellow, Bryant and Dickens. Think of Washington and Lincoln, men who have been the center of large currents of life; men who have influenced legislation in the nation; men who have produced kinder spirit in the world-at-large, and when we ask for the power by which these men have wrought, for the inspiration which impelled them so that they turned away from selfish motives, then we ask why they lived as they did, and the answer is: This was the influence of the spirit world over them. Suppose the inspiration of the spirit world had no such homes among men, how much of our present-day civilization would have been gained? If it had been gained, what a different place our great country would now be; sorry to say that because we possess them so abundantly, we value them as lightly as the sunshine, the atmosphere and the rain; but listen! What if they were all swept away from us?

Let us stop a minute and think. We have our laws, our social investments, our schools, our literature, our libraries, our forms of government, our personal liberty, our hospitals, our asylums of refuge—how did all these things come to be? Why, they are because the influence of the spirit has never been absent from the men who have gone on before us.

These forces are the living proofs that the spirit has no time been absent from man, but that where civilization has taken root, there the inflring spirit power has been living and working unwearily and successfully.

Now, picture the blight which would come upon life in this great fair country of ours, if in it there were no great books, no sweet, inspiring songs sung, no great and attractive pictures, and no art of any kind—nothing refreshing to the men and women whose life were made noble and strong by the example of the "man of sacrifice and eternal love," and no ministers and message bearers with their message and plea; no hospital and nurses with their ministry and healing; no divine influence of glorious inspiration which tends to uplift man and teaching—none of these things—all are gone—all wiped out like a line on a slate with a wet sponge. What would be the result, do you think, created as we are with faults in business toil, competition and material ideals—a dreary record of infidelity and human passion and selfishness.

Have you ever thought what such a thing might mean? Would you care to be in a world like that? And yet if the influences of the spirit world left us, what other results would come?

Brethren, let us rally as never before! Let us be in one accord with the angel world! Let us become more spiritual, so as to be a credit to our most glorious cause of truth! May our banner be ever kept pure and undefiled by words and deeds of each worker, may the workers of our press be ever watchful of the welfare of our cause, and let us be thankful and appreciate the fact that we are able to have at our disposal the "power of the press," which has done so much good for the upbuilding of our cause and the enlightening of humanity, as the "Pen is mightier than the sword."

A CALL TO PRAYER.

For the Elimination of Oppression, Fraud and Commercialism.

To the Editor:—For some weeks past I have carefully read the contents of your excellent paper, and have pondered the pros and cons put forth for public instruction. The practice of fraud by persons posing as mediums for the immortals, is a terrible thing, to say the least, especially when it is upheld and defended as genuine in one place, and in another shown up in all its wickedness. It causes perplexity in the public mind and still clearer explanations are necessary to show the world where Spiritualism, per se, and Spiritualists as well, stand. I have felt like praying, and wish to call upon the great family of readers of The Progressive Thinker, to pray also, that this cloud of oppression may be lifted and all ill-inclined ones turn from evil practices and retrieve their past by doing good.

Ministering angels walk the earth by millions, their object being to scatter knowledge and wisdom that are to serve as healing balm for the many ills from which humanity suffers, and to teach as far as possible, the import of eternal life to all people.

Who ever heard of soul culture prior to the advent of Modern Spiritualism? Since then this cult has been taught by angels who tread earth's plane and atmosphere. "They are heaven's true evangels, our burdens help to bear. They stir men's souls to action, cause thought and give reply; it gives a satisfaction which naught else could well supply.

It is the inborn divinity in the human breast which when aroused to action causes the individual to look aloft confidently and whisper "Father." Then let us unite and mingle our prayers with the angels' strong desires, that there may be a great soul awakening, a higher consciousness of all that pertains to unending life, and that all unfortunates, slaves to vices, be touched by the power of truth and purity, that they bring the desires of the flesh into subjection to purity and truth, and do not as now, keep the soul and spirit in bondage to gratify their selfish desires.

We know that millions of mortals are touched by ministering angels. Not all are conscious of this, but they will be as time passes.

It is a great work the immortals are doing, apart from teaching the masses through speedily attuned subjects, the truths of immortal life. They apply their wills and their magnetism to help this world through its present great crisis.

We behold the sub-soil aquiver with seismic attacks. The cosmic force activity in the elements and earth portend great upheavals; the waves of perturbing forces may rise high, floods, fires, wars and disasters may vie with each other for mastery in their ways for effects, yet it is all supremely governed, and only that which the purifying works of this great crisis requires can take place. Through it all the earth and mankind are being raised higher to connect with the higher vibrations of progressive life.

The philosophy of pure Spiritualism is so beautiful. Grandly it explains the symmetrical inter-activity of nature's active principles governed by Supreme Wisdom for purposed results. We behold in the vibratory activities, creation's scheme of co-ordinated, refined, and crude substances. We further behold that this vibratory inter-activity constitutes nature's laboratory through which all refining processes are conducted, and this through form-life mostly. By the indrawn crude substance in food, air, etc., and its refinement through body or human dynamo, bodies, so to say, are merged into souls, for thus souls are from seed germs nurtured and transformed into tangible entities to be on the immortal side of life as the exact counterpart of the mortal form that has been left behind at so-called death. All this we see and wonder that man is so grandly provided for. We further see as we view the vibratory working in space and through all life, that this constitutes the Over-Soul and God's loom in which thought is woven and exchanged. Through vibratory inter-activity all known and existing differentiations have been effected, and many more which have not yet been discovered by man the student.

It is a delight to behold all this on the lines or planes of harmonic action. Now, another view is presented to me right here on the earth plane. Here the mental output and exchange of thought clashes somewhat. The commercial pulse or vibrations are loudest, rising above all else, almost silencing the purer and more gentle vibrations of spiritual import. Everywhere on this plane we behold this, and it is the long foretold commercial age, when the greater portion of earth's dwellers have the mark of the beast, "Golden calf worshiper" upon their foreheads. That is the trend of thought, viz., money. To get and to circulate it is the chief object of all, even those whose minds are to some extent engrossed with religious thought and effort. Now, while in this state, and seeing all this, viz., that the world's brain is chiefly actuated commercially, it solves in a measure, commercial mediumship and mediumistic stratagem as it is, here shown and governed by wily spirits who dominate the mediums on those levels, by the use of the worldly force currents. I also behold that on all these lines mortals are anxious seekers after purely selfish benefits, not after spiritual truths, hence to this demand on the part of the people comes this supply, not for their good, as time will teach them; for nothing short of experience can do so. Therefore let us pray for light, more light to show all these erring ones the true path to eternal homes.

MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

The soul immortal! Why, then, doth the mind
Complain of death? Why not rejoice to find
Herself let loose, and leave this clay behind,
As snakes, whene'er the circling year returns,
Rejoice to cast their skins, or deer their horns?
—Lucretius.

To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little and to spend a little less, to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence, to renounce when that shall be necessary and not be embittered, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation, above all, on the same grim condition to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

A CONVINCING TEST.

A Loving Daughter in Spirit Life Comes With a Message to Her Bereaved Mother.

To the Editor:—Kindly allow me to tell you of my experiences in the field of Spiritual investigation. I wish to to tell you of a most convincing test that came a few years ago.

One of my dearest friends lost her beautiful daughter of eighteen. Her death was sudden and her poor mother almost broken-hearted. They had been chums all the girl's life, and I never knew a mother more devoted than she had been to her girl, her only child. A few weeks after her death, my friend wrote me here from her home in Iowa, telling me of her grief, and inclosing a sealed letter in the one to me. She wrote: "You have faith in spirit return. Please take the sealed letter to one of your mediums and see if you can get one little word of greeting from my Daisy." The rest of the letter was all sorrow and hopelessness.

When I received the letter I was not able, for various reasons, to take it to a medium at once, and so put it in my desk with the resolve to take it as soon as possible. In a day or two after that an acquaintance came in and asked me to go with her to see one of the ladies here whom we both knew to be a genuine medium. But on acount of my work for that day, I could not accompany her. I went to my desk and got the sealed letter from my friend, Mrs. L., and asked my other friend, Mrs. K., to take it with her and see if a message came. But on no account to break the seal, and that I would explain to her when she returned.

She did so, and the medium after holding the letter in her hands a few moments, said: "A sweet young girl comes, rosy, blue-eyed, joyous; looks to be about 18. She says her mother wrote this letter from a small town out of this state, south of it. She was the only child. Her father is a paralytic, and will soon come over to the spirit side. Her mother's grief is terrible, but it will not be so deep when she gets this message."

She gave many other particulars as to her sickness, and spoke of a girl friend who went only a few months before and closed with these words: "Tell my dear mother that when she stood by my coffin and said, 'That is not as Daisy would like to have her dress arranged about the neck,' and she stooped over my body and fixed the lace and flowers about the neck, and in my hands. Tell her I stood at her side and put my arms about her, and tried my best to let her know I was not dead, but living, and well, and my only grief was that her heart was broken, and I not able to let her see me."

I wrote the full account of the medium's words to my friend, and she wrote me that all was as Daisy said, and many of the things she had given were in answer to the questions she had asked in the letter.

I thought this test one of the most convincing that ever came to me, and I wish to say a word to those who are seeking light and proof: Put yourselves in a receptive mood in your own quiet homes, get messages from your dear ones, and if you wish to go to others, do not seek those who advertise by the column in the Sunday papers, like "King Solomon," but go to some one who makes no great display of wonderful powers, but who is close to the veil, and can receive the wireless messages clearly.

Those who claim to work wonders by telling you how to gain the one you love, by killing a frog in the graveyard, in the dark of the moon, burying it in an ant-hill for a week, and then dissecting it, to find the wishbone, which is to be fastened to the clothing of the one you love.

All such things are of the old superstitious times, when all psychic things were mysteries; now all is scientific truth.

"Turn on the light," and let us find it.

You will see that in the above test mind-reading was impossible.

ANNA E. AYER.

The Theological Center of the Universe.

The ancient theologians considered the earth to be a physical center of the universe, and tried to make all men believe accordingly. That it is the theological center of the universe is proven by the numerous infallible dogmas which have been given to a sinful people. The skeptics have considered the earth to be the theogenetic (God-generating) center of the universe. That this idea is preposterous is shown by the physical insignificance of the earth, which even my ignorance of astronomy will not serve to conceal. The earth is one of the smaller planets which revolve around the sun. The sun is one of about 2000 similar suns, forming a cluster known as the sun-cluster. This cluster, if viewed from some distant star, would appear as a faint nebulae. The formation and dissolution of such a nebulae in the immensity of time would be no more than the gathering and dissolvement of a little cloud in our sky. The sun is moving at the rate of 18 miles a second toward the great star Vega. Sirius is two hundred times hotter than the sun and vastly larger. Both are pigmies compared with the great Antares. Some astronomers presume that Alpha Cantauri is over 8,000,000 miles in diameter. This star is 275,000 times as far from us as is the sun, which is only 92,000,000 miles distant. Alpha Centauri is the nearest fixed star. The scale of time is as far above the power of the human intellect as is the scale of distances. The number of stars varies from the old estimate of Draper, of 18,000,000 to the present one, of 1,400,000,000. The number of luminous stars is small in comparison with the myriads of dark stars which move through space, all in accordance with definite and unvarying law.

The laws of light, the elements of matter, and the laws which govern it, furnish the clearest proof of identity throughout the universe. The fundamental law of gravitation and the more recondite laws of light prevail everywhere.

The whole material universe is one in physical and chemical laws, and in its mechanical relations. The same elements, the same forces prevail. This being the case, organized living beings, wherever they may exist in the universe, are essentially the same. That is, they must undergo the same slow, painful intellectual development. Being imperfect, they are therefore sinful and wicked. Out of the myriad of stars there must be many millions of suns very similar in size to our sun. It is fair to presume that each one of the suns has governed at least one inhabited planet. The human mind thus fails to grasp the number of worlds that have been and are to be in the immensity of time. As each one of these worlds has been populated by a sinful race, are we to have the sweet consolation that each one of them has had a Savior in due time? Sadly no; the infallible dogma has been given that God consists of Father, Son and holy Spirit, who ever have been and ever shall be. The sad fact remains that either these millions of sinful worlds have been left to perish without a Savior, or the same Savior has visited them all simultaneously or in rapid succession. Such is the painful dilemma in which the study of astronomy leaves the human mind.

THE VISION OF MISS Z.

A Philosophical Consideration of the Matter.

In a former number of The Progressive Thinker was an article from Mr. Bates, of San Francisco, concerning a vision of the condition of those spirits who passed out in the San Francisco disaster.

I was much interested in it at the time, as it recalled an experience of my own, and the question arose in my mind, whether it could be the actual condition in spirit life of some of those unfortunates, or whether it was not the result of some occult law, as yet to be discovered.

I do not think it a subject for ridicule, and the article by P. A. Jensen in November 17, hit me upon a sensitive chord.

Mrs. Z's vision of the catastrophe was no doubt real, and illustrates some occult law which we shall do well to consider.

My own experience was something similar, although upon a smaller scale.

I was at that time an inmate for the first time at the house of a friend in Ottumwa, Iowa, and was assigned a small room opening off the dining room, as a sleeping apartment.

That night in a half waking vision, I saw an endless procession of people passing through the room. They were of all ages and sizes, some of them pale and wan as with wasting sickness, some passing carelessly, some casting upon me agonized and anxious faces as they passed by.

In the morning at the breakfast table I related my strange dream, as I called it, and was informed that the room had been used as a materializing cabinet by Mr. Mott, when he was in Ottumwa.

Now I am quite certain that experience was not the effect of any imagination upon my part, as I was not aware that Mott had been a visitor at that house; and certainly I was not thinking of him when I retired for the night.

Neither can I believe those people, some of them dear little children, are compelled to pass through that room, night after night, in endless procession as I saw them.

I do not believe they were spirits at all; it was simply a psychic picture photographed upon the walls and furniture of that room by the earnest desire of those spirits who manifested themselves that evening, called there by the presence of the medium.

It is the same principle by which all so-called apparitions of the dead are seen. We cannot believe that the old man dressed in white, is doomed always to sit upon the fence near the spot where he was killed. Or that the innocent young lady is always flying through the rooms where she is seen with streaming hair, and ghastly face pursued by the villain who took her earthly life.

But it is not unreasonable to suppose that the extreme horror which must have possessed her mind, and and the violent rage of her pursuer, might have stamped the material surroundings of the place with the picture, so that it shall never fade away. Just as a psychometrist can read the past history of any event, from a fragment of rock picked up where it occurred.

Mr. Jensen says the the extravagant language used to describe the vision, and the conclusions arrived at about it, preclude anyone from dealing with it seriously.

Now I do not think so; and I do not doubt that the psychic picture of that awful catastrophe, and the agony and horror of the victims in their last moments, will remain indelibly impressed upon the rocky pavements of that city as long as time shall last. But the poor, frightened spirits have long been gathered into the loving arms and happy homes of their own beloved ones beyond the veil.

So, Brother Bates, and dear Miss Z., bless your kind, sympathetic souls, do not worry longer over that terrible vision.

Only take your courage in hand and go forth to do what you can for the living. There are ministering angels upon the other side, who will care for the departed.

INVITATION.

Come when Earth's shadows steal o'er me,
When saddening mists dim my eyes,
Dark is the pathway before me—
I call unto thee in the skies.
Come, come, come, come, from your home in the heavenly blue;
Come, come, come, come, Come while I'm waiting for you.

Come when life's troubles are thronging,
The Star of Hope dimly I see;
Reaches my heart in deep longing,
And sends forth its cry unto thee.
Come, etc.—

Come in the sweet hours of morning,
Ere the day's toils come to me;
When the sun's smiles are adorning
The meadow, the mountain, the sea.
Come, etc.—

Come when night's shadows are falling,
When my spirit is restful and free;
My heart shall in silence be calling,
Sending forth loving thoughts unto thee.
Come, etc.—

Come in the bright hour of gladness,
When the dawn laughs o'er the sea;
Come when my heart droops in sadness
And calls with deep longing for thee.
Come, etc.—

IDEAL ORTHODOX SERMON.

In Which Religion Is Defined From a Liberal, Spiritual Standpoint, by Henry F. Cope.

Work out your own salvation.—Phil. ii:12.

Religion is intensely individualistic. It is a tree that never twice assumes the same form, nor does it even bear precisely the same fruit. It is as varied as humanity, for it depends on each separate human factor for its peculiar expression. The search for uniformity in religion is a search for that which does not exist, and the wish, sometimes expressed by individuals, to have another person's faith is a wish that can never be gratified.

There never yet were two faces precisely alike, for faces are not made by the many in a single mold; they grow out of life; they are shaped and seared and illumined by sensibilities, by emotions, by aspirations, and experiences. The face is the story of the life, peculiar to itself, having no exact duplicate. Yet, with all the variations, there are types of faces, some that you would trust, some that repel, the face of the upward life and the face of the downward trend.

So it is with religion. It is not machine made. It is not a mask laid upon the man; it is not applied from without; it grows from within. True religion springs up in the heart; it is shaped and determined by the experiences, the aspirations, the sources of the life's inspirations. Ideally, it is the summing up of all the good that the life has known; practically, it is the expression in deed and word of that good.

Growing out of the ever varying inherited qualities, experiences and achievements of each life, it is not only never the same in two individuals, it can never be precisely the same on successive days in the same person. It works out into larger being, grows, and develops. It will not be the same in the man as in the boy, nor the same in the boy as in the girl. Some days see mighty changes, but, in the living soul, every day sees some change.

This fact has distressed some introspective souls; they lament lost religious convictions, as a man might lament the boy's outlook, the boy's enthusiasms and star-vaulting ambitions. Or they make fruitless efforts to conform themselves spiritually to the pattern of some other saint. Ideals are inspirations, not patterns; it is folly to grieve if you do not reproduce their precise lines and angles.

To test a man's religion by some rigid mechanical standard is as foolish as to test his vitality by his height. Still greater is the folly of measuring religion by opinions, as though one's health could be determined by his views on the so-called canals on Mars. Religion is simply the life of the soul, the inner being that determines character; it must be measured by its vitality, its strength and purity, and value to the world.

The mechanic will probably continue with impudent ignorance to invade the realm of the soul; he will set up his rule of thumb creed or single doctrine or virtue or emotion and measure all souls by that. Perhaps he is still in so primitive a condition of soul growth that he imagines his crude standard encompasses all possible good. Let the man whose heart is growing ignore the attempt to measure the life by the standard of things or to make all lives in one style.

Let every heart reach after the best; let every soul live out the good it finds within; let every man work out his own salvation, as he must work out his own character, his own self in the world, through the toil and struggle, through the joy and blessing. Through life's multiform experiences we learn to live; through all the strange ways of the soul each one finds salvation, each, in his own way, finds the path to the full life.

The eternal spirit is working in all, and where that spirit is, there is liberty; the infinite breathes through the individual. Religion first gave to man his great thought of his value and his right as a soul; it has worked through the whole leaven of society until we find the law of liberty everywhere prevailing, men working out their lives from within and finding full salvation not in subjection to some code of perfect action but in development of the things within, under the impulse of eternal spiritual laws.

THE CURTAIN FALLS.

Please find a small money order that will help us begin 1907 with the brilliant paper we prize so highly—The Progressive Thinker. Many kind greetings to friends scattered far and near. I am an invalid, caring for an invalid, and we much appreciate letters of cheer, as the curtain is about to fall upon 1906.

"Now, at the end of the flying year,
Year that to-morrow will not be here,
Over our freedom over our thralls,
In the dark and the midnight the curtain falls.

"Over the crimes that blotted and blurred,
Over the wounds of the angry word,
Over the deeds in kindness done,
Over the battles lost and won.
Over the scars of our self-denial,
Over the strength that conquered trial,
Over the fret of our discontent,
Over the ill that we never meant,
Quietly, surely the prompter calls,
Over it swiftly the curtain falls.

"Over the sorrow and over the bliss,
Over the teardrop, over the kiss,
Over the hearts where bright flames leap,
Over the cribs where the babies sleep,
Now in the end of the flying year,
Year that to-morrow will not be here,
Wisely and truly from starry walls,
Silently, downward the curtain falls!"

BAILEY, THE WONDERFUL.

Farther Accounts of the Manifestations Occurring Through His Mediumship, at Melbourne, Australia.

The Spiritualistic seances at the office of Mr. T. W. Stanford, Melbourne, were resumed on the return of the medium, Charles Bailey, from his trip to Europe, previously referred to in the "Sunday Times."

The results have been just as mystifying as they were before; but as the manifestations, on the whole, were in no striking respect dissimilar to those of earlier sittings, they do not call for any lengthy details. To supply them would make this notice appear like a repetition of former contributions on this subject.

Lectures have been given by various 'spirit controls," live birds and other "apports," have mysteriously appeared on the table or in the hand of the medium, and the contention is—as already related—that these phenomena have been due to spirit agency.

The object in writing what follows is to state a fresh fact in connection with this matter, namely, that Mr. T. W. Stanford himself was absent from two of the sittings, yet the results were just as astonishing as they have been while he was present. In an earlier report that gentleman was specially mentioned as having attended every sitting up to that time, but it was pointed out that there was no likelihood of his having given any assistance to the medium in the production of phenomena, as he was a gentleman of means, who was meeting all the expenses of these private demonstrations and had nothing to gain by acting as a "confederate," as some have suggested. Sentimentally he has been exonerated—if the term may be used without offence—because he has been regarded as an earnest inquirer into the mysteries of occultism, a subject on which he has spent thousands of pounds in the past forty years, and is now doing all he can, with the aid of abundant means, to help forward the general knowledge.

But say what we might as to the bonafides of the gentleman named, there are still certain doubters to be dealt with. They say, "But still" this and "It might be" that, and urge that the spending of large sums of money in the cause of occult investigation does not prove anything; and no doubt this is so. But now that it can be recorded that two very successful seances have been held while Mr. Stanford was away on a holiday trip in New South Wales, it may be surmised that the doubters will be willing to acept the statement that he does not exercise any hypnotic control over the medium or assist him in a direct way; at any rate, he could not do so on the two occasions referred to, for he was six or seven hundred miles away at both times.

Naturally the sitters themselves felt some amount of doubt that the meetings would be as successful with Mr. Stanford absent as when he was present; and they were perfectly entitled to entertain such fears, for the reason that he being the host, assumes control of the meetings in a physical sense, just as Dr. Whitcomb" "takes charge" spiritually. Exercising general supervision in this way, and being also a strong magnetic personality, he necessarily is a very considerable force at the meetings. His presence helps "conditions," and when he is away it naturally follows that the "conditions" suffer.

However, there was nothing at the two meetings—September 7, and 14—to indicate a weakness in the "conditions," for the work went on just the same. On the first mentioned date a magnificent address (through Bailey) was given by "Professor Denton," the subject being "God is a Spirit." A beautiful bird, said to be from malay, was "brought." It had a yellow head and beautiful brown markings on the body, and was unlike any bird previously "brought." There was also placed on the table a lump of soft clay with spear heads of flint embedded in it. The spirit control, "Dr. Whitcomb," said shortly afterwards that this "apport" had come from Central America from a pre-historic flint arsenal, and that 3000 of these in all sizes could be brought if desired:

On Sebtember 14, "Dr. Withrow" and "Signor Valetti" controlled the medium, and delivered learned addresses couched in scholarly language, and setting forth instructive opinions on the subjects dealt with. The former spoke on 'Conditions," in the course of which he said: "It has been truly said by other speakers that conditions are necessary for almost everything—for the production of everything about you. To grow corn you must have the requisite conditions—there must be soil, moisture, and light and heat; without these your crops would fail. To take pictures of the human body with a photographic lens you must have the necessary conditions; how much more so, then, when dealing with those finer forces which are round about you and of which you know so little?"

The "apports" were a bird, said to be a mate of the one brought the previous week, spear-heads in clay, and a mango seed from which at a later seance a plant was grown by a Yogi "spirit" in a few minutes after it was placed in a flower-pot filled with ordinary garden soil.—Melbourne Representative of the "Sunday Times."

PEACE.

Behold how fast the light-winged moments fly—
And still we squander time by hour and day;
We reach for things that all beyond us lie,
In winter cry for blossoms of sweet May.
Hold fast the Now; it is the saving wood,
That rescues thee from many a seething wave;
Do, what you do, right now—thy strength renewed,
You'll snatch your feet from bitter Failure's grave,
And turn thy steps on to the upward way.
Do thy good deeds before the day goes round,
Make all the hearts thou canst, all bright and gay—
Thy name shall shine on Mem'ry's sacred mound.
When thou dost good thy heart shall be at ease,
Thy death a feast, thy future shall be peace.

THE WORD RELIGION.

"Human Efforts to Obtain Divine Favors."

Religion is derived from the Latin word Ligo, to bind, prefixed with re, the two meaning rebound, bound over a second time, to make doubly sure that they cannot possibly struggle loose from their impending sacrifice. The word religion is thus derived from the binding of human sacrifices for the bloody altars of Jupiter.

The word was first used to describe the religious worship of Pagans. The origin of the word was certainly ominous of what was pergetrated afterwards through Christian fanatics. So that while the word had a very unenviable application originally, being representative of the most dreadful cruelty, yet it may with propriety be used to signify the highest and noblest aspirations of the human soul as exercised in the religion of Spiritualism, signifying 'Human Efforts to Obtain Divine Favors" for the benefit of humanity, for we all most surely need divine favors, to help us endure the trials of life, especially when our loved ones are translated to the spirit world. Then especially it is that human efforts are employed to obtain divine favors. We pray to be favored with a knowledge of their whereabouts and condition, etc.

The venerable and learned Clement Smith, Topeka, Kansas, defines religion as "Human efforts to obtain Divine favors." He asks the readers of this definition to take it to their chamber and give it careful thought, let it be analyzed and if possible improved. He invited the correspondents of The Progressive Thinker, Tuttle, Loveland, Howe and Hodge, to comment upon it. I am not aware that any of the gentlemen have made any comment upon it. While I do not consider myself as able to discuss this problem as the gentlemen named, I ask to be permitted to give my views on the subject.

Mr. Smith wrote better than he thought. If I understand his desire in rendering such a definition of religion, he wished to make religion appear reproachful, sycophantic, and odious. I confess it does not have that effect on the writer of this. On the contrary I consider his definition very suitable and expressive of what religion is or ought to be.

There are but two ways in which human efforts can be exercised to obtain Divine favors, namely: by prayer or conduct. What is divinity, or what do we mean by divine favors. Divinity not only signifies a Supreme Being, but also applies to celestial spirits. To whom shall we pray for divine favors? To our spirit friends who express themselves as not only willing but anxious to confer Divine favors, as has been demonstrated in many instances of what might be called special providences. Take the well-authenticated case referred to by Epes Sargent, of Capt. Yount, the Californian who dreamed that an emigrant party were perishing 200 miles off in the Carson Valley Pass. He got up an expedition, sent it out at his own expense, and rescued the remnant of a party that had undergone incredible suffering in the snow. Will any intelligent Spiritualist scout the theory that the prayers of the sufferers attracted spirits who made the mind of Capt. Yount their instrument for bringing about their rescue?

Mr. Wallace relates another striking case, that of George Muller of Bristol, who for over forty years depended wholly for his own support and that of his wonderful charities, on answers to prayer. He never asked any one directly or indirectly for a penny. No subscriptions or collections were ever made. Yet from 1830, when he married without any income whatever, he lived and brought up a family and established institutions which increased till over four thousand orphan children were educated and in part supported. Yet he never took a loaf or any other article, on credit even for a day, and during thirty years neither he nor the hundreds of children dependent upon him for their daily food were ever without a regular meal, and his one and only resource was secret prayer.

This ought to be accepted as the result of "Human effort to obtain divine favors." His mediumistic power enabled the divine intelligences to work for him by influencing others to send him money, food and clothes. Muller's religion consisted in doing good, which he was enabled to do by (his) human efforts to secure divine favors.

These illustrations seem to indicate that J. Clement Smith's definition of religion is a very good one. I take it that being religious is no proof that we believe in the biblical account of the creation and fall of man, the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and the vicarious atonement, etc. A person may be very religious and at the same time be very immoral and cruel. But Spiritualism demands that we lead virtuous and pure lives.

I was much surprised at Mrs. Clara Watson, censuring Mr. Wiggin for lashing the Spiritualists, as she calls it, on two occasions at Lily Dale, for not leading spiritual lives and for living down in the miasmatic swamps instead of on the mountain tops. I am glad he did lash them if they needed it; probably they did, if they did not need it, it would do no harm.

A true Spiritualist will endeavor to live in harmony with the exalted principles of Spiritualism, which will be a directing influence on the life and behavior. If he does not, he is simply a Spiritist and lacks spirituality.

IN THE DECLINE.

Religious Periodicals Losing Their Hold in the Present Age of Free Thought.

It was but recently we made note of the marked decay of reverence for ministers of the gospel as such, and of which some of the gentlemen of the the cloth are quite disposed to complain. They are coming more and more to be regarded and judged as ordinary, fallible mortals, having no precedence over others because of their ministerial functions.

And now comes the Chicago Evening Post with a similar line of thought concerning the decline of religious periodicals. The fact is noticeable that, year by year, as time passes and general enlightenment and scientific knowledge extends the religious press takes on more and more the character of the secular press, devotes less space to purely religious matters of thought and more to matters of secular import.

As stated by the Evening Post, in connection with the suspension of an excellent religious quarterly, which should have appealed to the broad-minded, thoughtful members of all denominations, several contemporaries have discoursed on the marked decline of the religious periodical press. One by one the denominational quarterlies have died from the lack of popular support, and only those directly supported by educational institutions or organizations continue to be published, irrespective of the narow circle of readers. How is this phenomena to be explained?

Certainly not by any decline of interest in religious questions. Never was this interest more profound and intense than it is to-day. Dogma has suffered from science and the liberal spirit, but religion in its true sense has not. Ours may be an age of philosophic questioning, but the emphasis is on the "questioning." Earnest, candid thoughtful and acute discussion of theological and metaphysical questions is eagerly read, and by more people than ever before. The modern mind, just because it is more scientific and skeptical, is not satisfied either with blind acceptance of traditional beliefs or with complacent agnosticism. It insists on certainty, or on as much certainty as the human mind can attain in problems so transcendant. There was a time when a dominant school of ethics, the utilitarian, professed entire indifference to religious questions. Of our own time indifference is a charge which no just observer will predicate. We are "strenuous" in thought as well as in practical life.

This being the case, religious periodicals should flourish and grow stronger and more indispensable, rather than decay. But two causes operate steadily against them. The first is that the religious press has not as yet adapted itself to the new conditions of the religious life, and want of adaptation is fatal. Contemporary readers demand perfect freedom of discussion and the presentation of all sides. Iteration and dogmatic assertion, or denial of manifest realities, cannot command respect or even patience. It is absolutely certain that a periodical devoted to the reverent yet frank and searching discussion of various aspects of the religious problem would have a very large circulation and an abiding place in periodical literature.

GOD DISCOVERED.

By Delving Into Ancient History.

"God came from Teman."—B. C. 626 Habakkuk, Bible.

Teman was south from Tyre and Byblus. Teman was the country now called Africa. God came from Africa to Tyre, then to Byblus of Phoenicia.

El was originally the name of the supreme God among all the nations of the East. El was at the head of the Babylonian Pantheon.—Serpent Worship, page 53. Wake.

Jehovah was not merely the God of Israel; as such he was God at once of law and of justice, the basis, the informing principle, and the implied postulate of their national consciousness. The name "Israel" means "El does battle," and Jehovah was the warrior El, after whom the nation styled itself. The camp was, so to speak, at once the cradle in which the nation nursed and the smithy in which it was welded into unity; it was also the primitive sanctuary. There Israel was, and there was Jehovah.—Page 398, Vol. 13, Edition 1901. Ency. Brit.

In Byblus, for which alone we possess some details of the local cult, El was the founder of the cult, and therefore of course had the pre-eminence in religion; and so the Byblian Philo makes El to be the highest God and the other elim or elohim subordinate to him. El is represented as the first to introduce circumcision, and the first who sacrificed an only son by one woman, or a virgin daughter to his supreme God. He travels over all the earth, westward toward the setting sun, and leaves Byblus to his spouse—Baath's—this is meant to explain why she had the chief place in the cult of Byblus; her male companion, Elium, Shadid, is conceived as her youthful lover, and El is transformed into a hostile God, who kills Shadid with his sword. A son of El was born beyond the Euphrates, and perhaps therefore connected with the Babylonian fish-gods. Thus we find God Jehovah to have been a man even as our Washington was a man.

It was possible and probable that El was one of those ancient men who made great fame for themselves by starting west along path of sun, moon or star and to keep going west—or going east—from the starting point until they arrived again at place of starting, as in the case of El—perhaps—who traveled west and west till he arrived again in Byblus. This feat of traveling was possible to men called gods 10,000 years ago, as it is possible for our James M. Peebles, M. D., Ph. D., A. M., to have done three times before the year 1906, A. D.

Thus God is discovered to the searching historian. God of the Bible was a man, surely, as George Washington was a man. In the days of Abram until B. C., 397, El—God Jehovah was a spirit God, commonly called a chemist among Spiritualists in America during fifty years before year 1906 A. D., even as we do in Boston, U. S. A.

Maspero's great work of year 1897 tells me much about El—Jehovah God—a man at Byblus in Phoenicia.

History of the English Bible.

It is not enough to say of the Rhemish version that it retains all the corruptions, errors, and interpolations of the Vulgate. It was not the Latin text of Jerome which the Rhemish translators adopted as their standard; though even that, in Jerome's own opinion, was imperfect; but it was a text which, during a long course of ages, had gradually become more and more corrupt, until the Council of Trent was forced tacitly to acknowledge its defects.

Yet, with a strange disregard alike to criticism and history, the translators say that the Latin they adopt "is not only better than all other Latin translations, but than the Greek text itself in those places where they disagree." The language of the Rhemish version is barbarous, many of its words are unintelligible to ordinary readers, and many of its renderings grossly erroneous. A few examples will suffice to establish these statements:

Heb. xi:21, "And adored the top of his rod"; Rev. ii:21, "And I gave her time that she might do penance"; Rev. vi:11, "And white stoles were given, to every one of them one"; Phil. ii:7, "And he exinanited himself"; Gal. v: 4, "You are evacuated from Christ"; Eph.. vi:12, "Against the rectors of the world of this darkness, against the spirituals of wickedness in the celestials"; I. Tim. vi:20, "O Timothee, keep the depositum"; Heb. xiii:16, 17, "and beneficence and communication do not forget; for with such hostes God is promerited. Obey your Prelates, and be subject to them"; Rom. viii:18, "For I think that the passions of this time are not condigne to the glorie to come that shall be revealed in us"; I. Cor. v. 7, "Purge the old leaven, that you may be a new paste, as you are azymes. For our Pasche, Christ, is immolated."

What possible meaning could ordinary readers extract from such language? It is only too evident that the version was made rather to cloak than to reveal the meaning of Scripture. Many single terms are so rendered in the text, and so interpreted in the notes, as to pervert the plain sense. One great object the translators had in view evidently was, to propagate the false and pernicious dogmas of popery, by comments which have been well described as "a mass of bigotry, sophistry and unfairness."

In the year 1609 a version of the Old Testament, made from the Vulgate, and similar in character to the Rhemish translation of the New, was published by the authorities of the Roman Catholic church at Douay. An example or two will best show in what style the translation was made. Psalm lvii:10, "Before your thorns did understand the old briar; as living so in wrath he swalloweth them." Isaiah ix:6, "For a little child is born to us and a son is given to us, and principality is made upon his shoulder." Dan. ix:18, "For neither in our justifications do we prostrate prayers before thy face, but in thy many commiserations." Even thoughtful Roman Catholic scholars have in some cases shown their disapproval of this crude and barbarous translation, by quoting from the Authorized Version in preference.

Soon after the accession of James I. to the throne, a conference of the leading clergy was held at Hampton Court (in January, 1604) "for the determining of things pretending to be amiss in the Church;" and it was there agreed, on the suggestion apparently of Dr. Reynolds, president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, that a new version of the Bible should be prepared under the supervision of the representatives of church and state.

The king after due inquiry on the part of the prelates of the church, and the heads of the two universities, was advised to nominate fifty-four of the first scholars of the kingdom to the work. The list was completed and ratified on June 30, 1604. The nominations appear to have been made without regard to sect or party, and solely on the ground of eminent qualifications.

The higher church party had their representatives in L. Andrews, Barlowe, and Ravis; those of more moderate views, and semi-Puritan tendency, had their in Reynolds, Chaderton (or Chatterton) and Lively; while the learned, independent of any party were represented by such men as Saville, de Saravia, and Bedwell. Canon Westcott's estimate of the staff of revisers is just: "Of these scholars," he says, "many (as Andrews, Overall, Saville and Reynolds) have obtained an enduring reputation apart from this common work in which they were associated.

Others, whose names are less familiar, were distinguished for special acquirements requisite for their task. Lively, Spalding, King, and Byng were successively professors of Hebrew at Cambridge, and Harding and Kilbye at Oxford. Harmer and Perin were professors of Greek at Oxford, and Downes at Cambridge; Bedwell was the most distinguished Arabic scholar of the time. Saravia was an accomplished modern linguist: Thompson (Camb.), Chatterton, Smith, and Boys were equally distinguished for their knowledge of ancient languages."

The competency of such men for the work assigned to them no scholar will question. Had the critical apparatus we now possess been in their hands, so as to enable them to elaborate a pure Hebrew and Greek text, and to apply to its elucidation all the resources of grammar and philology, ere they proceeded to revise the English, we should have inherited from them a version which probably never could have been surpassed. In addition to scholarship, they had the indispensable qualification of being deeply imbued with the spirit of the sacred writers. They were not more eminent for learning than for piety.

Before commencing their labors they received a code of instructions in substance as follows:

1. The Bishops' Bible to form the basis, and to be as little altered as the originals would permit.

2. The proper names to be retained as near as possible.

3. The old ecclesiastical words such as church (instead of congregation) to be kept.

4. When a word had different meanings, that was to be kept which best accorded with the use of the Fathers, the propriety of the place, and the analogy of faith.

5. The division of chapters to remain.

6. No marginal notes to be affixed, except for the explanation of Hebrew and Greek words.

8. Every man of each company first to translate or revise all given to that company; then the company to meet and decide what should stand.

Each section thus revised to be be sent to each of the other companies for examination.

10. Any company, upon examination of the section so sent, objecting to words or phrases, to note them and send them back with their reasons for objecting. If not accepted, the disputed passages to be reserved for a general meeting of the leading translators.

11. When any place of special obscurity is doubted of, men of known learning, wherever found, to be consulted.

12. Bishops and clergy to be informed of the proposed work, and all such persons as are noted for learning to be requested to forward hints or suggestions to the translators.

14. The following translations to be used, when they agree better with the original than the Bishops' Bible: 1. Tyndale's; 2. Matthew's; 3. Coverdale's; 4. Whitchurch's (The Great Bible); 5. The Genevan.

Of the fifty-four scholars originally nominated, only forty-seven undertook the task. They were divided into six classes, and were appointed to sit—two classes at Westminster, two at Oxford, and two at Cambridge. The presidents, classes, and arrangement of books were as follows:

1. Dr. Lancelot Andrews, Dean of Westminster, afterwards successively Bishop of Chichester, Ely and Winchester, a profound linguist. To this company, ten in number, were assigned the books of Genesis to II. Kings. 2. Dr. William Barlowe, Dean of Chester, afterwards Bishop of Rochester and Lincoln. This company numbered seven in all, and revised Romans to Jude. Oxford. 1. Dr. John Harding, Regius Professor of Hebrew, afterward's President of Magdalen College. This company consisted of seven men, and revised Isaiah to Malachi. 2. Dr. Thomas Ravis, Dean of Christ Church, afterwards successively Bishop of Gloucester and London. In this company were Dr. Peryn, Professer of Greek, Dr. Harmer, ex-professor, and five others. To it were assigned Matthew to Acast, and the Book of Revelation. Cambridge. 1. Edward Lively, Regius Professor of Hebrew. He died in 1605. His place was probably taken by Dr. R. Spalding, who succeeded him in the professorship. To this company, eight in number, were assigned I. Chronicles to Ecclesiastes. 2. Dr. John Duport, Master of Jesus College. In this company was the celebrated scholar John Boys, or Bois, and five others; to it was assigned the Apocrypha.

When the work had begun it was found necessary to add an additional rule, to the effect that "three or four of the most ancient and grave divines in either of the Universities, not employed in translating, be assigned by the vice-chancellor, upon conference with the rest of the heads, to be overseers of the translations, as well Hebrew as Greek, for the better observation of the fourth rule.

All the arrangements were completed in 1604, and many of those nominated appear to have entered immediately upon their duties with praiseworthy ardor; but the classes were not called together, and the formal work of translation and revision was not commenced till 1607, and it was not completed till 1610. In the latter year three copies of the entire Scriptures, revised by each class, were sent to London—one from Westminster, one from Oxford, and one from Cambridge. Here a committee of six delegates, two from each place where the classes met, reviewed, revised, and arranged the whole materials. Among them were Boys and Downes, whose qualifications for such a task were pre-eminent. It appears that six others were added to the delegates, doubtless to consult with and assist them; but their names are not known. They labored during nine months, meeting in Stationers' Hall, and receiving for their support a small weekly pension.

The manuscript, revised and completed by them, was handed to Dr. Miles Smith, who aided by Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, prepared it for the press, and corrected the proofs. Smith was a profound Oriental scholar and discharged his duties with singular ability. He was commissioned to write the Preface and he has given us in it after a short history and defence of former versions a very clear and satisfactory account of the mode in which the whole work was conducted and the time and pains expended upon it.

Unfortunately, while the fulsome dedication to King James is retained in our Bibles, this important preface is generally omitted. Though somewhat quaint and pedantic, it contains a vast mass of interesting information, and throws a clear light on some of the peculiarities of our version. At length, in 1611, the first edition of The Authorized Version was published in one large black-letter folio, "imprinted at London by Robert Barker."

As the manner in which it was prepared and the materials made use of must always be subjects of special interest to the student of Biblical literature and to the general public, a brief account of them will now be given.

Dr. Smith says in his Preface: "Truly we never thought from the beginning that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make a bad one a good one; but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against—that hath been our endeavor, that our mark."

The translators acknowledged the general faithfulness and substantial accuracy of the versions of Tyndale and Coverdale, and of the revised editions made by the English Bishops and the Genevan exiles. They had in these a solid basis; and their task was to examine, collate, and critically revise, so as to bring the version into closer and fuller conformity with the originals.

With what care and labor they accomplished this task Dr. Smith further indicates: "Neither did we run over the work with that posting haste that the Septuagint did, if that be true which is reported of them, that they finished it in seventy-two days; neither were we barred or hindered from going over it again, having once done it. * * None of these things; the work hath not been huddled up in seventy-two days, but hath cost the workmen the pains of twice seven times seventy-two days, and more."

The entire time spent upon it was about seven years. Three years, 1604-1607, were occupied in preliminary arrangements and individual investigation on the part of the fifty-four scholars nominated, and numerous others whom they consulted. Three years more were occupied in the systematic and united work of the six classes.

Each member of each class translated all the books entrusted to the class; then the whole class met, and, after calm and thorough revision, adopted a common text; then that text was transmitted in succession to each of the other classes for revision; then a text of the whole Bible, approved by the entire six classes, was submitted to the final revision of six elected delegates, with six consulting assistants, and their approved manuscript was placed in the skillful hands of Dr. Smith finally to examine and prepare it for the press.

A more complete system could not have been invented. When we consider the varied learning of the translators as linguists, naturalists, antiquarians, historians—when we consider the time occupied and the repeated revision of the work by individuals, by classes, and by the united body—we cannot wonder that the result was so eminently satisfactory.

MATTERS SPIRITUAL.

A Devout Spiritualist Seems to Be In a Critical Mood, and Gives His Views of the Situation.

To read The Progressive Thinker is truly a liberal education, and needs a charity which comes near being God-like. In its columns all sorts of minds show themselves, in weakness and in strength, unconsciously proving the necessity for a teacher or teachers who shall be authoritative above all else, and who shall lay down the law for such to obey.

For many years past I have been impressed with the thought that an enlightened despotism was the best form of government for the most of us; but where to find such a despot was the rub. We need a ruler who knows what is best for each one, and who is capable of asserting authority.

Reading Judge Lindsey's article on "When Girls Go Wrong," one must own that it strikes at the root of the evil. What right have we to expect that the rising generation can be any better than its predecessors when its parents are not only ignorant of right principles, but are tainted morally and physically? Yet every obstacle to a knowledge of physiology and the laws of life is thrown in the way of those who would have them properly taught, not only to the young but to their parents.

Looking at it simply as a Spiritualist—that is, from the ethical side of it—what good is Spiritualism to the world if it does not benefit the world?

We have long accounts of wonderful phenomena, tests which should be sufficient to convince the most skeptical, but what is the use of them?

As Paul McArthur says, "He was a narrow, credulous bigot before he became a Spiritualist; he has not changed his disposition with his belief."

Now, where is the difference in conversion to Christianity or Spiritualism, if there is no change in the MAN? What better is he or the world in which he moves for the most wonderful phenomena, if he continues to lie and steal, and "do others before they can do him?" Is that what we expect when a man or woman is converted? And if the parents do not realize any change of heart, what can we expect from the generations to come?

Lately we have had several articles from Dr. Caird and others with regard to a fraternal order, and of course opposition has been voiced also. As a member in the past, of several fraternal orders, I know that no order, no matter how well calculated its teachings may be to uplift its members, can rise any higher than its members will allow it to rise. Under the head of Good of the order, I have known members to tell dirty stories, while the announcement of that order of business was the signal for breaking loose from the previous restraint of law and order; yet the poorest of those societies did some good, for there were always some members who tried to live up to their obligation as they understood it, even though the average member consider it rightly. It is not the word of the obligation which is binding, but the spirit in which it is received. The oath is binding on an honest man, but not all who join are honest.

I have always felt the necessity of a "School of the prophets"—a school for teaching. If we look around us to-day at the average circle, we find a state of affairs which is depressing. It is very much so when we hear "our noble philosophy" exploited by a medium who has no knowledge of philosophy at all, and whose actions are not conducive to respect for the belief of which he or she is a member.

It is impossible to expect the higher teachings in the ordinary promiscuous circle, where the whisky-drinker and tobacco-smoker and chewer are conspicuous. How few understand that cleanliness of body and purity of mind are necessary to communion with angels, but expect the spirits of their friends to come into a foul atmosphere to commune with them.

Spiritualism as commonly presented to the public deals too little with the proper preparation of the sitters, or the attitude of an audience. Few mediums seem to understand that the best of conditions are none too good, but are too thankful to get an audience, to be particular as to the quality of it.

I can understand that we are all anxious to spread the light according to the best of our understanding, but in these days of electric lighting it would seem that the man who goes around with a tallow candle, isn't doing much illuminating. What can we do to get better lights?

It is worth while trying an inner circle where it will cost something to join—not necessarily a money cost, but where the requisite of admission would be not only willingness to learn more of the spiritual laws which govern our physical necessities, but fitness and ability would be considered.

Mistakes will be made, without a doubt. We are certain to have some rise up on their hind legs and declare that they are the only infallible judges, and the only ones capable of wielding the necessary authority.

Perhaps a good plan would be to make a large number of small bodies, and let them work out their own salvation; then let the leaders of these bodies meet in a kind of supervisory capacity to discuss matters; anyway so as to prevent theocratic usurpation and keep the individual interest alive.

If such an individual interest can be aroused, and a progressive education imparted, it will soon manifest in the increased interest shown in the common good, and prove that Spiritualism rightly understood is not simply a matter of getting tests, which no longer prove anything curious, but shows the proper way to live, and the why and wherefore of life?

Spiritualists need to wake up and utilize the best there is in their communion. They are not benefited to any great extent by communion with earth-bound spirits, and it is very doubtful if they can benefit them in return under the present conditions. The conditions must be improved.

A Gentle Criticism.

With Answers to a Great Number of Questions.

While reperusing back numbers of The Progressive Thinker, among which is the issue of July 28, 1906, there came under my notice what at first seemed to be a forcibly written article over the signature of Ithurial Spear of Seattle, Wash. It is said, "He is a devout believer in Spirit return, but skeptical in certain directions." Surely, it is his right, in both claims. But, for certain reasons I desire to offer a few thoughts for the columns of The Progressive Thinker, relative to said article.

Not that I make any great pretensions to scholarship, for such would not be apropos in my case. But I am puzzled to know how one so well versed in matters of a spiritual nature as he would claim, with other leading branches of science, can make such inapt statements as some of his appear to be; touching points seemingly mysterious to him, which, to the average experienced mind are easy of comprehension. Allow me to say right here, that in his effort, showing his opponent (whoever he may be) the impossibility of producing "something out of nothing," Brother S. proved himself a thinker. For, as he clearly set forth in his arguments, only "out of something, something comes." That "the unit one stands forth indestructible, unchangeable, eternal." That is to say, it must ever be present when and where results or phenomena occur. He also speaks an inevitable truth when referring to the process of evolving worlds, or anything therein, e. g., a tree, a man, etc., as being of slow growth or development. For, as he states, years are required to draw into visibility the results of volitional mentation. Also that it takes millions of atoms, and years to visualize a material piece of coral, i. e., in Nature's evolving processes.

Yes, in all this, Brother S. has shown himself a man of erudition. But to me, it seems that he lost sight of both his subject and his learning when he comes to apply his knowledge to the materializing phase of spirit phenomena; and writes as quoting some one as saying, "Out of nothing a dozen spirit forms appear," and that, "at a second's notice." He continues: "The unit is forgotten or broken into fragments, all chemical laws are trampled under foot, all common sense is thrown to the winds." He winds up this nightmare fabric by saying, "No sane person ever yet saw, nor will he ever see ten or a dozen forms come out of nothing into the objective."

Now with all due deference to the brother's much learning, he himself, in this instance, is the one who is throwing his otherwise good sense to the winds. For who that is educated, and is familiarized with the tenets of Spiritualism, ever claimed for a moment, that ten or a dozen spirit forms came out of nothing into the objective? Or even one that ever appeared with blood and bones, as we understand the terms, to be used as brackets and life supplies to the spirit during its brief display in a materialized form?

I know of one in high position who says he has heard such expressions often used. Well, possibly so, but I fear that he was unlucky in forming his associates and acquaintances. A fool may have so said, but in such case, Solomon's instructions would be apropos—"Answer not a fool," etc.

I, in my many years' experience in Spiritualism, have seen, handled and conversed "face to face as a man speaketh to his friend," with many hundreds of spirits in their re-materialized forms; said forms having been, no doubt, visualized or brought into visibility out of the unseen state, and that, too, according to chemical or natural law. Probably the pitch of vibration had much to do in the process of procuring said results, the whole being intelligently governed by the will of master spirit chemists. But never even thought they came "out of nothing," much less expressed it so. Nor have I ever seen so much as one corpuscle of blood, or single bone, nor do I believe any Spiritualist ever claimed such. But, I will say that the visible, tangible substance with which the spirit was re-clothed for the time being, approximated in appearance so closely that which we call flesh, it would require surgical action to distinguish the difference between it and my own flesh, or to find a better word by which to express it.

But admitting the fact that it required untold ages for the universe to roll out of the invisible into the objective; and that millions of atoms are required to render a small part of an object visualized, originally, etc., all of which is correct, Brother S. concedes the fact that spirits do return. And though it did take millions of years for them to make their first journey to earth, as man, I would ask him if he thinks it takes them as long a time to come in their second appearing? For touching this point he says, "Hence it follows that instantaneous production of hundreds of pounds," etc., "is contrary to mathematics—the only exact science."

Here, especially, does he "trample the laws of chemistry under foot, and throw common sense to the winds." for certainly spirits were spirits when on their first trip, and they are no more, nor less spirits now. So, then, if they do "return," and they do, and I take it for granted that Brother S. knows it; and evident to him, as it is to me, they are not long about it, conditions being apropos. So where, I ask, is the propriety and good sense in his fulminations that "instantaneous productions" are contrary to Nature's laws? For hundreds of spirits are known to appear within very few moments at most, and on their returning materialized, are weighable, notwithstanding Brother Tuttle to the contrary. Though, he, of late, has been forced to admit that the forms increase in weight as they proceed from the ethereal to the material." And what though, "Time and change are required by the chemist in his laboratory with his retort, crucibles and alembics at his command to draw forth from invisibility any object that he desires, provided its constituents are in the atmosphere around him, and though he has to exercise patience and more surely," etc., as Brother S. claims. Does he suppose that there are no chemists "over there"? Or rather, doesn't he know there are? and that they being in the realm of causation, and still under the law of progression, that they have better opportunities for bringing out their chemical results. Then, why all this palaver about materialization? It took the gods of the universe a long time to bring the old world out of its fiery mists down to the point of zero; but now one can burn with heat at the noon hour, and freeze out before sunset. Why, the ice cream man can produce ice in a very few moments, and even the gods cause snow at quick intervals now. Quite a change, isn't there?

Brother S. has forgotten that we live under the law of progression. He didn't think, perhaps, that the air still contains elements, and likely it never entered into his consciousness that matter itself becomes humanized, so to speak, by being in organic touch with the human spirit, and, therefore, a little of the aura from the body of the sensitive who is still in closer touch with the bodies of those returning from spirit realms. Hence with the qualities furnished by the atmosphere, and that of the medium, with a little manipulation by the master chemists "over there," thus changing the pitch or rate of vibration to suit purposes, why, the spirit wishing to objectify or to show itself to mortals, could readily take upon itself a thin coat of said prepared aura, not "blood and bones," and lo! the work is done. This is not only logically true, but if permissible, I will say it is fact, as I have seen such phenomena produced, when visiting some of the spirit zones, minus the shell.

But it may be, I write prematurely. For Brother S. has, in his article, admitted the truth of materialization, only as a result obtained through the evolutionary processes in nature. Possibly he has never personally witnessed any of the materializing phases of spirit phenomena. If this be so, then he is not in court, at all. He cannot testify to either its pros or cons.

Again Brother S. while conceding the fact that enough phenomena have been given to demonstrate the truth of Immortality, he seems to be both puzzled and displeased at contradictory statements made by the communicating intelligences, etc. Had he forgotten that he had just stated, almost in the last breath, that "Life is life, reason is reason, and common sense is common sense," everywhere. Certainly he knows there are contradictions galore in mortal life; and life is life beyond the divide. Spiritualism teaches that the mere act of transition from one locality to another makes no change in point of characteristics. What else could he expect, from a common sense view of the matter, but that a liar here will be a liar there, until he grows into a more truthful state of mentation?

Again, a spirit in a lower zone could not speak accurately of the topography and customs of life in a zone much higher than the one occupied by himself. All this will account for apparent discrepancies we get from spirit communicators. If this isn't enough to reconcile Brother S. and other grumblers, then let him take a sensible glance at his own brain construction, touching its functions as relates to brain organs, singly, in groups, or in its grander divisions, also its adaptability to thought, and susceptibility of impressions per se or by mental or spirit telegraphy; and I am quite sure that he will find ample grounds from which to reason up to the cause or causes that give rise to the seemingly untruths, in nearly all instances that give trouble to poor mortals.

But should still more be required, then take into account the influences of environments such as are uncontrollable by individual effort, whether in or out the body, and one will have in one's possession the key that will unlock the portals that open into nature's arcana. Once man learns to use said key according to rules of logic and humane emotion, there will be less of quarreling, back-biting, fraud accusation, in our spiritual ranks, and the proper substitute—Education, will be introduced everywhere.

From the last point noted in Bro. S's article; even fifty questions are asked by him, for what reason, I confess I do not know, unless it be for spleen ventilation.

For, with one or two exceptions, all are answerable with a little common sense thinking. I would fain pass them all by without comment, but one or two things more I wish to say for the good of the cause we all love so dearly. As all these fifty questions refer to the why spirits do this, and why they don't do that, I will try to answer one or either side the line of queries.

First, as to why spirits return and communicate with mortals, I would say, (1), because they are human beings, socially, intellectually, and morally, to all intents and purposes, minus the crude body. This being true, they take interest in the common welfare of their kindred here below. Especially is this true in point of educating man in relation to the all-important truth of his immortality. For without this knowledge, he knows comparatively but little of life and its possibilities, hence the incentives for progress and right living are vastly curtailed. Secondly, to teach him the fundamental truths or principles of the Universal Brotherhood of Man; and that if he would enjoy life with all its rightful belongings, he, in all dealings with mankind, whether educationally, politically, religiously or otherwise, must work to make the truth of the Brotherhood a thing of practicality. This is why the learned, educated master spirits visit and revisit our plane.

Now as to little children, the "Maudies" and "Bessies," and yet others, who, Brother S. seems to think, had better be kept away back, etc., etc., these are yet only in the social degree of life's unfoldments; and they come (1), because they have a right to come; (2) because with many of them, their parents are here, or their little brothers and sisters are here, and they want to see them, and vice versa, those here hold them in sweet remembrance and want them to come. Their angel guardians who have them in charge, respectively, bring them because in so doing, it affords them better opportunities for educating them in these, their childhood lessons; and altogether, it sweetens life both here and there. Isn't this reason enough?

Now, in closing this hurriedly-written friendly criticism, I want to say, if I have made use of any language seemingly harsh; it is because similar phraseology from the pen of Brother Spear inspired me to it. And hoping that good may result from the reading and reflecting on both papers, I subscribe myself, fraternally,

A Pathetic Letter

In Which the Venerable Doctor A. B. Spinney Vividly Portrays the Death of His Beloved Wife, and the Lesson Derived Therefrom.

To the Editor:—It is a little late to write you some of the things I am about to, but I have been unable to get a competent stenographer until now, so I trust you will publish the following article which contains a notice of the transition of my beloved wife, Tessora Wade Spinney, age nearly 36 years, to a higher life. Sunday, Dec. 9th, Dr. Julia M. Walton of Jachson, gave a funeral discourse. Her prayer was one of the most remarkable I have ever listened to, and her sermon even more remarkable. It was strong, argumentative and forcible at every point. She read portions from the first Corinthians, fifteenth chapter, 12, 13, and 14 verses, and then from the thirty-fifth verse.

She spoke from the heretic Crapsey's views on the resurrection, and fully commended him for his moral courage in taking our views thereof. She proved by Paul's words also that we were sown a natural and raised a spiritual body. She spoke of each star being its own glory—so with every spirit escaped from the natural body. But the most wonderful part of her discourse was the fact that my departed wife took control of her and spoke words that could have come from no one else, to every member of my household; also to her friends, and spoke of a bedridden patient up stairs that Mrs. Walton knew nothing of; and words to me which I alone understood and comprehended.

My wife's strong love and desire for motherhood, which cost her her life, and gave me a beautiful babe to care for, bless and cheer me in my old age, was so strong a point in her nature that in her controlling Mrs. Walton she said the bliss of holding her child twice to her breast when she was fully conscious, compensated her for all the months' of suffering and for the giving up her life to produce a child of perfect love and of a perfect marriage of harmony. She said it seemed strange to her how any mother could ignore the blessing of motherhood or shirk the responsibility of maternity, and while she deeply grieved over the sadness put upon me to leave me to walk for a few years alone, and while she was deprived of the joy of watching the little one in the earthly form, and see it grow and mature under her ministrations, yet she knew that all her admonitions and advice to me in the selection of the right ones to bring her child up, should I go before she did, lifted this pall of darkness.

She did not regret one step of her marriage, nor one pang of her suffering that had given her the wonderful bliss of bearing to the world this perfect, sweet, holy child.

There were those in the audience whom she knew as well as myself, had shirked the responsibility of motherhood; had used the modern devices of sending unborn infants to the spirit world, and it seemed to me as though her words spoken with a burning flame of inspiration from the other side of life, ought to be a lesson that would strengthen them in the future.

She turned to those patients who were inmates of my hospital which the world calls "fallen," and said that in the land to which she had gone, there were no fallen, and she begged myself and nurses to go on with our ministrations of love and tenderness, and carry forth the work so nobly and successfully carried on—not for money, but for the redemption of womanhood, and the teaching of the true ideas of social life, which so few women dared to do.

At the close of the services the beautiful babe in her little willow basket cradle was given a Lilly Christening, the flower of all others that my wife loved, and the inspired words of Dr. Walton brought the tears to every eye in the audience. I held this beautiful child in my arms, and before earthly witnesses, invisible witnesses, and the arisen one, I promised to keep my life pure and worthy of that child's love and confidence, and to do all in my power while I lived to unfold its life, educate and develop and make the child all that she dreamed it should be.

No one can half imagine my loss. She first came to me as a friend; next as a wise counselor; later she took the place in my business affairs, and in sympathy with me, that my daughter had occupied, but who had given her life to another. Then, in the years that I was alone without the companionship of a wife, and before I could make her my wife, she became a companion, and lastly, she became a wife and partner in all the fullness of the meaning of these two words. Step by step our lives drew closer and closer to each other till she absorbed all my life, soul and being, and I absorbed and filled completely all her life and being. This perfect union; this perfect mateship, was only for ten months and three days. In these months I realized all that I had ever dreamed, that marriage should be all that I dared to picture to the world in lecturing on marriage.

Over and over again she told me that I gave her all the true joy she ever knew, and that should she pass out before I did, to remember in a letter she wrote me only a few weeks ago that her marriage had not been disappointment, but had been beyond all her expectations of all she had ever dared to hope, and she wished this letter kept, that I might let her relatives and friends know how exalted, true, pure, and holy our marriage had been.

What the little one may prove to be, I know not, but I do know this, that if love and tenderness, and the yearning of two hearts for one object and aim can develop a perfect child, ours must be that.

When she first was so suddenly called to leave me I was paralyzed. I did not know what to do, how to act, or how to go on, and could I have selfishly had my choice, and no belief in future life, I fear I should have been cowardly and severed the thread, but I looked on the face of the dear little one. I thought of all the years experience that had been mine, that the world needed; the creed-bound I might unfetter, and the ignorance in our ranks, the frauds and wickedness among Spiritualists that needed exposing, and I said, "I will live. I will live to strike harder blows for truth, make greater efforts for the right, do more to enlighten and uplift Spiritualism than ever before."

My wife died in my arms, breathing her life out as sweetly as one going to sleep. I went to my room. I felt her weak and weary spirit as close to me as it ever was in the world. I slept for hours, and when I arose from that sleep of exhaustion I felt her with me. More than half of the time since then I have felt her spiritual presence, and unnumbered times her wise counsel and wonderful perception of things that aided me in reorganizing my business, making plans for the future, and going forward with my work for humanity.

I know at last that no philosophy in the world can strengthen and sustain, bear up and hold up a human being in the hour of disaster as the knowledge of spiritual laws, the true unfoldment of our spiritual senses and gifts.

I shall carry on my sanitarium work as in the past, but each week I intend to write some article on these subjects for the spiritual press. I also offer any spiritual society in Michigan my services for simply my railroad expenses any Sunday in the coming year, or any spiritual camp in Michigan. My dates must be made many months ahead in order to carry on my business.

I am going to work as soon as possible and write for the press three books. One will be, "Why I Am a Spiritualist, what made me a Spiritualist, and what Spiritualism means to me."

The book will contain a history of my whole life religiously from the time I was fourteen years of age, and will contain lectures upon every phase of the spiritual philosophy. I think it will be a book of about five hundred pages. As I have no worldly goods, having lost $20,000 three years ago, I shall depend upon friends sending me their names, promising to take copies of these books. They will be $1.00 a copy, cloth bound; 50 cents in paper. The other book will be all that I have previously written and published on marriage, with the history of my whole life, socially, my experience as a magnetic healer, the mistakes that came through mistaken ideas of healing in our ranks; the right and wrong uses of friendship; the history and conditions of my first marriage, and the mistaken idea that people should try to live together who are incompatible to each other, and lastly, the description of my last marriage, and proof of the same, and selections from letters passed between my wife and I for six years, in which time we never missed writing once a day. This book will be my idea of the whole social question, and the the proper way to redeem the whole human race prom prostitution, legal and illegal, and the true ideas of generation instead of regeneration. The other book will be, "Success in Life or how to Win," giving a whole history of my life, its early struggles for an education; my failings and what caused them; my courage and perseverance in hours of the most abject darkness.

It will be a book to stimulate every boy or girl to carry out their ideals, to live for a purpose, to become self-reliant, to never give up and attempt to prove that fear and worry kill the human race, and not overwork.

INDIANA STATE ASSOCIATION.

It Holds a Successful Meeting at Richmond.

The Indiana State Association held a five days' meeting at Richmond from the 19th to 23rd of December, inclusive, with E. W. Sprague and Will J. Erwood as workers. Owing to the fact that it was so near the holidays, the crowds were not so large as they would have been otherwise, but we never had more attentive and appreciative audiences.

Mr. Erwood "held the fort" alone for the first two days and a half, as Mr. Sprague did not arrive till Friday afternoon, and he never did better work; his lectures were uplifting, and his messages clear and convincing. It is needless to say that Brother Sprague was good, for he is always good. Out of this series of meetings we organized a society of 23 members and they have taken out a charter from the state association, and bid fair to do good work.

One of the ministers of the city attended several of our meetings and at the close of the last one on Sunday night, after hearing Brother Sprague's splendid discourse, he came to the vice-president and gave him a quarter for one of our song-books. We used Mattie E. Hull's book.

The officers of the new society are: President, R. S. Ashe; vice-president, Geo. W. Schepman; secretary, Mrs. Mary J. Pickett; treasurer, Miss Netta M. Pickett; trustees, Mrs. Emma Schepman, Mrs. Cora Rush and James Heath.

ATROCITIES IN THE CONGO.

They Are Endorsed by an Eminent Catholic, Cardinal Gibbons.

A surprising feature of a late news report is the statement of Cardinal Gibbons upholding the methods of government employed by the unspeakable King Leopold of Belgium in the Congo country, and incidentally eulogizing this monarch as a wise ruler. * * *

We recall a picture—veritable since it was from a photograph, taken by missionaries upon the ground, and printed in a standard magazine—in which hapless natives were shown in various conditions of mutilation, now a hand gone, then an arm to the elbow; again with ears, fingers, toes or feet severed from the body, the work of the soldiers, who were permitted, if not commissioned, to commit these barbarities as a penalty for not bringing in rubber to meet the insatiable demand of the King's Rubber company, and as a warning of what others might expect who failed to render the required tribute to this most atrocious of rulers. Accompanying the picture were statements of reputable missionaries verifying the stories that these shocking mutilations illustrated, and giving details concerning the treatment of native women and children, men and boys, that were barbarous in the extreme.

This is only one of a number of statements which go to show that Leopold's rule in the Congo Free State—mockingly so-called—is a blot upon civilization, a sickening record of greed, debauchery, mutilation and death.—Portland Oregonian.

The Ghost Wreck of the Rio Grande.

Charlie Rother, one of the veteran engineers of the Rock Island road, whose great engine pulls one of the fast trains over the final lap of the line down through the canons, the wide mesas, the barren plains and the painted hills, towards El Paso, has seen a ghost. Not only has Rother seen the ghost, but the fireman, Manuelo Yerba, has seen it; and not only once have they seen it, but almost every time the engine drawing the heavily laden overland train, plunges southwestward across the Canon Pintato, in New Mexico, have they seen it.

But the fact that they have seen this ghost is the least unusual thing about it. The ghost itself is the strangest, weirdest, most unbelievable ghost that ever came back out of the past to frighten mortals. For this ghost is the wraith of a railroad wreck, and not only does it startle the engineer and the fireman, but they declare, in cold, sober earnest, that it frghtens their engine.

There are things in the southwest—especially in the weird, strangely colored, wild country that lies between the Bad Lands of Texas and the mountains that skirt the Rio Grande which cure skepticism. Men down that way will believe things without question which house-reared and street-imprisoned easterners would scoff at—until they had lived in that country.

Engineer Doesn't Believe in Spooks.

Rother was born in New York, but he has realroaded in the southwest long enough to stand ready to believe at least anything he sees; and Manuelo Yerba was born and reared down there, and believes in all sorts of spirits and spooks, which Rother does not. Nevertheless, they both believe implicitly in the phantom railway wreck; and, furthermore, before Rother would believe it, he searched the back history of that part of the country, and discovered staggering evidence in support of his story.

Rother and his big engine pick up one of the overland trains at Santa Rosa early in the morning, while still the passengers are slumbering in the sleepers, or the crowded tourist cars, and drag the long train to El Paso, making fast time on the down grades. Rother and Manuelo, his fireman, have been together for years on that division of the Elpaso-Rock Island line—even before the Rock Island connected up the short line roads and stretched a transcontinental road through Kansas, Texas and New Mexico.

Had Reputation as Careful Man.

To them there was little romance in railroading. It was work with them—hard work, careful work, with always the responsibility for scores of human lives resting upon their shoulders. Rother was, and is, known as one of the most careful engineers in the business, which is why he was given such an important run, and that he took Manuelo with him from his old freight run to the cab of the magnificent engine, in spite of the protests of certain authorities who object to "greasers" in important positions, proves that there was something in Manuelo. Indeed, Manuelo Yerba was not of the common "greaser" laboring type. His blood was mainly Spanish, and his mother's father had been an American. Rother vouched for his nerve, his honesty, and his intelligence, and he was put on the passenger run.

Every second night they hauled the train out of Santa Rosa, and beyond a few minor accidents, snow blockades, sandstorms and hot journals, they never experienced anything unusual until in March of 1906.

Westward from Santa Rosa the line of the road runs straight as an arrow towards the hills, rushing onward as if to leap straight into the mouth of some giant and be swallowed up. A gaping cut in the red brown rocks opens, the train plunges straight in, and an instant later roars through the cut and rolls on to the bridge over the beautiful Canon Pintado.

Phantom Wreck Seen First Last March

Rother's train makes the plunge across the painted canon just at the moment when the first gray lights of dawn are beginning to reveal the sheer sides of the canon, and to touch as with luminous paint the tips of the hills. In March it is darker.

It was on a misty, threatening morning last March that Rother first saw the ghostly railway wreck. He and Manuelo were feeling in fine spirits. They were on time, which was good, because snow storms and slides had delayed overland travel on most of the roads, and their road was making the most of getting their trains across on time. They had been too long on the line to spend much time admiring scenery, but on this morning, because of the mist which was spreading in heavy curtains across the valleys, Rother was leaning forward, watching closely.

The train, running fifty miles an hour, leaped into the gap of the mountains, and, slowing down a bit, rolled over the gorge, while Rother nursed his engine carefully around the curve that the jar might not disturb the sleeping passengers. The train whirled back eastward. Manuelo was shoveling coal. Rother was leaning forward, when suddenly he threw on the air, gripped his levers tight, whistled, and started to reverse. He confessed that in spite of himself he shut his eyes and waited for the crash. A second passed—two seconds—the train was slowing down, and Rother, wondering why his train was not splinters, perhaps halfway down the gorge, opening his eyes, beheld a straight, clear track ahead, and saw Manuelo gazing at him in astonishment.

Freight Trains in Head-on Collision.

He quickly gathered speed again, calming his shaken nerves, and a few minutes later the train was rushing forward again.

"What was the matter?" asked Manuelo. "A cow?"

"No," said Rother, shortly. "Either I'm going crazy or I saw two freight trains run together, head on, about 100 feet ahead of us, and we went through without touching either of them."

That was the beginning of it. Rother and Manuelo decided to keep quiet about the occurrence and to tell the conductor that they came near hitting a couple of calves in the cut, if he asked any questions.

"I've seen mirages in the desert," he remarked to Manuelo, "but there is no railway within a hundred miles, and, besides, mirages don't happen at daybreak."

Both Men See Second Apparition.

It was nearly a month before the spectral railway wreck was seen again. This time both Rother and Manuelo saw it.

The train had made the curve at fair speed, and was gathering headway for the run along the straight stretch of track downhill and eastward, when suddenly there appeared on the track ahead of them—or, rather, at a slight angle from their track—two freight trains, which were running together head on, with Rother's train apparently about to smash into the wreckage of the two engines.

Manuelo yelled and started to jump but too late, Rother, his nerves steady as iron, made no move to reverse his engine or put on the air. With face white, and lips firm set, he sat at his post, and an instant later, without checking speed, sent his train straight through the special train.

For five minutes Manuelo knelt on the floor of the cab, muttering prayers, and Rother sat motionless. Then he said:

"I knew it was a real wreck."

Engineer of Old-time Type.

There was silence again, while Manuelo shamefacedly hid his beads in his tunic and started shoveling coal.

"But what in h—l is it?" demanded Rother, turning upon his fireman.

"Sancta Maria—she know," said Manuelo piously.

"It's the ghost of a railroad wreck—that's what it is," said Rother.

"Jesu save us!" muttered Manuelo, reaching for his beads again.

Three mornings in the next month they saw the wreck—or the spook of the wreck—and learned to look upon it without fear. They saw that the two engines were of an old type, long before abandoned, and that the cars were small and without the modern improvements. Everything indicated that the equipment was at least twenty-five years behind the times.

"Besides," said Rother, "that wreck isn't on this track at all. It's on a track that used to cut across this at an angle. They abandoned that track when they straightened the curve."

They saw the same thing each time—two freight trains crashing together, the crew of one engine jumping, the cars piling up, part of the wreckage and a dozen unbroken cars rolling down the hill—and by that time they were past the scene.

No Wreck in Road's Annals.

Now, while they knew that people in the southwest believe strange things, and are slow to doubt, they agreed not to tell about the ghostly wreck, and Rother began an investigation. He called at headquarters in El Paso, and inquired, as if casually, if ever there had been a wreck near the Pintado canon bridge. The records were consulted, and it was reported to him that the Rock Island never had suffered any kind of a wreck in that section. Unsatisfied, Rother questioned closer. He even wrote Chicago and made inquiries. The result was the same. The road, while it kept a record of every wreck and accident, no matter how small, had no record of any wreck along there.

Rother was not satisfied. About a month ago he happened to notice that the upturned wheels of one of the ghostly engines appeared closer together than is usual with engines.

"Narrow gauge," by George!" he yelled to Manuelo. And when they reached El Paso he went to an old El Paso and Northern engineer, now retired, and made inquiries about the wreck.

Phantom Still Unexplained.

This is what he learned. While the El Paso and Northern, now a part of the Rock Island system, was being built, as a narrow gauge road, two freight trains—or, rather, one supply train and one train hauling bridge timber and returning light—crashed together on the curve about a mile and a quarter from the Pintado canon bridge. The wreck happened at 4:30 in the morning and both trains rolled down the gorge.

After he substantiated the story Rother told about the phantom wreck, and people in the southwest believe him, although eastern people, whose minds are narrowed to the width of streets instead of broadening out across mystic mesas, many doubt.

They wouldn't doubt, however, if Rother, with his clear gray eyes and open, strong face, told them the story as earnestly as he tells it when he can be persuaded to tell it at all.—Chicago Tribune.

A Prominent Spiritualist Weds.

At the hall of the First Spiritualist Society, of Wichita, Kansas., 125 S. Main street, Friday evening, Dec. 21, at 9 o'clock, Mr. John Q. Adams and Miss Udora Axtell marched to the altar to the strains of Mendelsohn's Wedding March, where they were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, the Rev. Josephine A. Bruer officiating. The service was most beautiful and impressive, and the sanctity of the occasion words would fail to express.

The bride was neatly attired in an up-to-date tailored suit of the popular shadow plaid, in a delicate shade of gray, with hat and gloves to match. The waist was a dainty pearl gray. A diamond brooch worn by the bride flashed its crystalline rays throughout the room, while the floral decorations were in perfect harmony with the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams are well and favorably known here, both being active members of the First Psychical Research Society of Kansas, and of high standing in social circles. The ceremony took place quetly in the presence of sixty friends of the bride and groom, each of which extends his or her best wishes for their future happiness. They will be at home at their residence, 229 N. Market street, after January 1.

THE TEMPLE FUND SOCIETY.

Now Ready for the Reception of Funds.

It has taken some time to send the application for an N. S. A. charter for the Temple Fund Society to the different officers for their signature, but at last it has been signed by all and sent in to Mrs. Longley, and we received our charter as a Christmas gift. By this we are now a legal organization, protected by the N. S. A. and ready for work in earnest.

Now that the holiday season is over, we trust that the Spiritualists of the country will turn their attention to the needs of the cause. Send in your dollar for membership, or five dollars and have your name placed on the roll of honor, and thus lend your mite toward helping some struggling society to build or own its own temple.

Send memberships to the president, Geo. W. Kates, Cheyney, Pa., or the secretary, Carrie H. Mong, 415 S. Franklin street, Muncie, Ind.

One Big Society.

How We Can Have One Big Harmonious Society in Every City.

Elect new officers every year. Have a by-law to this effect: In order to reduce inharmony to a minimum and to let old prejudices and criticisms die out, it shall be the policy of this society to elect new officers every year and no officer shall be re-elected unless by unanimous vote. An old officer may be elected the third and fifth year.

Because we Spiritualists as a class of thinking, reasoning, investigating, scientific people become and grow more individualized and independent like leaders themselves, we are apt to split up into factions or little societies; hence we should eliminate every inharmonious cause and make everything count for harmony. Most every public medium becomes a leader, having circles, classes, seances, or parlor meetings; and many of them stay away from the Sunday public meetings of the society. Every such public medium should alternate by turns on the program somewhere, or at the conference. To illustrate: On one Sunday at the conference time or experience meeting, the topic might be "Trumpet Mediums' and Their Seances." Have such mediums there to tell their experiences; have their friends there who have attended their seances to tell the results of their investigations. Have a summary printed in the local papers. The society should have as many such big red-letter days as possible.

In the Progressive Thinker for Nov. 10, 1906, Mrs. A. A. Averill, of Lynn, Mass., says: "I have been secretary of a Spiritual society for nearly twelve years and one of the hardest of my duties has always been to try to keep the membership up, which in this time has varied all the way from 40 to 200.

"And why is this?

"Some neglect to pay their dues, promise to do so soon, but never do; others refuse to pay because they do not like the president or some other officer."

Hence that lady is in favor of a new fraternal organization, but I think our National and state organizations are sufficient and we should not divide our forces. As spiritual or psychic phenomena are universal, we can not shut them up, or corner them, or corral them inside of fraternal organizations. Let us make our local and state and National organizations more fraternal, more protective.

Some local officers persist in staying in office so long that they become stumbling blocks to the progress of others. They become a little selfish of the honor and want themselves re-elected to vindicate their character or measures. No business house would keep a clerk who was not liked by the customers; no political party would or could keep an officer who was not liked by the people. No political party would think of running as a candidate any old war-horse against whom there were criticisms and dislikes. If they want to succeed in the election, they would take a new candidate or "dark-horse" and go on to victory.

As Spiritualists, we are criticised enough by the people, without being criticised or censured by our own members. Every old Spiritualist knows that all prejudice ought to be removed for the good of the cause. Some speakers and mediums persist in giving business advice or readings and can't give themselves or their society any business advice that counts for the society's success; they become commercial mediums and want to make too much money out of their spiritual gifts.

Some speakers want to hold office in their local home society so they can brag about it when they go away to speak, and this is well enough for once only. As all speakers and mediums are already workers and semi-officers in the cause on account of their mediumship, they should not aspire to local office or be allowed to hold office. The society should be given a chance to grow large by getting as many people interested as possible in any way, on committees or into the harness to do any kind of work. Mediums and speakers are already workers and have a grand and glorious spiritual gift or office and should attend to that only and let others take the honor and brunt and criticism of local official work. Let others who are not mediums do the official work and the society will be that much larger.

Again mediums are criticised enough by the outside world without being criticised by fellow members of a society. Mediums can do better work when every one thinks well of them and loves them, for harmonious thought waves will go toward the medium. A medium should not crowd others out of office, but be glad that some one else less sensitive can do such bold hard work. All members of a society should insist on shielding a medium from any unnecessary criticism or fault-finding. If a medium is unjustly criticised, it ought to be our first duty to rally around that medium with all our friendship and protection.

Furthermore no husband of a medium should hold office in a local society, for he has all he can do to protect and shield his medium wife; as a medium's protector he already holds an important office; of such a position, he should be proud and contented. A medium's protector is a spiritual millionaire.

In a big intellectual city, there surely ought to be one good person in a hundred or thousand capable of holding office and doing the society's work. We all know that young folks have their school societies and act as officers and they do well and can make a good appearance. There is no excuse for a gray-headed Spiritualist's staying in office and handing down to posterity the prejudices and criticisms and the quarrels of years long past. Any officer whose bossy conduct causes a quarrel or the withdrawal of members ought not to be re-elected, and a by-law to this effect would prevent all such trouble, and displeased members would not be so apt to withdraw when they know the bossy officer's term will soon expire; for the same reason, new members will join. Every member's act should count for harmony. If a member is not a harmonizer, he should not be elected to office.

If the society wants experienced members on the board, they should have a by-law that all past officers are ex-officio members of the board and should meet with the new board to give advice without voting, while the new officers do the society's work in public, thus letting all prejudices and criticisms have a chance to die out and be forgotten.

Another plan is to have a business meeting of the society for the consideration of important measures; here all can make motions and talk on them. If we want a society to live and grow, we should bring it close to the people and let them know that it belongs to them and not to the board or to a few bosses.

Another good plan is to have a conference at six p. m., just before the evening meeting and give all a chance to speak and grow and develop their speaking talent and ability. Get everybody to work, and into the harness. Rouse up some enthusiasm. Get up a program for weeks ahead and put all the local talent on the program somewhere. Appoint several committees, each to do some certain thing. All get busy. Ask them to work, urge them to do something. Ask them what they prefer to do. Invite people to join. Find extra time for young speakers to appear before the public; give them a chance. Be their friends. All these methods and others you may think of will make a big society. Above all, have good speakers, for even good home talent becomes common and monotonous.

A Terrible Accident and Death.

A horrible grade accident occurred at noon on Christmas day, at the Lake street crossing of the Lake Shore and the A. R. T. Trolley line, when the Pittsburg and Buffalo flyer, headed west, ran into a street car, injuring 19 persons, and killing Leonard Newbold, aged 17. He was terribly mangled, and was taken to the hospital where at 3:3 p. m., the Sweet Angel of Death touched him gently, and called him up higher.

He was a twin son of Mr. and Mrs. John Newbold, an exemplary young man, and special favorite of the family. Although his life on earth was seemingly short, we know the world is better for his having liver here.

On Friday, Dec. 28, we commemorated his transition with a beautiful spiritual service, D. A. Herrick and Mrs. John Wallace officiating. The service was very largely attended. The inspired thoughts so ably presented by Brother Herrick were a consolation and comfort to the bereaved family who have just recently taken an interest in our beautiful teachings. The sweet words of comfort from Mrs. Wallace, every sentence seemingly touched with the divine, surprisingly uplifting in their poetical beauty, did much to soften the sorrow and prove to them that life and love can never die. The singing was another feature of the service, worthy of more than ordinary mention. Mrs. A. H. Talcott, Mrs. O. Bliss, Chas. Tooley and H. F. Munsell composed the quartet. The songs, so appropriate and so beautifully rendered, did much to perfume the atmosphere with comfort.

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are home girls,
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust in,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folk,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls
That know what to do and to say;
That drive with a smile and a soft word,
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are good girls,
Good girls from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.

I WILL GO MY WAY.

I will go my way and my song shall save me,
Tho' grief goes with me ever abreast;
I will finish the work that the strange God gave me,
And then pass on to rest.

I will go back to the great world-sorrow,
To the millions bearing the double load—
The fate of to-day and the fear of to-morrow;
I will taste the dust of the road.

I will go back to the pains and the pities
That break the heart of the world with moan;
I will forget in the grief of the cities
The burden of my own.

There in the world-grief my own grief humbles,
My own hour melts in the days to be,
As the wild white foam of a river crumbles,
Forgotten in the sea.

This great novel is written with a distinct purpose, to set forth certain phases of spirit life and experience, as related to the gifted and inspired author. The question of soul mates, or of the united male and female constituting the completed ego or angel, is advanced as a vital truth of spirit experience in the higher realms. The work radiates a good spiritual influence, and is very interesting.

It is a spiritual book for Spiritualists, and interesting for everyone.

The Nemesis of Chautauqua Lake

This fascinating Book by the well-known Author and Scholar,

HON. A. B. RICHMOND,

Should be in the hands of every Spiritualist in the land. It is based on a historical fact, but through the narative is woven a psychic line of thought in the style so natural to the great criminal lawyer that one can feel the author's very presence during its perusal. It is certainly interesting. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

A Lady Artist's Observation.

In a pleasant interview the other day with a lady artist of Chicago, and the proprietor of a prosperous studio, who is well cultured, she said: In attending the churches in the city she found the attendants consisted almost wholly of women. Go where she would she was met by the same facts, women constituted the audience, and the preacher told the old story, over and over again, about a crucified God, who left his royal throne, allowed himself to be born of a Jewish maiden, was nursed in her loving arms, grew to manhood under her motherly care, then was sacrificed on a cross to appease the anger of his Father because of the sins of other people, and to save them from endless perdition.

The lady said she wearied of the many-times-told-tale, incredible in fact. Learning of a People's Church, where such unreasonable teaching was combatted, she went there. Instead of women and children, else empty seats, she found every pew full, and, marvelous to relate, she found the leaders of public opinion, the lawyers, doctors, editors, teachers, inventors, and the great thinkers generally, the men of brains, were there. A few women were scattered through the assemblage, but were greatly in the minority, through broad and high foreheads told they did their own thinking. Our friend decided at once there was where she belonged. She took a pew and occupies it every Sunday, and gets something to think about all the week.

Unfortunately, the only Spiritualists whose acquaintance the lady had made belonged to the faker class, and she dared not trust any of them, though she admitted she would be glad to find our teachings true, and certainly they are more reasonable than anything she had ever heard in an orthodox pulpit.

A Dearly Purchased Whistle.

The elephant is ours, but what to do with the brute is the question. The Washington correspondent of the Woman's National Daily, takes us behind the scenes, and tell a fact not generally known. He says: Hon. Thomas B. Reed, Speaker of the House of Representatives, while the Spanish war was pending, was violently opposed to the purchase of the Philippine Islands, for which we paid $20,000,000. He did all in his power to prevent the acquisition of the islands; then, finding himself in opposition to his party, he declined a re-election. Now the correspondent:

"Men who believed Providence had placed a benighted people in our hands urged it was a moral and religious duty to carry the Christian religion to them. And this people [the Christian] forced the Philippine Islands on us."

A secular nation, obligated to hold itself aloof from all religions, buys foreign empire, according to this narration, especially to Christianize the people! And we are digging a ship canal across the continent, its main purpose to gain easy access to Hawaii and the distant Philippines, to save the souls of their inhabitants by Christian methods. But few stop to inquire where the money comes from to pay these countless millions of dollars, because it comes in an indirect way, and enhances the cost of everything the poor man and the laborer consumes.

To save those islands from being wrested from us in case of war with a foreign power, we are multiplying our great war ships at a terrible rate, but they secure the way to Christianize the barbarians, who neither want our religion nor our protection.

All Churches Are Honey-Combed With Free Thought.

Whilst liberal thought is everywhere visible in Protestant circles, there has been a general opinion that Roman Catholicism will cling to its ancient paganism, and go on, practically unchanged, for centuries. But this is not true in fact. Progress is working wonders among all sects. The withdrawal of state support, and its reliance on its communicants for the sinews of war are compelling Catholic leaders to change front.

Abbe Loisy, who is not only a Catholic priest, but a professor in a Catholic university, and acknowledged one of the leaders of Biblical thought in Europe, has recently published two goodly sized volumes relating to ecclesiastical matters, in one of which he says:

"As a historian and a critic I am convinced Jesus Christ during his mortal life never once, directly or indirectly, by word or work, by open teaching, by allegory or parable, or implication of any kind, conveyed or intended to convey to his immediate disciples, or to the generations that have followed them, that he was God as well as man."

Here is Unitarianism from a Catholic pen, and he still holds his positions as priest and professor, while 300 years ago books and author would have been extinguished by Inquisitorial fires. His only punishment, his publications are placed on the index of Prohibited Books. This will assure them a wide reading among Protestants.

Loisy began by showing all the historical information we possess about Jesus is contained in the Gospels, evidence from other sources being very meagre. "He could have said with, truth, all outside evidence is believed by many eminent scholars to be forged, as were the Gospels.

"Sixty years ago," says P. O'Kelley, D. D., a prominent Catholic priest at Rome, in a late letter published in "The Ecclesiastical Review," a Roman Catholic organ, while reviewing Loisy's work "Bauer and the Tubingen school of critics were disposed to assign a very limited value to the Gospels," for they showed they were written at a later date than is given them; "that Mark was the original, from which Matthew and Luke copied, and that John is of no use in tracing information about the historical Christ, for there is hardly a trace of history in it."

Priest O'Kelley makes concessions we hardly expected from a Catholic source. He says:

"It would seem Jesus' tomb was really found empty, but this fact, if it be a fact, admits of other explanations than his resurrection. * * The human history of Jesus begins with his baptism and preaching and ends with his death. The entire duration of this period was about one year."

Those Spiritualists who are ambitious to impose the Bible and Jesus on us, and make them confirm the revelations from the spirit world daily given, will be surprised to find this Priest O'Kelley, D. D., given great space without criticism in a Catholic organ and saying further:

"The three synoptic Gospels represent directly the beliefs and aspirations of the Christian generation of their time, and only indirectly the actual doings of our Lord."

That is a thrust at the character of the Gospels as severe as ever fell from our pen. An "indirect history," is no history at all. But this priest continues:

Neither the early Christian preachers nor the evangelists concerned themselves with historical exactitude; their own great aim was to produce faith, and prove that Jesus had shown himself by his works to be the promised Messiah."

How did they set themselves to work to prove their claim? Why, by miracles. Btu further on O'Kelley says what every person of good sense knows;

"Miracles are impossible, therefore all accounts of them are false or legendary." Then he says: "Harnack," another Catholic heretic, "and Loisy do not deny the possibility of the miraculous, but they explain the miracles related in the New Testament as exaggerations of primitive facts, or as materializations of allegories."

And then: Stand from under, ye Bible worshipers:

"Jesus never worked a miracle in support of his mission or his doctrine. * * * but faith in Jesus produced the miracles attributed to him."

Again, abridged:

"It is a mistake to imagine the 'Kingdom of Heaven,' in its primitive sense, as understood by our Lord, can be supposed to refer to the church in any way. No, the historian must guard against the temptation of modernizing the idea of the Kingdom. Jesus meant a new and wonderful era, soon to be inaugurated by a terrible cataclysm in which all the wicked were to be destroyed. He was sure the end of the world was to come in his own life; he assured his disciples that several of them would see it; that it would be upon them before they had finished evangelizing the villages of Galilee.

Nineteen centuries have passed, and we know this was an error. We are forced to believe Jesus not only professed this error, but made it the subject of all his exhortations and preaching, unless we are prepared to abandon the authenticity of the greater part of his teaching, as contained in the Gospels. If we deny Jesus taught the end of the world, IT WILL BE IMPOSSIBLE TO PROVE EVEN HIS HISTORICAL EXISTENCE."

But now, the unkindest cut of all, by this Catholic priest, and published without criticism in a Catholic organ, from which we extract. Read it over again and again, and note how it harmonizes with what is given in the New Testament as facts:

"We find ourselves in this position as a result of our critical analysis. A carpenter's son called Jesus of Nazareth, of whose antecedents nobody knows anything, but who was considered by his own mother to be half mad, after being baptized in the Jordan by a man who preached the end of the world was at hand, felt he had a religious mission to the Jews, but never offered any proof of it; he, too, fell a victim to the popular superstition; he made this hallucination the basis of all his preaching, and he died still clinging to it."

We are loth to close the quotations, for they grow stronger as we advance; but space absolutely forbids. They parallel the strongest utterances of Bishop Crapsey and Rev. Cox, while Thomas Paine and Robert G. Ingersoll never equaled this Catholic priest in repudiating the teachings of this prophet of destruction.

The priests mentioned are not alone in liberal utterances. The facts are, the great Roman Catholic hierarchy, like Protestantism, is completely honey-combed with free thought.

BOOMING!

Never in the history of The Progressive Thinker has it experienced SUCH A BOOM as at the present time. Last week furnished the LARGEST RECEIPTS of any one week in the WHOLE HISTORY of the paper. It is exceedingly encouraging to know that the GREAT BODY OF SPIRITUALISTS sustain The Progressive Thinker so well and so enthusiastically. So exceptionally prosperous has the paper been, that we lately added another LINOTYPE MACHINE to our office, and that alone is worth $3,000, equivalent to buying a house or a small farm. We feel especially proud of THE GREAT SUCCESS of the paper, in view of the fact that it has had a serious fight on its hands in its efforts to free our ranks from the rotten, pestilential fraudulent element afflicting it to the very core in various parts of the country.

We also feel GREAT PLEASURE that it has been selected apparently as the OFFICIAL ORGAN of every prominent Spiritualist speaker and medium in the United States, for they know full well that the MERE MENTION of their names in the Chicago Organ of the notorious Elsie Reynolds (the bogus materializing medium of California, whose bogus materialized spirits—to express it mildly—have become a disagreeable STENCH in the ranks of Spiritualists, and whose presence will not be tolerated on any camp ground) would soil their fair reputation, and prevent them from getting engagements.

We are now sending out to inquiring minds all over the United States, THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST, a beautifully illustrated work, translated from the French by MR. GANDHI, a learned Hindu. Every Spiritalist, every Minister of the Gospel, every church member, and every student who wishes to keep up with the times should HAVE THE BOOK. It is sent out as A GIFT TO ALL. Send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay postage, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year. The book is an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who comply with the conditions. We desire to distribute as an actual gift ONE MILLION COPIES of this work. It has ELEVEN fine illustrations, and sold formerly for ONE DOLLAR. Tell your friends of this GREAT OFFER, and induce them to send for the paper and book.

J. N. Yakes, who has read The Unknown Life of Christ, writes of it from Ludington, Mich.:

"We have received your book, 'THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST.' Wife and I have read it through TWICE, and we consider it a historical treatise that should be read by EVERY ONE. After reading it through and mentally digesting its contents, we cannot see how any reader could ever doubt its authority. It is THE BRIDGE that spans those years of deep inquiry.

With the maps of Palestine and India, we have traced the routes described in this instructive book, and suggest that way of getting at the contents of this volume.

This HISTORICAL GEM is worth ten times more than the combined price of both book and The Progressive Thinker for one year, and we predict for the year 1907, that the orthodox demand for this book will be greater than ever before."

Dr. J. C. Hoffman, a prominent physician of this city, with an office at 46 Van Buren street, writes:

"You are liberality personified, and your paper is accordingly the broadest—the best—of its kind. Inclosed, please find my check for one year's subscription, beginning with January, 1907. I also send 10 cents in addition, which ridiculously small sum entitles me to one copy of a MOST VALUABLE BOOK through your munificence. Truly, you are a benefactor.

"Prof. Larkin's article in your last number is worth more than one year's subscription; so also is any one message from Dawbarn, the California Sage.

"May you live twice as long as you have, and your shadow never decrease."

It is a fact, The Progressive Thinker is on a TIDAL WAVE OF SUCCESS, and is booming as never before in its history, and we wish to extend the VIBRATION thereof to every NOOK AND CORNER of the United States. Aid us to do so.

REMEMBER, that in order to obtain the above book, you must send 10 cents in stamps to pay the postage thereon, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker.

The Great Work.

Valuable Articles Culled from The Progressive Thinker—Master and Mediumship—A Plea for the Independent Method of Spiritual Development.

To the Editor:—I made a "GOOD RESOLUTION" to-day, and am now proceeding to put it into effect by science will not trouble me for a whole year now, because I have "begun the year right." Of course this is a joke, yet it is no more silly as a "means of salvation" than the other "beliefs" which many substitute for right living.

But my letter would have been more appropriate on "Thanksgiving Day." How unfortunate that it happens I am more thankful to-day than on Nov. 29! Like the orthodox people I can make a bluff at shifting the responsibility to a "scapegoat" or "substitute," for you are responsible in this particular instance. How do you like the idea of being either of these?

However that may be, you will have to bear the responsibility for my being thankful enough to write a letter, because you have published lately several articles which have given me much pleasure, and you have called my attention to several books WHICH ARE OF GREAT VALUE:

I have bought part of these books and intend to buy more. I have NINE ARTICLES clipped from your recent numbers, which I consider valuable to save for more thorough study. I will mention three of them: "The Catechism on Darwin Plan," by Sir Oliver Lodge; the letter of O. V. LaBoyteaux on "Finer and Finer Forms," and the article on "Religion Practically Defined" by Frederick A. Wiggin. The books whose titles are extremely interesting to me, and which I intend to buy, are "World Making," "Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas," and the "Dialogue on Religion."

Your editorial attitude toward the book entitled, "THE GREAT WORK" and the contents of the book itself have given me a new idea. It is too big for me to advocate. So I will just put it in the form of a question: Do you suppose it is possible for the great body of Spiritualists to get some more new ideas, and make of themselves a representative body for more new truths?

Of course Spiritualists as individuals STAND FOR EVERY NEW TRUTH; that is, some of them do; but I do not see why so many Spiritualists should continue to be so satisfied because they have established the great facts of a life after physical death and spirit communication. If it were necessary to repeat the effort of the past to establish these great truths, why, then the effort would have to be made. But it is not necessary. The people who can be convinced through present methods of demonstration are already convinced. Advanced methods would reach more, of course.

It seems to me that every person who has a "creed," and this applies to many who do not call their one "hobby" by that name, ought to read once a year at least, Lowell's great poem, "THE PRESENT CRISIS" and then find out just what the present crisis is, and stand for a new truth. At least once a year the great body of Spiritualists ought to get busy WITH SOME NEW PHASE of human life and possibility.

There is ample material in these articles I have mentioned and these books, especially in "THE GREAT WORK," for an entire re-statement of known truths and for a better working hypothesis than any yet formulated.

Take the Catechism of Sir Oliver Lodge, published in your issue of Dec. 29, in connection with his late book, "LIFE AND MATTER," and every child can be educated to combat materialism far better than his father could. New discoveries are at our service. Sir Oliver Lodge has completely routed Professor Ernst Haeckel in his excursions so far beyond his depth as a Biologist, while seeking to destroy the great truths of Immortality, Spirit Existence, and God.

"THE GREAT WORK" offers more to Spiritualists than any other book with which I am familiar. I like this "Independent Method of Spiritual Development" better than the established, and better-known method of negative and passive conditions, darkness, circles, control and mediumship.

The author of this work and "The Great Psychological Crime," on page 203 of the latter book, clearly states that there is a method and attainment far superior to the method and attainment of subjective mediumship which which has produced all the phenomena for which Spiritualists and Spiritualism now stand before the public. It is MASTERSHIP instead of MEDIUMSHIP.

He says: "There is, in fact, a method of development which, when once accomplished, enables the individual to come into as conscious relation to his spiritual environment as he is to his physical environment. He sees clairvoyantly whenever he desires to do so, and when he opens his spiritual eyes he sees whatever there is to be seen upon the spiritual planes within the range of his vision. He hears clairaudiently whenever he wills to do so, and when he thus exercises his spiritual sense of hearing he hears whatever there is to be heard upon the spiritual planes within the range of his hearing. He is able to communicate with those upon the spiritual side of life as freely and as voluntarily as he does with those upon the physical plane."

Surely, this is not mediumship. If mediums could see their controls there would be less business doing for liars and counterfeit friends.

It occurs to me, as it must to every person who reads these words quoted above and who understands what they offer to honest Spiritualists, that this is a perfectly sure way to avoid the disappointments and failures as well as the counterfeit manifestations which occur in the seances.

But even more than that, there are materials at hand for a new Science, a new Philosophy and a new Religion. Spiritualists might be the first body to stand for these. There does not seem to be any rush for the privilege of being the first advocates of these great truths. Individuals only are representing them at present. It would be something new in the history of sects if the Spiritualists would listen to their critics and make a radical advance beyond the basic truth which originated their organization.

Thus far in history when new and radical truths are discovered, new organizations have been formed to advocate them. The old and established bodies have invariably denounced every one who tried to show them any mistakes they have made. Especially have they become wrathy when some one presumed to criticise their dearest beliefs or customs and to advise that they make a change to a better way.

Well, "THE GREAT WORK" certainly puts Spiritualists "up against it," and makes them responsible for investigating the difference between MEDIUMSHIP and MASTERSHIP. I am glad I read that book, and also, "The Great Psychological Crime." It gives me a working hypothesis, which is more satisfactory than the subjective method of seances, circles, controls and mediumship.

HENRY CLAYTON.

Chicago, Ill.

A Prominent Spiritualist Lecturer Gives His Views of the Book.

To the Editor:—I desire to add to my endorsement of Vol. III. of the Harmonic Series, by the author of "The Great Psychological Crime," called "THE GREAT WORK." Indeed it has the right name, it is a great work. The book comes to the race as a BEACON LIGHT to tossed and shipwrecked mariners on the Sea of Life.

It came to me bringing a CLEARER UNDERSTANDING of some things that were confusing and contradictory pertaining to this life and the life to come. IT WAS WRITTEN FOR ME. I was ready for it; I needed it. "When the pupil is ready the teacher appears." The world is ready for an Exact Science, Psychological Research and Moral Philosophy as essential in building up a "CONSTRUCTIVE SPIRITUALITY." It defines and gives a clear and comprehensive interpretation of "The Great School of Natural Science," and gives "THE LINEAL KEY" to its origin and methods of procedure.

The following titles of a few chapters will perhaps give you a hint of the scope and the magnitude of this book under consideration.

"The Mark of the Master," and a scientific analysis of "The Transition Called Death"; "The Passing of the Master", "Magnetic Field", "What Is Morality?" "A Standard of Morals."

It carries one up into the consciousness of the dazzling splendor of the "REAL SPIRITUAL WORLD."

Every thinking person ought to read the book and try and assimilate its teachings and make them a part of his being.

HOPE ON.

Let not thy little heart
In bitter sorrow break,
But by Love's alchemy
Thy sorrows golden make.

Within the slimy shell
Resides the priceless pearl,
Is dashed and rocked and surged
In ocean's maddening whirl.

Break not, thou little heart,
All this will pass away;
And when the night is spent,
Follows the golden day.

If thou wouldst win a crown,
Must mingle in the fight;
If thou'd enjoy the day,
Must first endure the night.

Look not upon the earth—
Look to the stars above;
And fill thy heart with light,
And bliss and joy and love.

Fame is not got by seeking it. All such pursuit is vain. It may very well come about that a man will succeed through tact and various artifices in making for himself some sort of name. But if there is no inner worth, all will prove empty and ephemeral.—Goethe.

Another Announcement.

In Reference to the Remarkable Works of Andrew Jackson Davis.

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

Mrs J. E. Trice, Clay Center, Kan; Dr. Eng. Gaupp, New Orleans, La., Mrs. Louise E. Sackett, 54 Andrew St., Springfield, Mass. Jacob Hey writes from Overbrook, Kan.: "Put me down for a full set of A. J. Davis's books when published. I read a majority of them years ago. I have never found their equal in all the books I ever read. They stand the test of time, and all later discoveries." Mrs. Nettie Hough writes from Bruceville, Texas: "I have been hoping you would set some time, or about the time, the A. J. Davis's works could be published; say six months, and then we would be prepared to send our money. I have tried to find some of his books for a long time, but was unable to. Now, I will take a set at $20, and when you say you want $10 of the amount, I will send it, and the balance when you start the presses on the work. I am getting old, and in a few years will pass on to the other life, but I have time to read those books, and then give them to a Library, where they will do some persons a great good. Hoping the work will go on, I am yours truly."

Something Startling!

Two Leading Minds to Start a New Vibration Among Spiritualists and Thinkers Generally, Commencing Jan. 19th.

The Erudite Col. Olcott, the great Theosophist, and Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of our leading inspirational speakers, will both entertain our readers on the "Dangers of Psychism," from diametrically different standpoints. The lecture by the distinguished Colonel will be answered by Miss Harlow in her own inimitable way, both constituting something of great value to Spiritualists. Now is the time to send in your subscriptions, with an additional subscriber, and thus keep up with the advancing procession instead of following in the rear.

THE GREAT BOOK.

Masonry in Its Pristine Purity.

TO THE EDITOR:—"THE GREAT WORK," PUBLISHED BY THE INDO-AMERICAN BOOK CO., GIVES BACK TO ANCIENT FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONRY THE ESOTERIC TRUTHS UNKNOWN OR FORGOTTEN BY MOST OF ITS PRESENT-DAY ADHERENTS. THE MODERN INTERPRETATION OF MASONRY IS BUT THE OUTWARD SHELL OF WHICH "THE GREAT WORK" (OF THE SCHOOL OF NATURAL SCIENCE) IS THE KERNEL. THE COLOSSAL WORLD-OLD FACTS CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK HAVE NEVER BEFORE, TO MY KNOWLEDGE, BEEN GIVEN OUT IN PUBLIC PRINT. THE OUTLINE, SHOWING THE ABSOLUTE SCIENTIFIC DATA OF THE GREAT WORK, IS GIVEN, ACCOMPANIED WITH DUE CAUTION OF THE DANGERS TO PERSONS WHO MIGHT FORGE AHEAD (OR BACKWARD, AS MISGUIDED EFFORT CERTAINLY WOULD BE) WITHOUT ADHERING TO THE ETHICAL TRAINING AND THE NECESSARY TECHNICAL FORMULARY LAID DOWN BY A COMPETENT INSTRUCTOR. THIS BOOK, AND ITS COMPLEMENT, "THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME," ARE THE TWO MOST NOTABLE WORKS THAT HAVE BEEN GIVEN TO THE WORLD IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Needs Revising.

Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. Edward Everett Hale, has been trying for more than a year, say advices from Washington, to induce senators to repeat after him the so-called Lord's prayer, but they don't catch on worth a cent. If the venerable chaplain would explain to the members that that prayer is proven to be an old Jewish prayer, slightly changed for worse by the New Testament compilers, very possibly they would invite him to prepare a more acceptable petition to the throne of grace: To ask God to "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive our debtors," would be to ask him to exact the last farthing of his claim on us. And as for asking for daily bread, that is a beggar's petition. God gives daily bread to those who obey his law and earn it by the sweat of their brows.

THE INEVITABLE DOWNFALL OF THE MODERN CHURCH.

The Institution Must Fall of Its Own Weight—Within itself Has Been Propagated the Disease That Pursues It Even Unto Its Death.

The Rev. Wm. Thurston Brown, in an address before the Men's Guild, St. Paul's church, Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1901, defined religion as "The life of God within the soul of man," followed with a brilliant exposition of the dogmatic traditions of the church.

The laws of nature are the laws of God, and nature reverences no God but the law. Life is in the elements, and death is life to be. Freedom is progress, and to be interferred with is destructive. This is in marked contradistinction with the modern church. Nature erects no idols, and has no false prophets. It lives to die and live again, beautifully arranged in perfect order, social in its nature, interwoven, interdependent, unchangeable, and in the whole a perfect organization, which the genius of man can not improve.

Man being a result of that same law, must be amenable to the law, which is God. Man, because of his disobedience of the law has plunged the race into a sea of troubles, and if persisted in will invite his own ultimate destruction. The law was made for man, not man for the law. You can recognize the law only where it is in evidence. This has to do with the social conduct of man. "Brothers in humanity, whose blood is red," are inseparably a social unit, from which no individual can successfully protest for independence of his kind.

Man being the highest culmination in the evolution of animal life, his wants are many and varied, to which nature has been a perfect caterer; and has it so arranged where the process has not been interfered with, that his wants can be supplied without the sacrifice of a single life or life's pleasures.

One by one, in rapid succession, are the lights of the church asserting their God-given rights of free thought and speech, and to embrace a religion too broad to be limited by traditional church creeds and superstitious heresies. To the Rev. Brown, from his own testimony, this liberation of mind from the contamination of church ambiguities, to the light and life of an evident God, has spoken a peace to his soul not voiced by creedism.

"Beyond the Black Ocean," by Father McGrady, as well as other writings by him, at once evidences that the grip of superstition upon the priesthood has at last been broken.

The Rev. Geo. Clarke Cox, formerly rector of the Holy Trinity church, Harlem, and now rector of Calvary church, Clifton, the richest Episcopal church in Cincinnati, writes to Bishop Vincent, in part, as follows: "I sympathize fully with Dr. Crapsey. On the Sunday following his trial I preached a sermon in my parish church in which I declared I did not believe in the virgin birth or in the holy resurrection of Jesus Christ. I have, on many occasions, preached sermons in which the doctrine of atonement, as it is manifestly set forth in the prayer book was questioned on scriptural as well as logical grounds. The doctrine of original sin, as set forth in the baptismal office, I have strenuously denounced and tried to disprove."

Next appears, in bold headlines in the daily press, the explosion of the "Endless Chain Prayer" hoax, alleged to have emanated from the Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts, but now strenuously denied by him. On the same date the Associated Press reports that Spain follows France in defying the Pope, saying, "While the government was desirous of avoiding a breach with the Vatican, it had determined to defend the supremacy of the State," and religious orders are made amenable to the same laws controlling corporations.

Like governments, religions exist only by the consent of the governed. When the people refuse to conform to the traditions of the church, the institution decays, and the world moves on. If the church was ever right, it is right to-day. If it is not right to-day, it was never right,—and since God is God, and right is right, the church evidently was never right. "Right wrongs no man," and because of this the church has no claim upon righteousness, and in this respect, the church religions are a separate quality from the laws of God.

God is eternal, and His laws irrevocable. When those laws are understood they will be found to be as unalterable as the laws of sunshine, and heaven will be understandable in terms of freedom, and to whatever extent freedom has forced its issue upon the face of the earth, no where in the annals of history, can any of the credit be ascribed to the modern church.

If religion is "The life of God in man," the relation of man to man, and man to God, is suggestive of the social organization of the God life, and we are in a position to apply the golden rule, not in theory but in truth. Conversion can mean nothing more than a consciousness of the life of God in man, and the universal relationship of man to his brother. Religion is epitomized by the two conceptions of this relation, "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," and the attempted separation of these two ideas, has infected the modern church, even unto its death, and forever divorced righteousness and the present church ethics, whose attitude toward society, as a whole, indicates the church to conceive of the love of God and the love of man as two separate qualities. If the soul of man reflects the life of God, as man, then do we have access directly to view the God-life, and in like manner is the more directly lovable. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

The point of contact between church religion and the life of man, has lost its significance in a labyrinth of theological ideas, and has devoutly succumbed to the will of dominating personal interests. If God is in man, then man is God, and a paid priesthood is not necessary to open the heavens to your petitions. If such is the case, what evidence do they bring of the faithful discharge of their duty. Hitherto, for too long a time has the clergy taught, "Obey your masters." The church of both the North and the South attempted to bolster up the decaying institution of chattel slavery. They were not few, but many, "gathered together in the name of the Lord," but the Lord was evidently not in "their midst." The very division of the church on the slave question, makes the church a questionable institution, as the Bible, if it is the unalterable plan of salvation, cannot be authority for contradictory ethics.

The feudal serf, the captured enemy of the barbarous day, the enslaved wife, propagated in the same womb of her male masters, are on record as institutions of human servitude, defended by this same church of the slave days of the South, and worst of all, their persecutions of the race in this direction are more in evidence to-day than ever before in human history.

"How hast thou helped him that is without power? How savest thou the arm that has no power?" How hast thou counseled him that hath no wisdom, and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing that is?" was Job's rebuke to Bildad. In consideration of the above, how can you, Mr. Churchmember, say to mankind, "My brother" when reason teaches that such is absolute betrayal into the hands of sinners, and the deceptive character of the means only magnifies the criminality of the result, and divorces the church, even from religion as taught by the bible. "My brother," to whom hast thou uttered the words, and whose spirit come from thee?" "Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof." Dead, indeed, are the unrighteous ethics, and empty is the sacrament to him who finds in your offer of bread, a stone.

The church, like Ephraim of old, is joined to its idols. "They are bound by an indissoluble tie, and will perish together." C. J. WRIGHT.

LETTER FROM LYMAN C. HOWE.

Port Colborne—Transition of Jacob Upthegrove—work in Buffalo—Prof. Lockwood Ill.

A phone call from Buffalo hurried me away before the Xmas bird had time to protest, and before my assimilative process could utilize the dinner which had been prepared for the hour, Prof. Howe, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was sharing the day with us, and to leave abruptly was to shadow all with disappointment. But it was a call to minister to the spiritual needs of the bereaved and sorrowing, which must not be ignored for any selfish pleasure.

At Buffalo I was met by Mr. and Mrs. Lane, and Mr. Upthegrove, and conducted to Port Colborne, where I had a glimpse at the terminus of the famous Welland Canal. There we dedicated the newly emancipated life of Jacob Upthegrove, and the body was taken to Flint, Mich., for burial. This family are all Spiritualists and not ashamed of it; and they are the only representatives of the Cause known in that notable town. A large assemblage heard Spiritual Gospel interpreted for the first time.

Mrs. Lane from Buffalo, has startled them of late, by her successful spiritual healing. She is active and busy in good works there in Buffalo and elsewhere, and an efficient worker in the Temple Society, where Prof. Lockwood is doing such splendid work.

Arriving at home Wednesday evening, the 26th, I anticipated a season of "innocuous desuetude," busy with my pen. But another call took me back to Buffalo, to speak in Prof. Lockwood's place, Sunday, the 30th, which brought me face to face with many old-time friends, and a full house in the evening. There I was surprised by a hand-shake with Brother S. S. King, president of the Hamilton Society. Mrs. Chase interested the people with psychic readings, and her work is more appreciated and approved as time and experience make her better known. A shadow was cast over all by the announcement of the death of Mrs. Dillon, mother-in-law to the Lyceum leader, whose bright spirit and pleasing manners are soulshine to all the children, and contribute much to the Lyceum's success.

On Tuesday, at 2:30 p. m., we met at the house, where love was weeping, and the silent clay reflected the life that had departed, and a profusion of flowers filled the air with fragrance and beauty. Reverently we laid the cold form to rest, while the sullen clouds of winter hung heavy in the air, but over the gloom smiled the radiant morning of love's eternal day.

After resting, visiting and feasting at the ever hospitable home of Mrs. Dr. Matteson, where a large room-full of anxious invalids awaited their time for clairvoyant examination. I returned to Fredonia.

But an important incident connected with my stay in Buffalo, was a visit to Prof. Lockwood's rooms, at Mr. Manger's Hotel, where the Dr. is wrestling with an attack of asthma, variously complicated, and quite serious. It was this that caused the call for me to speak in his place.

Besides this, Mrs. Lockwood has her wrists securely held in a plaster cast to hold the double fractured bones while they knit. Mrs. Lockwood is a saint. "Sinners stand on slippery places;" but she could not. The gravity of sin was not a match for the slippery sophistry under her feet and she went down; but fortunately the injury was limited to two fractured bones in her wrist and forearm.

Let us pray for Brother Lockwood. The cause needs him; and the world needs the cause. From all I could learn, I judge that his popularity with thinkers and competent critics, is steadily growing in Buffalo. To help on with finances, a Bazaar is active in the plans for the latter part of January, 1907, and any contributions for it will be appreciated. Address Mrs. Dr. M. E. Lane, 218 Virginia street, Buffalo, N. Y. Any amounts from one cent to $10 thankfully received.

Before closing I would like to add my testimony to the high value of Hudson Tuttle's masterly analysis of the Evolution of Ideas Centralized in Religion, Enthroned With God and Christ.

This book is a cyclopedia in its special department. It goes to the bottom, and aims at the top. It gathers data with industrious exactness, and gives the reader the historic sources from which they are derived. It deals gently with all human interests and religious errors, prejudices, and dogmas; but compromises nothing. Not having finished reading it, I am not qualified to give an exhaustive survey of its scope and aims, but I am sure it will not disappoint the hopes of any reader, unless it be to astonish, by transcending all anticipation. After reading it through I may have more to say.

Meanwhile I have to consider the virtues, and question the doubtful, presented by another book of very different character, and readers may look for more disappointment, which I trust will be useful in the work of Universal Education.

The Cabinet Spirits

And the Part They Play in Producing Spirit Manifestations.

What are known as cabinet spirits are those who are constantly in the atmosphere of certain psychics, and are ever present at their seances, aiding in producing the various manifestations.

That a large portion of the phenomena witnessed in the seance room are produced by cabinet spirits, and this without the connivance of the medium, appears to have been demonstrated beyond question.

I am unable to assure myself that the spirit friends whom we seek can invariably respond at our bidding which may be prompted by the deep sincerity of never fading affection, or the superficial whim of the idle sentimentalist.

It will be observed, particularly in the majority of cases in which the patrons of seances seek the communion of certain persons to the exclusion of all others, the impossibility of their ability to manifest becoming apparent; the sitter often finds himself face to face with a cabinet spirit simulating prehension of the infinite becomes a, our friends. This is one reason, evidently, why information of a personal nature in so difficult to obtain.

The acquaintance of the cabinet spirit being limited to the field of observation afforded by the attendance of the sitter at the seances, its familiarity with personal affairs will, accordingly, be modified to this extent, and the communication will assume that general tone and character which will readily adapt itself to any person or condition.

This argument applies with equal force to every phase of spirit power where the utmost precaution has not been observed to eliminate every possible element which might be clothed with the power of a suggestion or a leader for the practice of THIS CLASS OF DECEPTION BY SPIRIT FORCES.

I have frequently observed at a materializing seance held in a room not sufficiently darkened to prevent recognition of all present, and of everything which took place, as many as four forms of female figures to emerge from the cabinet, successively, who would at once be recognized by one or another enthusiast as the shade of a mother, wife or sister, only to be met with the negative reply that she was only a cabinet spirit, and intimating that they were always present to aid at the seance, but were rarely made prominent or conspicuous in the management thereof. Indeed it seems to be possible for psychics to be surrounded by certain controls who have never been made known to them but who have, nevertheless, been factors in the production of phenomena, as important in some respects as the principal control who acts in the role of manager.

It is these cabinet spirits, although strangers to us, who frequently appear posing as friends or relatives. An entire seance may be conducted in this way without the slightest thought of deception on the part of the medium who may be, personally, strenuously opposed to this method of procedure.

There will always be found at a seance those who would consider it sacrilege to question little, common deceptions of this character, but who devoutly and credulously, and with the happiest good feeling accept all which appears in the spirit dictated by their wishes and hopes. Any suggestion of a practical nature will be met with scorn and an air of assurance which precludes the possibility of doubt concerning the question of identity.

The merest intimation that a certain manifestation of doubt in some particular, is sufficient to call forth the very conclusive explanations of the knowing ones who are never disturbed in the least because certain happenings in the seance room are not just what one is reasonably justified in expecting them to be, since such trifles can readily be attributed to poor conditions, or the presence of some antagonistic element.

I will not venture to say that this latter premise is frequently unimportant, as many factors, ordinarily considered of little moment, because they interest no one in particular, are sometimes of the greatest importance as being conducive to the production of the best results; and it is no uncommon occurrence to note an utter failure to record manifestations of any kind in a circle composed of persons noted for their harmony of sentiment and genuine good natured sociability.

It is a fact, however, the notice of which is particularly apropos at this time, that the great relief which comes over the tyro with the dawn of the knowledge that life continues beyond the grave, which is but the gateway to an existence more developed and susceptible of a more complete comthe characteristics and affections of ruling passion; and the mature realization that a communication with the departed is actually possible, so enraptures the novice whose conception of life has been limited between the narrow confines of the birth and death of a mortal form, that anything which might logically be expected to agitate the faith of the studious observer is wafted to the wind as an unwarrantable disturbance of those satisfactory conclusions which have culminated an experience, each to its individual possessor more marvelous and convincing than that of its neighbor.

The cold reminder that the identity of a certain manifestation is open to certain explanatory modifications, becomes cruel and disappointing to the fascination which precludes the discriminating faculty from sifting the wheat from the chaff.

Note the simultaneous recognition of a face, or form, or voice, by a dozen or more different persons at one and the same time.

How well this one remembers that peculiar accent, and another that certain characteristic tone. "It is so much like mother," comes from one quarter. "It is Sister Mary's voice, without doubt," another is heard to say. "Hello, Nellie, is this you?" calls still another. A faint, indistinguishable tone is heard presently, and, behold, there is immediately heard the joyful call of recognition from one not yet in evidence. "I knew it all the time. I wondered how long you would tax our patience, and permit us to remain in this dreadful, yet happy, suspense. Come to us, Ida, and tell us all about your spirit home. Give us a cheering word for mother. Will we get a good price for the property?" etc.

The anxiety which has prevailed up to this time has given way to an awakening. Whoever or whatever it was has come and gone without having given the slightest intimation of its identity, or of recognition of any one present. Whether this silence was due to necessity or design, or what may have been the cause or the object of the visit, may never be known.

Who can say that this was not a cabinet spirit? Incidents something like this have occurred in the experience of nearly all who have attended a variety of seances; and a little reflection will enable one to see how easy it is to be confronted by those who are others than those they purport to be.

The medium may have nothing whatever to do with this and kindred incidents, and I ask, with a hope of a solution, why spirit forces, apparently with deliberation, will appear and represent themselves as our friends, or those in whom we have expressed an interest, when our suspicion of deception and misrepresentation is constantly in evidence. I have asked myself the question, and I commend the consideration of it to those who are earnest seekers of truth, whether spirit forces which appear do so volitionally, or is their visit obligatory, rendered so by conditions which can neither be controlled nor resisted? Do they come as rain, which an atmosphere, surcharged with moisture, compels to fall, or is their coming the result of a desire and will to do so?

They appear at times and in places where they are least expected. They do not always come when they promise to do so, and often great surprise is expressed because of their ability to come.

It is also well known that those of our friends in whom we are most interested, and patiently long to hear from, are the very ones who rarely manifest themselves; while a casual acquaintance, long since forgotten, will frequently exhibit such striking evidences of identity in a manner, and on an occasion, so absolutely unlooked for, as to completely stultify every atom of skepticism which may be in temporary possession of the searching mind of the student. A very noted medium informed me that he had patiently awaited tidings from his mother for more than twelve years without success. It is not clear that it is within the power of any sensitive to ensure the identical appearance of certain ones with whom we seek communion day after day, or at any given time as by appointment.

If our friends do come, their coming is quite fortuitous; and it is not conceivable that they respond, automaton like, to the beck and call of commercialism.

The genuineness of the phenomena is not here doubted except in so far as pertains to the question of identity; for, granting the assumption that the question of identity is difficult of demonstration, and that in the great majority of cases manifestations of spirit power are impositions in this particular, the organic truth still remains and is not in the least affected by this question.

It is here where the influence and utility of the cabinet spirit becomes noticeable.

This convenient and accommodating power, ever present in the atmosphere of every sensitive, is constantly on duty as a sentry to see that the disappointment of the expectant sitter is rendered as mild as possible; and it seems to be no infraction of the comity of spiritual intercourse for the cabinet spirit to supply such deficiency as the peculiar conditions may impose upon certain individual forces whose identity we seek to establish.

Certain persons have the power, or that peculiar quality termed psychic, which enables certain spiritual forces to manifest, but this does not entail the power to produce, ad libitum, the certain friends of those who chance to be in the presence of the sensitive.

I recall an acquaintance who developed into a medium of marked qualifications, who had attended seances for two years without having received a communication of any kind, while others, more free in discussing their private affairs, were constantly in receipt of information.

While instances of this character are remarkable as establishing the complete elimination of mundane influence from any connection with the phenomena, the value of the cabinet spirit is emphasized as a most important factor in a great number of cases, either as a legitimate representative, or in simulation of those whose identity we seek to establish. Instances are not infrequent of an alleged communication of some brilliant mind—Daniel Webster, Robert Ingersoll, Humboldt, Servetus, Socrates, Cicero, Plato, etc., with some blatant ignoramus whose intellectuality, compared with that of his lofty communicant who is alleged to be present, would be lost in the contemplation of comparison.

There can be very little in common between the very intelligent and the very ignorant. Such instances might not unreasonably be attributed to the charity of some accommodating cabinet spirit trifling with the sensibilities of the credulous devotee.

RETURNED HOME.

An Angelic Woman Passed to Spirit Life.

After an earth-visit of two and sixty years, all too brief a call for those who knew her best and loved her most, Mrs. Emeline G. Benson, wife of Theodore S. Benson, of Seattle, Wash., returned to her home in the Spheres of the Soul, on Monday, December 3, 1906. Her illness had extended over a period of some months, yet the termination of her sojourn on earth was quite sudden at the last. She was a great sufferer during her days of invalidism, yet bore her agony with a calm, spiritual fortitude that betokened the strength of soul with which she was endowed. Even when her pain was keenest, she would smile in the solicitous eyes of the dear ones near her, and joke them kindly as she had been wont to do in days when life was young and her hope in earthly expressions was strong.

Never a word of complaint passed her lips, and she discussed the approaching change, of which she was fully aware, with a serene spirit and an unruffled mind. She wanted no plans changed by reason of her exit from earth; no mourning donned; no weeping and wailing for what to her was a glad release from pain. She loved her friends, hence did not wish them to become the victims of needless sorrow.

Mrs. Benson was born in the state of Maine, where the earlier years of her earth-life were passed. At the dawn of womanhood, she took up her residence in the state of Minnesota, where she resided until 1897, when she removed to Seattle, where the remaining years of her life were spent.

She became the wife of Theodore S. Benson, of Anoka, Minn., October 19, 1868, and for thirty-eight years, years of joy and sadness, of meetings and of partings, the currents of the lives of this devoted couple flowed happily and peacefully on together. She was devoted to her husband's interests, while he, in turn, was equally devoted to those of his beloved wife.

She was foremost in all good works, and was happiest when she was doing something to add to the comfort of others. For the weak and the erring she had no sharp, censorious word of condemnation, but always a plea for another chance for them, for another opportunity to strive to become what every soul should be—truly wise and free. In all her dealings with her fellow-men it it can be truly said of her as of Goldsmith's "Village Preacher," that she "allured to brighter worlds, and led the way."

Her philosophy knew neither creed nor social distinction, and was most generous in its bounty, yet she never gave where giving would be an injury, but always where it would be an inspiration to the recipients. In her years of health and strength, she ministered unto those who were in need, rich or poor, high or low, white or colored, without money and without price. Her willing feet never became weary in well-doing, neither did her hands falter when duty called them to action.

Such a life could not fail to be a hallowed one, and a blessing unto all who came into touch with it. Those who forget self in their endeavors to aid others are the saviors of the race. One of the truest of these saviors is our arisen friend, Mrs. Emeline G. Benson. All she did was wrought in secret, for she abhorred display, and grew confused when people tried to thank her for her benedictions. No one, not even her life companion, knew the half she did for the poor and needy, for the sick and afflicted in the community where she lived. Jews, Gentiles, Catholics, and people of no faith whatever paid willing tribute to her memory when they learned that she had gone home.

Mrs. Benson was an original thinker, and a constant, yet careful reader. She familiarized herself with the works of A. J. Davis, with those of Brittan, Sargent, Owen, Denton, Colville, Sinnett, Olcott, and other leading expounders of progressive thought. She early became a convert in Spiritualism, and her noble life is eloquent testimony to the sincerity of her soul in its devotion to her religion. She carried her religion into everything she did, hence was a natural reformer along all lines of effort to which her reasoning mind was attracted.

She was a firm believer in cremation, and was the one person whose individual aid made possible the first crematory in Seattle. Consistent to the last, she decreed that her body should be incinerated as soon as she had withdrawn from it.

She was a firm believer in organization among Spiritualists, and frequently held positions of trust in local and state associations. She was likewise a true friend to the N. S. A., and did what she could to extend its influence whenever she had an opportunity to do so. She possessed a rare and beautiful mediumship that she exercised only in the quiet of the home, and in the presence of those only who were seeking spiritual truth. Never did she descend to trivial things nor to the sordid commercialism that has wrecked so many psychics in days gone by.

Few, if any relatives survive her, but her noble husband and scores of devoted friends are left to miss for a time, her mortal presence. No children were born of this union, hence a double portion of mortal and angelic sympathy should and does flow out to him who now walks alone the remainder of the earth-life journey.

Mr. Benson has been heart and soul with his wife in all her works, so far as he knew of them, and strove to keep step with her in religion, literature and all reform work. He knows the way she has gone, hence faces life anew with a calmly hopeful smile, seeking to complete her works, and to round out his own before he joins her in the realm of the invisible. Loving hands of near and dear friends united with her husband in ministering unto her in her last hours. The funeral services were held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dahnken, in Seattle, On Friday, December 7, at which the writer officiated.

A good woman has returned to her home in the realm "beyond the cloud-rift." Peace to her memory.

SCIENCE AN AID TO RELIGION

Professor Charles R. Barnes of University of Chicago, Decries Old Teachings.

In the November number of the Biblical World, which has just been issued from the University of Chicago Press, there appears an article on "The Contribution of Science to Religious Education," by Charles R. Barnes, a professor in the University of Chicago, in which he asserts that religious education should be supplemented by scientific research and discoveries, instead of having the "blind belief of everything in the Bible, from lid to lid."

He believes the ancient prophets and their contemporaries had a different way of looking at things than we have, or ought to have. He says that religion should be taught in a modern way, and not as it was taught centuries ago.

"Most conspicuous among the material used in the present religious training," says Professor Barnes, "is the study of the folklore tradition, history, poetry, wisdom, prophecy, biography, and letters which make up the Scriptures. Many improvements can be made in method and in the choice and organization to be derived from modern investigation in philosophy, psychology and pedagogy.

"The teacher who, turning his back on reason, holds a theory of inspiration of the Bible, which is sometimes expressed by the allegation, "I believe everything in the Bible, from lid to lid,' can, in my judgment, only do harm as a religious educator, for his every pupil will be forced, sooner or later, to a false choice between reason and blind adherence to dogma, miscalled 'faith.' And when there is a 'conflict' between religion and science the modern man chooses science."

Professor Barnes assumes that the attempt to reconcile Biblical accounts of natural events with scientific ones is simply a waste of time. Such stories as the biblical story of creation, he says, should be treated as an early interpretation used to teach the relation of God to the process, as the writer understood it.

"To identify the days' of creation with geological epochs is absurd," he says, "and more likely to harm faith than to help it, as I can testify from personal experience."—Chicago American.

BLESSING THE COPS.

And Has the Same Any Potential Efficacy as it Emanates from Human Lips.

The New York World, of November 20, 1906, prints the following unique bit of religious intelligence.

"A man of soldierly carriage and clerical garb stepped up to Sixth avenue policeman on a down-town corner yesterday. There was a moment's eager conversation. Then the policeman bared and bowed his head while the priest, with uplifted hand and light in his fine face, paused for a breath and then passed on. It was Father John P. Chidwick, the courageous chaplain of the mattle-ship Maine, and now a police chaplain, delivering personal blessing which Pius X transmits through him to the New York policemen. Father Chidwick is recently back from Europe. At one of his audiences with the Pontiff the kindly thought for the blue-coats was brought out, and the priest was commissioned to give the Pope's blessing to each one he met."

How kindly considerate in the holy father to send his blessing to the New York cops. Then, like "salvation," it was cheap, and was given freely, without money and without price, which is something unusual for the Catholics. But if religious fanaticism can assume a more grotesque and silly attitude, we have yet to hear of it.

A Warning Message.

"Every living thing is alive forevermore."

There is no death. It is progress—no standing still—no stagnation—ever onward is the watchword. Death is a process. The material world was made to people the spiritual world. There is nothing in spirit life but first had its counterpart in this—every spirit had a material birth, otherwise they would not have existed. God Himself was first a substance, and we are all part of that great substance; so we are all sons and daughters of the living God. We all emanated from Him, and finally will return to that from which we came.

There is no time in the spirit life. Time is for the mortal part of us. Time is limited. There is no limit to what we can be in spirit life. The moment a spirit desires to get away from any condition that his deeds done in the body have delivered him to, he is at liberty to depart, higher or lower. There are spirits of both kinds ever on the watch to assist him or her, whichever it may be; and friends, sad as it is to relate, there are spirits who go lower.

Oh, my dear brothers and sisters, heed the warning, have no fellowship with deeds of darkness. Dark days are coming on this nation, and brother will fight against brother, but keep yourselves unspotted—let not your hands be red with the blood of your fellow-creature. "Thou shalt not kill. Whoso taketh that which he cannot restore will not be blameless."

Friends, this nation is tottering; it will fall. From the beginning it was ever so; yet the nations will not see. Oh, how blind; willfully blind, they are, not to see their fate written in the pages of the past. "What has been will be." How true it is of men and nations, that history will repeat itself. Be warned, friends, an evil time is coming to those around you, but go you not with them.

Be faithful and ye shall be kept by your spirit friends from the troubles that will fall upon those who will not learn that oil and water will not mix.

Harbor not the evil thought of revenge, for it will become a living deed, and fall on you and crush you. Be warned, and keep your hands clean;

Good Bye; with love.

Remarkable Invention.

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument, which the inventors have patented, is called "Actina"—a trade-mark word.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for most forms of disease, Cataracts, pterygi, and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision improved or restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles.

"Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has affected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give absolutely a free trial. They want everyone interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of "Actina." One will be sent on trial postpaid.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of disease—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has affected, and all about the responsibility of its owners—all is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept, 342R, 920 Walnut Street Kansas City, Mo.

Smuel A. Huntington of Malden, Mass., writes of the Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, Louise Hall, 138 Pleasant street: "The president presided at both services, Dec. 30, with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. At the afternoon circle Mr. Graham of Cambridge, made a very interesting address on 'Our Spiritual Work,' after which both Mr. Graham and Mrs. R. P. Morton gave many very fine messages. The evening meeting opened with a fine praise service, reading of scripture, and invocation. Mrs. Nellie E. Abbot of South Lwrence, Mass., was introduced as the speaker and message bearer of the evening. She prefaced her work by reading a beautiful poem entitled 'There Is No Death,' after which she chose for her theme, 'The Philosophy of Spiritualism,' and after making an interesting address, devoted over half an hour to giving many fine messages. Mrs. Maud F. Litch of Lynn, Mass., will be our speaker on Jan. 6, 1907, and Prof. McCurda of same city, on January 13, and Rev. F. A. Wiggin of Boston, every Thursday evening during January, 1907."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society enjoyed a fine spiritual discourse by Bro. R. Gilray. He pleased all who heard him. Mr. Fraser gave many readings from articles placed on the altar, followed by Mrs. Harper. Mr. Bunday, who three years ago attended our meetings, then a skeptic, was called on and gave a number of recognized messages. Test circles will be held every Tuesday evening as usual, and the next dance will be on January 10. All are invited. Anyone wishing to consult Brother Gilray on things spiritual can find him at 2979 Cottage Grove avenue."

H. E. Dowd of Toledo, Ohio, writes: "The Independent Association of Spiritualists is progressing very nicely in its new home. We had Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit with us the first three Sundays of December. She is a great favorite with the Toledo people, and was greeted by large audiences at all her meetings, both afternoon and evening. We will have with us for the Sundays of January and February, Mrs. Georgina Ripley of Toronto. Mrs. Ripley is a very fine speaker, and many are looking forward to her coming with pleasure."

Correspondent writes: "The audiences at the meetings of the Christian Spiritualists, held at Van Buren Opera House, Madison street and California avenue, have been doubly blessed during December through the excellent work done by Mrs. Hamilton Gill. Messages of love, comfort and encouragement, Sunday after Sunday from those passed on, have given the demonstrated knowledge of immortality to all. J. W. Gill lectured on the following dates, Dec. 9, 16 and 23, his subjects being 'Theosophy,' 'Brahminism' and 'The Hindu Trinity—Brahma the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver and Siva the Destroyer.' Dec. 30, Brother Warner assisted Mrs. Gill and gave a very instructive address on 'The Old and New Year.' We must impress on the minds of Spiritualists and the public in general the necessity of bringing in their friends to all spiritual meetings, so that all mediums may feel encouraged to go on with the good work, as no one but a medium can tell what trials and tribulations they have to pass through while on earth to prepare themselves for the great work for which their spirit controls have chosen them to do."

John McGrail writes from Cortland, N. Y.: "The Rev. Mary E. Clark of Syracuse, has conducted Spiritualist services here since Sept. 27, 1906. Her work is very acceptable to the people of Cortland, as is evidenced by the large audiences which she addresses twice every Sunday, at 3 and 7 p. m. Her addresses are delightful to those who believe, and are marvels to those who doubt. Her tests are very clear, and in that regard she shows improvement at every service, and in time will take her place with the foremost test mediums. She remains over a day or two in the city and gives many private readings. We hope to keep her here all winter."

R. Miles Robinson writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "My trip to the Pacific Coast had been foretold to me by Mrs. May Pepper of Brooklyn, nine or ten months before it occurred, when she gave me a remarkable test, in respect to my deceased children, all of whose names she gave correctly, and stated that the youngest had grown up entirely in the spirit world, and had received his name in a very peculiar way, which was correct in every particular, and Mrs. Pepper could not possibly have heard anything about it, and I have reason to believe she did not know the least thing in reference to any member of my family. I trust you will continue your war on 'fake' mediums till not one is left to cheat searchers after truth."

G. L. Willms writes: "The members of the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, had the pleasure of greeting a large audience on the night of Dec. 30, at its hall, consisting principally of skeptics, yet the best of harmony prevailed. Sister C. Mueller gave a fine lecture. Subject, 'Going Out of the Old Into the New.' It was very interesting. Brother Vanderhoogt also gave a short lecture which was well received. Sister Mueller then gave very fine messages, which were recognized. She also gave readings of articles. The Progressive Thinker was also on hand for the evening, and were all taken."

Some one sends us several messages, evidently written independently by spirits on slates, yet the name of the medium is not given, nor the post-office address. Will the writer give the name of the medium, and post-office address, with full particulars?

The Golden Star Center Spiritual Society meets at Star Lodge Hall, No. 378 S. Western avenue, Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m. Conducted by the veteran workers, Brother Coe and Prof. McLane.

Albert P. Blinn, pastor of the First Spiritual Union, Norwich, Conn., writes: "On Sunday, Dec. 23, services were held in dedication of the new pipe organ, presented to this society by Mrs. Annie M. Cobb in memory of her son, Lloyd M. Cobb, Jr., one of the former contributors of The Progressive Thinker. In addition to the organ a very handsome Oriental rug was presented by Mrs. Nathan Brewster, an organ screen by Mrs. Charles A. Dowsett and a chancel railing and choir rack by Mrs. Albert P. Blinn. Large audiences were in attendance at both services and the new electric lights contributed by Wm. F. Bogue, made a great improvement in the appearance of the building. On Thursday evening, Dec. 27, we held our annual Christmas festival, at which the members of the Union, Helping Hands and Lyceum were present. The vestry was prettily decorated for the occasion and the tree with its burden of remembrances for young and old, and its varied colored electric lights peeping out from among the foliage, presented a very attractive appearance. An entertainment by the young people was given, the presents were distributed, after which cake, cocoa, candy and pop corn balls were served and a general social time was enjoyed. Hereafter, on the first Sunday evening of each month an organ recital of half an hour will be given in connection with the service."

The Independent Order of the Mystic Brotherhood meets at 70 Adams street, on the first and third Wednesday evenings of each month. Any information desired concerning the order will be cheerfully given by addressing J. A. Toren, 4309 Calumet avenue, Chicago.

Correspondent writes: "The Spiritualist Society of Hardwick, Vt., met the 29th of December, at the home of the president, Mr. Charles Jennings, and a very interesting lecture was given by Mrs. Laura Cummings. The speaker was introduced by the secretary, Mr. George Hill, who did so by giving a beautiful inspirational poem. The house was well filled, and it was decided to continue the meetings from week to week, hoping the old Spiritualists and other liberal-minded people will assist in reviving the old interest in Spiritualistic work here in town. Our state convention is to be held at Montpelier, January 19, 20 and 21, and we think and hope some action will be taken towards affiliating with the N. S. A. As organization is the watchword along all lines, we believe this opportunity should not pass without thoroughly considering this question."

Mary B. Hill, secretary, writes: "The Band of Harmony will give an entertainment commencing at 8 o'clock, January 17, 1907, in Hall 512, Masonic Temple; price of tickets, 25 cents, which includes coffee checks for those who bring supper. Several of Chicago's gifted artists will participate, among them Mrs. Gilbert, who will conduct the entertainment, and Miss Nichols, our own sweet singer will take part. Miss Dennis will give a rare selection on the violin, and others will participate. The programme has been arranged with much care. There will be the usual meeting of the Band of Harmony in the afternoon, which begins at 3:30 o'clock. Those who fail to be with us will miss a rare treat."

Dr. Crapsey, the heretic, is tearing Orthodoxy into shreds. He lectures on the following subjects: "The Intellectual Breakdown, the Conflict Between Creed and Knowledge;" "The moral Breakdown, the Conflict Between Dogma and Conscience;" "The Political and Social Breakdown;" "The Churches a Disturbing Influence in Politics, a Divisive Force in Society;" "The Great Reconstruction—This Is the Way of Life."

Dr. Jose Montoya writes from Wichita, Kans.: "Much interest is being shown in the work here, especially in supporting honest mediums and their work, and eliminating the spurious and questionable. This step is well taken and should be followed by all cities as it tends to purify and uplift the noble banner of Spiritualism in our nation. Wishing The Progressive Thinker a happy and successful new year to its glorious career, we now enter the silence."

Frank T. Ripley will remain in Battle Creek, Mich., through January and February. He can be engaged for lectures and messages, week-evenings anywhere in the state. He will officiate at funerals. Phone 1032. Address all letters to him in care of General Delivery, Battle Creek, Mich.

Correspondent writes from San Diego, Cal.: "Mr. Christian H. Martinson and Miss Regina I. Boeckh were united in marriage at San Diego, Cal., by Harry J. Moore, Thursday evening, Dec. 27. Brother Moore is one of the most popular of the ministers of San Diego, as this, the second marriage within a month, will testify. He delivered a funeral oration over the body of a Mr. Prebble who was a member of the Woodmen of the World, and now that order is taking him into their fraternity as an active member with $1,000 insurance."

Miss Spaulding writes from Lansing, Mich.: "I feel it a pleasure to report the earnest and faithful work of the Spiritualist Society in Lansing, Mich. Every Sunday it has a meeting in the home of our good sister and noble worker, Mrs. May Ayers, at 2:30 o'clock, led by their able president, Mr. Chas. A. Clement. The meetings are very interesting, the members taking an active part in each subject that is presented. They are not large in numbers, but work quietly and earnestly, and success will crown their efforts. I feel I must not omit the Ladies' Aid Society, the grand good work it is doing is worthy of much praise. It has a nice sum laid by and is adding to it week by week, and soon out of the darkness of 'No Home' will come forth a new Temple where the members will all be given the freedom so long needed. Daily striving always brings rewards pure and true."

THE FIRST SOCIETY of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists, Alex Caird, president, will dedicate Hygeia Hall, corner Ogden avenue and Robey street, Sunday, January 13. The Ladies' Industrial Union meets in Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, every Thursday.

Mrs. S. Faust writes from Philadelphia, Pa., of the Thompson Street Church, the Second Association of Spiritualists: "We have had a very successful year. The closing of 1906 shows greater gain financially and in membership. In the past three months we have had two Mediums' Rally, from which we have realized a goodly sum. The rostrum was occupied by the mediums, and auditorium was filled, even to the gallery. December 31, we had a watch meeting, and the church was filled with anxious hearts waiting for a message from some loved one. There were communications from quite a number of mediums, and singing by the children, after which a lunch was served free to all present. At the stroke of twelve they sang 'Happy Greeting to All,' and gave a hearty hand shake, too, wishing all a happy New Year."

Martha Woolsey writes from Indianapolis, Ind.: "For the months of November and December I rented the church and engaged speakers and message bearers. For November I had Mrs. Josephine Ropp. Her name is all that is wanted to fill every seat in the house. Mrs. Allie Buhland was inspirational speaker. Mrs. Buhland charms her hearers with her beautiful personality and it is a treat to hear her. Mrs. Ropp never fails to please with her convincing messages, and words of comfort from spirit friends. During the month of December, J. G. Hinderer from Anderson, gave a trumpet seance in the light. The house was crowded. The demonstrations and independent voices were wonderful. He certainly is fine. Next Sunday, Mr. Grimshaw of St. Louis will be speaker under the auspices of the Indiana State Association. I do not know the message bearer, but I wish them unbounded success in the good work. During the few months I had the church the house was well filled, and great interest manifested in the cause of Spiritualism, and hope it may increase and bear abundant fruit."

D. G. Hill writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society had for Sunday, Dec. 30, its usual fine audiences, both afternoon and evening. For the evening our speaker, the Hon. Charles Hughes, held the closest attention of his listeners for nearly one hour in that splendid line of thought that applied so directly to the present conditions of life as we have to live it here on the earth plane. The message bearers were Prof. McLane and Mrs. Nora E. Hill. Now the especial report your correspondent has to make is regarding the Monday evening meeting, or New Year's eve watch-meeting. Our hall was taxed to its utmost; many had to stand. Over 225 gathered to enjoy the pleasures of the lecture and entertainment. The programme was fine, with Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley as speaker, and Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Howes, Mrs. Jennie Staner Adams, Mrs. Susie Thompson and Mr. Schmidt as message bearers, interspersed with songs and recitations, with thirty minutes of social visiting, after which Mrs. Hill with her short and splendid talk, closed the exist of 1906, and ushered in the present 1907. These services were the closing of the first year's work for the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society."

Levi Oren writes from Corvallis, Oregon: "I am thinking of making a change in my location, and I have about decided to go to New Mexico. I would like to know whether there is a colony or neighborhood of Spiritualists in the territory, or if I could get a few liberals or Spiritualists to join me I would locate in the Tularosa Valley that is represented to be 40 miles wide and over 100 miles long, in the southwest part of the territory, and an average of 4,000 feet above the sea level. Write to me."

Georgia Gladys Cooley leaves Chicago to serve the society at Buffalo, N. Y., for the month of January. She will also give three meetings for the society at Meadville, Pa., including Sunday, Feb. 3. Her many friends in Chicago regret her departure, but previous engagements must be fulfilled.

Lisla C. Hinkelmann, secretary, writes from Detroit, Mich.: "We don't want the readers of The Progressive Thinker to imagine, because they do not hear from us very often, that we are dead. Indeed we are very much alive and very active. Our Society, First Church of the Soul, is working hard and in the last three years has made wonderful progress, both financially and in attendance. We now have a Children's lyceum, the only one in Detroit, and have named it the First Progressive Sunflower Lyceum of Detroit, Mich. The children, about twenty-five in number, range in age from three to fourteen years and are one and all deeply interested in their work. In fact, every Sunday some one of them will bring a visitor, showing an inclination to interest their friends. At present they meet at the pastor's home, but we anticipate that they will soon be on a financial basis where they can rent the hall for Sunday afternoons. On Sunday evening, Dec. 30, the children had an entertainment and Christmas tree in the hall, and it would be a most difficult matter to say who were the most pleased, children or their parents and friends. In spite of a very disagreeable night, all the children were in their places and we who came to listen were favored with a most delightful programme. I know there were a number at the meeting who were very much surprised at the talent displayed by the little ones, especially the piano solos by Stanley Iccleburg and Mabel Gittschlag, the violin duets by Gladys and Fredie Waterland, also the sweetly rendered song, 'Holy Night,' by Katie Burns, and songs by Mabel Gittschlag, Gladys Waterland, Johnnie Wetter, Fredie Waterland and Harry Gittschlag. We feel justly proud of the little ones and their work, also of our pastor, Rev. Laura L. Crawford, who has brought the lyceum to its present basis."

A FULL REPORT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS STATE SPIRITUALIST CONVENTION WILL APPEAR NEXT WEEK.

A. F. Seg writes from Meadville, Pa.: "The Independent Spiritualists" Society, at its annual meeting, held Sunday evening, December 30, at Odd Fellows Temple, elected the following officers: President, A. Gaston; first vice-president, A. F. Seg; second vice-president, B. W. Morrison; treasurer, F. D. Gaston; secretary, W. W. Kincaid. The officers are members of the Board of Trustees, with Lafayette Barre and John H. Wygent. They have been holding very good meetings, and have aroused great interest in the work. We had Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood engaged for a series of metings, commencing January 6, but owing to his sudden sickness in Buffalo he had to cancel his dates with us—a great disappointment, surely. But we can see the silver lining of our disappointment in the promise of Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, to be with us the first of February. She is a gifted woman, and has endeared herself to all who have heard her. Long may she live to continue her good work. Our society is gaining in popularity and numbers; true, our growth is slow, but sure. With best wishes for The Progressive Thinker and its many readers, I am for truth and yours truly, with two new subscribers, for the best Spiritualist paper of all."

C. L. Hatch writes from 9 Appleton street, Boston, Mass. "The annual meeting of the First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society was held Friday, January 4, 1907. In the absence of the president, Vice-president Carrie L. Hatch filled the chair. The reports of committees were heard, also the secretary's report for the year which was very able, and showed good work for the year, with 100 members in good standing upon the roll. The treasurer reported $37.50 in general fund after all bills were paid, and $1,000 in bank. Auditing committee reported books, bills and vouchers examined and fund all correct in every respect. The reports were all accepted. A vote of thanks was extended to all officers for their efficient work during the past year. The following officers were elected for 1907: President, Mrs. M. E. A. Allbe; vice-president, Carrie L. Hatch; secretary, Annie J. Haynes; treasurer, Nina G. Pierce; directors, Mrs. A. F. Butterfield, Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse, Mrs. Abbie Foster, Mrs. C. C. Wiggin and Mrs. Mary Cheeney; musician, Mrs. Mary F. Lovering. In the evening a very interesting meeting was held. Those taking part were Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, one of our gifted speakers; Mrs. Dinen, Mrs. I. Sears-Hill, Mrs. at Freemont, Miss Jennie Rhind, and Mrs. S. C. Cunningham. The vice-president thanked all for their kindness in helping to make the meeting a success, and urged all members to be present at the business meeting; also a vote of thanks extended to The Progressive Thinker for courtesies extended. This society meets every Friday night, with supper served at 6:15 o'clock."

SPIRIT RETURN.

It Comes to Each One When Conditions Are Favorable—A Girl Gets Divine "Gift of Tongues."

To a Cleveland, Ohio, woman, (as a press dispatch to the Chicago Examiner) according to her belief, has been vouchsafed the divine gift of tongues. The favored one is Miss Mary Corlett, for three years a teacher in the Warren School.

Miss Corlett is the daughter of Mrs. Mary Corlett, who lives at the corner of Union avenue and Day street.

That this manifestation of divine power is parallel to that given the disciples at the Pentecostal feast, and presages the near approach of the end of the world, is the expressed belief of the Rev. J. Walter Malone, former pastor of Miss Corlett.

One evening the gift of tongues came to Miss Crew, who began talking at 6 o'clock in the evening and continued until after midnight. Miss Corlett's sister, who was visiting the school, listened to her remarks for more than two hours. She could not understand a word that was said, though she described it as the most eloquent, and wonderful language she had ever heard.

Some time after she had retired for the night and had fallen asleep she was awakened and told that the gift of tongues had come to her sister Mary. She did not hear Mary talk, but in the morning the Rev. Mr. Lupton told her that he was certainly amazed by what he had heard and seen. He said that Mary had conversed in an unknown tongue for several hours and without apparent effort.

Miss Corlett was delighted when she received the power to speak.

"I had prayed long and devotedly," she said, "for the power and while I lay prostrate upon the floor it came to me. When I had recovered from the effects of the first manifestation I was enabled, through the power that God had given me, to speak five different languages. I cannot interpret all that I speak, but I am able to understand some of the sentences. In time I will be able to understand all, for God does not give us any language that we will be unable to understand."

A Miss Mabel Lee, a student, and Rev. Mr. Lupton also have received the "gift."

A NOTABLE WEDDING.

Married, by the Rt. Rev. Garnett Bishop, of Dallas, Tex., Dec. 3, 1906, Milo Wilson Porter of Globe, Arizona, to Delta Dunlap.

Mr. Porter is the son of Milo Porter of Lombard, and Isa Wilson Kayner; grandson of the old pioneer Spiritualist, E. V. Wilson.

Years ago, Mr. Francis, you published an account of Mr. Porter's and my wedding at the old farm, so to-day I send in my son's notice.

ISA WILSON KAYNER.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to the higher life, Frank Melvin Shaw, of Elkhart, Ind. This estimable young man was scarcely twenty years old, and was the support of quite a large family, who remain to mourn his departure. He was an employe of the Lake Shore Railway Co., and was killed near Elkhart, while fulfilling his duties. He had been for years an ardent Spiritualist, as are the other members of his family. A father, mother and several brothers and sisters, and many friends feel deeply the loss sustained by the absence of the physical presence, yet realize that he still lives. Funeral services by the writer.

WILL J. ERWOOD.

Geo. W. Kimmel, of Wabash, Ind., for many years a strong Spiritualist, and for the last several years a very excellent trumpet medium, working quietly, responded to the call to come up higher, very suddenly. Going to bed in excellent health, he awakened his wife about 4 o'clock in the morning, and in just a few minutes had taken his departure. In compliance with his wishes the body was taken to Fort Wayne and cremated, and the ashes scattered in the yard surrounding the house that had for many years been his home. Mrs. Kimmel and many close relatives and friends, while feeling his absence, bade him "God-speed" courageously. Services conducted by

WILL J. ERWOOD.

Miss Ellen M. Hoben, aged 65 years, passed away at the Medium's Home, in Lansing, Mich. Hers was a bright mind, and keenly awake to all advancement in thought and science. On December 24, she was stricken with paralysis, and passed into the Great Beyond, Dec. 31. A very impressive service was held at the Home, conducted by Mrs. Lilian Shipman of Lansing. There were no relatives to mourn her transition, but many friends paid their last respects to her whose bright face and ready knowledge had lightened other hearts.

MISS SPAULDING.

Passed to spirit life, Mr. Samuel Lesher, age 80, January, 1, 1907, at Mancelona, Mich. According to his request, his daughter, Mrs. Jennie Martin, gave the address at the house in a touching and pleasing manner. Mrs. D. A. Morrill gave the address at the church in a strong argument in favor of the continuity of life and spirit return. Hon. L. B. Hudson made some remarks from the standpoint of a citizen and soldier, saying that Mr. Lesher was well known as an honest, sincere man. Mr. Lesher was widely known as a pioneer Spiritualist, and worker at the Snowflake Camp, near General Lake.

Colorado Talks Back.

The chairmen of the Republican and Democratic State Central Committees of Colorado have denied the statements set forth in a widely copied dispatch from Denver, to the effect that woman suffrage is a failure in that state. Republican Chairman Vivian says the "interview with recognized leaders of the dominant parties" took place in the too imaginative brain of some reporter.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"Thinker": Q. Will scientists ever admit that spirit, not matter is the initial in causation?

A. There are many of the more advanced scientists who already make this admission. In the conflict with the materialistic views which have been advocated by leading lights, making the phenomena of life entirely dependent and result of physical causes, there is springing up a new school which takes the other side, and recognizes in the manifestations of life, a cause behind the material atoms. In other words the affirmations of the spiritual philosophy are being outwrought and demonstrated by physical scientists.

Among the latest examples of those who have expressed new views, new to physical scientists, Dr. W. H. Thompson has perhaps taken the most advanced position. He is considered one of the most authoritative experts on the brain. He was president of the New York Academy of Medicine, and Professor of Practice of Medicine and diseases of the Nervous System in New York University Medical College, and is now physician to the Roosevelt and Manhattan Red Cross hospitals. His opinions are therefore supported by life-long study and experience.

Those who contend that mind is the product of the brain, and can only exist when there is brain to manifest it, thereby making its existence after the death of the brain impossible, are met by Dr. Thompson with the unequivocal statement, drawn from his lengthy observations, that anatomy and physiology show the brain to be AN INSTRUMENT OF THE PERSONALITY, AND NEVER ANYTHING OTHERWISE. THIS PERSONALITY IS AS DISTINCT FROM THE BRAIN AS THE PLAYER IS FROM THE INSTRUMENT HE USES. The brain does not make this personality but this personality fashions the brain. It is the personality which makes human brain matter the instrument of the thinking personality.

On the basis of all known facts, it may be taken as true that brain matter has not in itself the properties of mind. IT CANNOT THINK WITHOUT A THINKER. What this "thinker" is, Dr. Thompson says is a "mystery."

So it is and must remain to those who approach the subject from his direction. He leaves the solution in abeyance. He has approached the border of spiritual interpretation but apparently thinks from the only admissible explanation: The "Thinker" independent of brain matter, who fashions the cells in structural arrangement that enables it to express itself through and by its means is a spirit.

But the Spiritualist would modify this conclusion by affirming the mutual relation of spirit and matter in the building and sustenance of the dual being.

R. C. Richardson: Q. What do spirits say about the possibility of reaching the North Pole, and as to that feat ever being performed.

A. With each attempt to reach the pole, similar questions have come to this department, and have received answers which have not required modification by the events. The surface of the ice sheet which envelops the remaining distance from the highest attitude reached to the pole, is so rough and broken that it presents an insurmountable obstacle to sledges or any available means of transportation. The distance is not great and a path might be hewn through the ice-blocks, but there is not time for this great labor. The short summer is the only available time, and the daring explorers must not tarry in their flight from the approaching winter.

E. F. B.: Q. How can will power be cultivated?

A. It may be said that education from the beginning to the end, is cultivation of the will. The first effort of the infant to stretch out its hand, is an assertion of the will to gain mastery of the body. The training of the athlete, whose every muscle is under instantaneous control is the culmination of this process of physical education. In the realm of ideas the process is similar. Study gives concentration, and the more perfect this concentration the deeper the penetration of the subject. To perfect the mind in this direction is one of the leading objects of all true education, and hence it makes little difference what the means are, language, mathematics, science, it is not the matter learned, but the effect on the mind of the study. Really there is slight distinction between the profound state of abstraction into which the student passes and that of self-hypnotism. Some writers call this state "attention" and make genius itself dependent on this ability to take hold of the thread of a subject and hold fast to it in its intricacies, untangling to the end. Concentration is more expressive of the state into which the profound student always falls when absorbed in his work, and becomes "absent-minded."

The ability of the will to hold the thoughts thus concentrated, is priceless to the possessor. By it the most desirable sensitiveness is reached, wherein the subject is receptive to thought-waves in the psychic ether, and receptive instrument to receive the thoughts emanating from all minds of mortal, or spirit on the engaging subject. The correct understanding of what this concentration of the will means, opens undreamed of possibilities for the future. It is the true method of cultivating the highest state of impressibility, parallel with intellectual strength.

As popularly used, the term will, means the sum of mental activities. Hence its cultivation means the cultivation of the harmonious activity of all faculties and the constant effort to place the higher in just ascendancy. In this manner it may gain mastery over the body, defying the pangs of hunger, of fever, thirst, and the keenest arrows of pain. It triumphs in the ascendancy of the spirit over the body.

Student: Q. Is it possible to square the circle?

A. This question means: Is it possible by mathematical calculations, or measurement, to determine the exact square having the same area as a given circle; or the ratio of the diameter to the circumference. This ratio is impossible to determine, for it ends in an infinitely prolonged decimal. Perhaps few questions have called forth more effort, and the "circle squarer" has passed into a designation of those who pursue impossible schemes. Yet there are those who pursue this will-o'-the-wisp, as there are those who continue to work on the once famous "perpetual motion," the philosopher's stone, fountain of perpetual youth, the universal solvent, the transmutation of baser metals into gold—what a mirage these have cast on the mental horizon of the past, and because of ignorance led their devotees over the barren wastes.

Of late the spirit of the old alchemist appears to have revived under the fostering hand of Science, and in "radium" we have the evidence as claimed by its promoters, of transmutation of one element into another, and of inexhaustible energy, the sought-for perpetual motion.

REV. G. C. LOVE.

His Work in Various Parts of the West.

To the Editor:—I am once more in my home after an absence of a little over twelve weeks, beginning in Baker City, Ore., and winding up my work in North Yakima, Washington. I held sixty or more meetings and circles after leaving my home to attend the N. S. A. convention. My work on the trip to Chicago and return was as follows: Baker City, Ore., two Sundays; Omaha, Neb., two Sundays; Chicago, Hyde Park Society, one Sunday, and returning, Omaha, Neb., two Sundays; Sheridan, Wyo., two Sundays; Billings, Montana, two Sundays, and North Yakima, Washington, two Sundays.

Everywhere the people seemed loth to let me go to my next appointment, and I had to promise some of them to come their way again in the springtime or early summer.

There were many places beside those mentioned that wished my services, but for lack of time I had to decline their offers, and I will visit them on my coming trip in the year 1907.

Rev. Moses Hull and his good wife arrived in Billings, Mont., just as I finished my engagement there, and they came to do battle in the cause of Truth.

I am informed they are now in the city of Portland, Oregon, and on last Sunday the hall of the First Spiritual Society had a crowded house to hear them.

To those who have never heard these veterans in the cause of Spiritualism, I would say, hear them by all means, and I need say nothing to those who have listened to their lectures, for they must know them as good lecturers, and full of good sound logic. May their power for good ever grow in strength.

I am thankful to my friends in the various places where I have held meetings for all the kind words printed in your columns, and hope that I have accomplished some good in each place, for I certainly had the good will of those interested in the cause in every meeting and circle during my trip to and from the convention.

I hope soon to begin mapping out my next route to your city, and to those who want my services I would say, let me hear from you at your earliest convenience, so I can make my arrangements to come your way if possible. Let me know how many Sundays you will need me, and what you can do in the way of finances.

Remember, that every time I get on the cars, the conductor comes along with his "Get your tickets ready," and to do that I have to buy the ticket before I get on the train.

If I visit your society or town, it will be at your request, and for your benefit, so let me know how urgent your call is, and we can soon complete the arrangements.

I lecture and give tests, clairvoyance being my chief phase of mediumship. I also hold circles and give private readings.

Just write Harrison D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., regarding my work. His address is now, Seattle, Washington. My address,

It is fully answered in "Mediumship, and Its Laws, Its Conditions and Cultivation," by Hudson Tuttle. Price 35 cents. Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

The Arrests in Seattle.

President Barrett Explains His Position on Mediumship.

My attention has been called to a very instructive article from the pen of Brother R. F. Little, of Seattle, Wash., with reference to the recent arrests of several mediums in that city. Usually Brother Little and the writer are in full accord upon the majority of questions pertaining to Spiritualism and Spiritualists, and it is a matter of surprise when I find my views varying even in one case from those held by one who has done such excellent work for our Cause as has Brother Little. In my article of Aug. 18, I gave what appeared to me to be the substantial facts in the then pending case. I regret nothing save the error into which she had no doubt innocently fallen with regard to advertising. I believe the lady to be a most excellent woman and a medium, but neither one or both of these important facts will excuse her from the results of a mistake.

If I have been misinformed regarding this matter I shall seek to make full amends at the earliest possible moment. I was not present at the trial, and have to depend upon the testimony of those who were there, likewise upon what the prosecuting attorney and the judge upon the bench really said in regard to the case. In no respect did these gentlemen hold Spiritualism up to ridicule, or attack the medium. The words quoted by Brother Little may have been uttered by the court, but were the full text to be given, it would place the matter in an entirely different light. Here are, in substance, some words used by the judge on that occasion: "Ninety-nine out of every hundred people seeing this card, and patronizing the lady would do so under the impression they were going to have their fortunes told, or receive helpful information on some chance in business. The one-hundredth person would be a Spiritualist who would know how to receive and apply what he got." Quoting from memory, after four months' time, I think the card in question read, "Miss ——— ———, Spiritual Medium. Mining and Ores a Speciality. Mediumship Developed." In view of that wording, what other language could an honest judge upon the bench be expected to use? For my part I see nothing out of the way in what he said. It was to be expected, and even severer terms, in view of the wording of the card.

Brother Little lays stress upon the supposed issue of the act of giving the sitting, constituting the offense in the case. Here again we should not be misled by the seeming, but hold steadfastly for the real facts in the case. The law of the State of Washington provides certain penalties for fortune-telling and kindred ills. It defines fortune telling and those ills very clearly. Now, if a person claims to be able to assay ores, locate mines and develop psychic power (a factor not recognized in law) and gives sittings accordingly, would not the act of giving such sittings constitute an offense against the law, regardless of the method of advertising, or taking compensation for the sittings? Would not these peculiar claims be considered branches of fortune-telling, if not fortune-telling itself? Does any one suppose that a medium would be molested in his work if he sticks to the spiritual phases thereof and lets the business side alone?

This brings up the important question as to the kind of sittings given by mediums in their private work. When they deal wholly with monetary affairs or property of any sort, the act of giving such sittings would come within the reach of the law of the state. Fortune-tellers claim to be able for pay, of course, to give their patrons points on certain commercial transactions that would redound to their material benefit. Shrewd guessing, tricks of different kinds, physiognomy reading, etc., constitute their entire stock of means by which they give these points. Mediums are supposed to be under the control of spirits in their work, hence speak not of themselves but as the vehicles of expression for outside intelligences. When these mediums and their controls do precisely the same things the fortune-tellers do in almost the same way, who is to determine the difference between them? Can we expect the court to do it?

The law against fortune-telling was enacted to protect innocent people from being victimized by unscrupulous men and women and exploited out of their hard-earned money. When mediums lead men and women into business speculations, or presume to give advice on commercial subjects, I fail to see any moral difference between these two classes. Supposing the medium tells the truth to his sitters; is he not dealing in futures and advising in business, precisely as the law declares shall not be done? Who, then, is to blame—the person who breaks the law, or the one who enforces it?

Take the contemptible "spotter" who obtained a sitting with the medium. It appears that what she gave him was a commingling of spiritual and business matters. Had he received only a word of comfort from some departed friend, or some specific spiritual test, I am convinced that the medium would have had no trouble. It is the everlasting attempt to forecast the future, and to tell of some great success in business, that result in trouble for our mediums. Let them deal only with spiritual things and they will never be molested.

Some "business mediums(?)" are protected in their work by police and political power. This was true of those mediums who were employed by such men as Mark Hanna in politics and Charles Lane in finance. I am not denying the possibility of excarnate beings controlling mediums and dealing with business affairs. Were Jay Gould and Russell Sage to control mediums, it would be very natural for them to speak wholly of business affairs. My contention is that reliable mediums should keep better company, by refusing to be controlled by any such people in the mortal, or out of the mortal. They would never then be in danger of "running amuck" of the law.

Spiritualism would be on trial were those under discussion and the others named by Brother Little to be arraigned for giving a spiritual message of comfort, consolation or psychic demonstration. If the act of doing one or all of these things and cognate matters be the point at issue, then Spiritualism is indeed on trial. But is this true? Has Judge Davis, Judge Albertson or any other Judge ever ruled that spirit messages, or spiritual consolation constituted an offense against the law? If so, I want to see the wording of that ruling. If Then we have a good, clean case for the Supreme Court of the United States to decide upon its merits. The courts will find that hundreds of thousands of intelligent men and women hold to spirit communion as an essential part of their religion. To deny them this prerogative would be to violate the Constitution of the United States where it says that Congress shall make no law respecting religion, nor the full exercise thereof. It would touch the Roman Catholics and Episcopalians in a tender spot, and cause an upheaval in the United States such as has never been known or dreamed. The issue in a nut-shell is this: Is spiritual mediumship on trial in these cases, or commercial mediumship? If the former, then the rights of the Spiritualists of the nation are being invaded, and for one, I should feel like fighting until I drop in my tracks in defense of spiritual mediumship and spiritual mediums. I should feel to let commercialism in mediumship take care of itself, and fight its own battles.

But there is no issue between Bro. Little and myself on this subject of commercialism. His contention is that the act of giving a spiritual reading is on trial in this case, and not the advertising, nor other questions allied with it. My contention is that the spiritual issue did not influence the court at all, but that the commercial elements completely obscured the former, so that the rulings were made in accordance with the material facts advanced. If spirits have nothing better to do than to give points on horse races, tips on the stock markets, hunt up lost husbands, or to find oil and gas wells, or to locate mines, they had better retire into some remote corner of the spirit world and stay there. This world and its sorrowing inhabitants would be better off without them. I hold that it is the duty of the Spiritualists of America to defend to the last drop of their blood all spiritual mediums who devote themselves to spiritual things, and to put the seal of their disapproval upon every form of commercialism in mediumship as now known.

No doubt many a medium is impressed to touch upon material affairs when giving a sitting. There should be no objection to his doing so, nor is there anything unspiritual or irreligious in the act, so long as it is only an incident in the reading, and not the main feature of the reading. If Jones goes to a medium to see if he should buy a certain farm, or a certain block of stock, he makes the commercial element the main object of his inquiry, and lays the medium liable to the charge of being a fortune-teller. If, however, Jones seeks a medium to receive a message from his father, or proof that his mother lives beyond the grave, and should be told incidentally that the purchase of the farm or stock would be a good thing or otherwise, he then makes the spiritual element the predominating factor in his search, and avoids the baneful influence of commercialism both for the medium and himself.

In The Progressive Thinker of December 8th the advertisement of the pretended medium, "Foo Lun," is a case in point. So long as Spiritualists patronize such scoundrels, apologize for them, and declare that their wares are genuine, just so long may we expect Spiritualism to remain in disrepute and its followers to be looked upon as wanting in intelligence, by the enlightened people of the world.

One thing should be remembered by all intelligent people: If these commercialists really possess such wonderful powers, if they can discover hidden treasure for others, if they can add to the riches of their patrons, why do they not find riches and treasure for themselves? It is only logical to hold that what is true in one instance would likewise be true in respect to themselves. Such as "Foo Lun," Peter West, A. E. Conway, et all., do get rich, but they do it by deliberately robbing their patrons in the name of their sainted dead, and never by the discovery of mines nor of other treasure.

"But what is the good of Spiritualism if it won't help me to better my material condition? Why should I support it, if the spirits can't help me to find lost treasure, or locate mines?" If Spiritualism came to this world for such purposes as these only, I should feel that it was a curse instead of a blessing. It came to make known the comforting and inspiring truth of the continuity of life beyond the grave. It came to reveal the rich mines of spiritual love and truth that are to be found within every soul. It came to dry the mourner's tears, to heal the broken heart, to give joy for sorrow, and pleasure for pain. If these things be not worth more than all of the material wealth of the world, more than place, power, fame, riches, position of any kind, then I fail to understand Spiritualism, and its impress upon humanity.

Would it not be well for Spiritualists to take an open stand on this question? Let us define our position by declaring our loyalty to spiritual mediumship, and our determination to defend the same at all hazards. Let us also declare that commercialism in mediumship must take care of itself.

P. S.—Since the above paragraphs were written, the case against Mrs. Stella A. Ross of Seattle, has been tried in court, and the medium has won a signal victory, even though it does not free her and other psychics from persecution at the hands of the chief of police. I listened to the evidence presented, and to the arguments of the lawyers with deep and considerate interest. Mrs. Ross was arrested and tried under the "Vagrancy Act" of the State of Washington, which statute was designed solely for strolling gypsy fortune tellers, and other persons of like character, who were without visible means of support. The framers of the "Vagrancy Act" would declare under oath, at least, so I am assured, that its possible application to a Spiritualist never occurred to them.

The prosecuting attorney held and argued most vehemently that "fortune-telling" and "mediumship" were one and the same thing. The lawyers for the defense, with equal vigor, argued that there was a wide difference between the two classes. They contended that a medium was a minister of the religion of Spiritualism, in which hundreds of thousands of intelligent people honestly believe, and that, as a minister, said medium had a legal right to engage in such practices as the usages of the religion of Spiritualism required. When the question of differentiating between the two terms was raised, neither the attorney for the state, nor those for the defense, nor even the judge upon the bench, were willing to make it. In other words, the legal authorities refused to define terms for the Spiritualists.

All attorneys interested in the case and his honor on the bench agreed that in the entire history of American jurisprudence, no case could be found in which a court had presumed to define the difference between mediumship and fortune-telling. In private conversation with some of the ablest jurists and lawyers in America, I have repeatedly been told that when the Spiritualists, through their National Association, defined their own terms, they would find that the law-making bodies would fit legal enactments to those definitions, but that as Spiritualists, we had no right to ask any one to define our terms for us and then make the law covering such cases, at the same time. The case of Mrs. Ross is an object lesson to those Spiritualists who attacked the president of the N. S. A. when he pleaded for a definition of our terms at the conventions of 1905 and 1906. If our mediums are fortune-tellers, requiring police regulation and licensing, is it not about time that we Spiritualists "took account of stock," to see just where we stand? As for myself, I am for mediums, first, last and all of the time, but I decline to be counted as a sponsor for, or a defender of professional fortune-tellers, or any other gang of frauds or pretenders.

Yours for spiritual Spiritualism,

HARRISON D. BARRETT.

FOR CLEANER SPIRITUALISTS.

A Plea for More Exalted and Cleaner Lives.

Our attention was called to a letter in an issue of The Progressive Thinker in which the phrase, "For cleaner Spiritualism," was used.

We understand Spiritualism to be clean and pure; it couldn't be otherwise; it is spiritual. How is it with its adherents, so-called followers?

Are they clean?

Are we interested in the ethics of Spiritualism for the elevation of character, or are the phenomena attractive only, with a view to curiosity and new sensations?

And in seeking those in the unseen life, do we, as has been suggested, go to them, or drag them to our plane of life?

True, dying has not made saints of our friends and relatives, but it has given them a clearer vision, and this, linked with noble desires, places our spirit friends in a higher sphere than ours.

If our daily aspiration—our prayer if you will—is, "Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul," we have nothing to fear of evil, except that of our own doing. That brings us to the fact, "To err is human." One of the most trying things is misrepresentation. What is the use of repeating evil reports?

In a certain city among the Spiritualists are several mediums of different phases and in different stages of development. Some of them used their mediumship for getting money; some for fame; others, unselfishly for good as they understood it.

There is much to be said against promiscuous circles, and persons with little or no understanding of the methods of proceedure in circles, often misrepresent these gatherings.

In this section, jealousy, envy and an inclination to gossip led certain mediums to lend ear and spread the reports of mischief makers against other mediums. Were such actions clean, kind, pure?

Gossiping and listening to it, is one of the abominations of life.

There are radical persons—extremists in every denomination. Their actions often cause their religions to be ridiculed. Nothing but our lives show to some that our religion is more than respectable, is worthy, and not an espousal of that which is degrading.

We have said, and we repeat, in order to be true Spiritualists we can't be too careful of our thoughts, words, deeds and idols.

"What in me is dark, illumine;
What is low, raise and support."

ELEANOR K. EAGER.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

A Card From G. H. Brooks.

I desire to inform the spiritual societies and camps, as well as my many friends, that I have decided to devote much more of my time to giving readings during my engagement with any society, that I will devote Sunday evenings to that work when desired. I will also follow any speaker at any time if they desire my service, and will follow any speaker at the camp, and demonstrate my ability along that line. I am led to take this stand through the advice of friends, receiving many compliments for that work while in Pittsburg, during December, devoting my last Sunday evening to that line of work. I am now prepared to make engagements with societies east or west, for the season of 1907 and 1908. Address me at my home

A MAINE WOMAN WRITES.

Some Choice Bits of Orthodox Poetry Are Recited.

To the Editor:—It rejoiced my heart to read the article in a late number of The Progressive Thinker, entitled "An Earnest Plea for Woman and the Purity of the Home."

It is not for purity that these California divines have ceased for a time the quarrel among themselves and banded together to rivet more firmly the loosening fetters upon woman.

They know that bodily freedom secured woman will strike for freedom from the myths and superstitions of the childhood of the race, and they will find their occupation gone.

There are millions of women in the United States to-day, living in the most degrading, soul-destroying bondage the world has ever known. Not only their own lives blighted, but the lives of helpless beings the unbridled lusts of creatures they loathe, force them to bring into the world. Perhaps you will think this strong language, but I am an old woman, long past the allotted age, and I know and feel what I write.

This poetry I learned from a printed card laid on my spinning wheel when I was a mere child. It may have had some effect, but it never taught me Love for God or man:

Stop, poor sinner! stop and think,

Before you farther go;
Will you sport upon the brink
Of everlasting woe?
Now, the friendly warning take:
Stay your footsteps ere you drop
Into the burning lake.

Say, have you an arm like God,
That you can His wrath oppose?
Fear you not the iron rod
With which He smites His foes?
Can you stand in that dread day
Which His justice shall proclaim,
When the earth shall melt away
Like wax before the flame?
Ghostly Death shall quickly come
And drag you to his bar,
Then to hear your awful doom
Will fill you with despair.

All your sins will round you crowd
You shall mark their crimson dye,
Each for vengeance crying loud,
And what can you reply?
Though your heart were made of steel,
Your forehead lined with brass,
God at length would make you feel
He would not let you pass.

When I repeated it in later years I changed the last two lines to make it more effective.

This bit of verse I never saw in print, but learned by hearing my father repeat it in his impressive way when I was a child:

As many years let floods of torment rise
As twinkling stars that speck the evening skies;
As dust of earth, or particles of light,
The distant end still fleeing far from sight;
As many more increase the fires of Hell,
As all of these when multiplied can tell;
When numbers faint and fancy fails to run,
Then let eternal woe be but begun.

I think it was this and like things that drove my father from the church, where for a time he was a shining light.

I take great pleasure in reading The Progressive Thinker, and most heartily wish there were others to share it with me, but Spiritualism, that for a time flourished about here, and seemed likely to carry all before it has apparently all died out. As far as I know, there is not another person in the two cities who takes a Spiritualist paper; not a person who professes to be a medium and no lectures on the subject at all. A few speakers have come among us in years past, but did not receive sufficient encouragement to try it again. The flesh-pots of the churches, with their promises of eternal happiness for belief, and endless torment for unbelief were too powerful when weighed against the social ostracism Spiritualism was sure to bring.

I told the woman to whom I send my paper as soon as read, and sometimes before, that I had so much reading I could not spare, I thought of giving up The Progressive Thinker, but last week's number was worth a year's subscription, and I send another remittance so as not to be without it if I am tempted again. Little In a Name.

Jehovah and Jesus, and Historical Facts of Unparalleled Interest.

IN NO PLACE IN THE Old Testament [Says the St. Louis Globe Democrat] is Jehovah spoken of as father. The nearest approach to this is found in the language of David, in which he says that as a father pities his children so does the Lord pity them which fear him. Jehovah is considered to mean the living one; or self-existing being: the "I am." He was a living God, but a tutelary God to the Hebrews and not so much a father. He was looked upon just as among the Greeks and Romans Jupiter was—as an exalted human being, who could become angry, repent, change his mind, be partial to whom he pleased, and terribly destroy all those who failed to honor a jealous God. That he had anything to do with those outside Israel was not at first entertained among the Hebrew people unless it was to exercise his power to miserably overthrow them in connection with his theocratic government. When Jehovah chose to do so he could allow the pagan people to overcome the Hebrews as a punishment, but, in the end, he was the God only of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their descendants. To come under the good providence of God every man had to become a Jew first. "I am the Lord, thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage; thou shalt have no other gods before me." Even in this first commandment there is not that absolute monotheism which we now accept. With their polytheistic tendencies all that Moses could exact of the people to whom he was giving the decalogue was that they should have no other gods above or before Jehovah. No matter what other gods they might have, Jehovah was to be the highest. But idolatry was strictly forbidden—that baser and lower form of polytheism which was illustrated in the worship of the golden calf while Moses was on the mountain top engraving the law upon the imperishable stone.

THE JUPITER OF THE Greeks and Romans means, by etymology, the father-god. He alone could hurl the thunderbolt from Olympus and overawe all the other gods and all men, but he was also Father Zeus. The great thunderer was subject to passions and infirmities just as was Jehovah to the Jews, but he was also as just as possible and was filled with fatherly compassion and pity at times for his weak and trembling subjects and children. Such are the analogies and the difference between the nations of the earth in the matter of making and giving names, and in perpetuating characteristics so far as they have been considered at this time.

It is an interesting study, and yet not one much indulged in by public speakers of our day on religious subjects. If one may judge by the expressions they use, to take the titles of Jesus as found in the Hebrew scriptures and analyze and classify them into some sort of order and rational significance. If a species of polytheistic thought and worship is not insinuating itself into both Protestant and Catholic service, or rather, has not been there for a long time, it is not because the forms of statements do not indicate it. As is natural under her philosophy of religion which has come down from the distant past and was shaped more or less under polytheistic influences. Catholics offer prayers to Mary more than to Jesus or to Almighty God, although they all expect their petitions to go up through the lower to the higher deity at last. Jesus and Mary are exalted, however, to the position of subordinate deities, and Mary is called the mother of God. In expression at least it is not better than a form of polytheism. In some respects it is not as pure and exalted worship as is found in the best period of the Jewish worship under David or Solomon, or some of the prophets.

ONE MAY GO INTO almost any Protestant house of worship and hear prayers addressed to Jesus directly and wholly, just the same as though there was no other object of adoration. Without other information, a stranger, acquainted with true monotheistic worship only, might go into any of our Protestant churches almost and come to the conclusion that we are unacquainted with the one, only, true and living God. He would come to the conclusion that we worship a being who once walked about upon the earth in human form, and was miraculously translated to heaven, and is there now the one being only of whom we have any knowledge as a God. Of course, there are many and gratifying exceptions to this in our churches, but in many churches from pastors, and in many Christian association meetings from laymen, and in many other kinds of religious meetings from the uninformed, we hear the worship of Jesus instead of the worship which Jesus taught when he said that God desires men to worship him (God) in spirit and in truth, and when he said to his disciples in the plainest language possible, when they would flatter and worship him, "Why call ye me good; there is none good but God; worship God." From all that Jesus said, doubtless he would be much displeased with the tendencies of his disciples in offering petitions to him instead of Almighty God.

The spirit of honor and reverence is right, but the object of petitions is wrong.

In polytheism prayers and honors were offered to the specific divinity in charge of the special departments of nature within which prosperity was sought; in dualism Satan, as well as God, was propitiated so that things might turn out favorable to those who sought success; but in monotheism we address our prayers at once to the highest object of thought known, to us who is the true and living one God. The chief purpose of prayer must be the subjective unification, purification, illumination and intensification of being, and that comes only through the worship of one Supreme Being. Less than this may be a step upward or downward, but it is more likely to be downward than upward toward the highest. Theoretically it is wrong and practically it must have some unfortunate consequences. If we are monotheists we should be the best kind of monotheists possible for us to be.

The enlightened portion of the race has escaped from polytheism and dualism into the higher monotheism only by tending constantly in the direction of monotheism, and, if we wish to rise higher still in civilization and enlightenment, we must leave a mixture of things such as too much now prevails and rise into the realm of a higher monotheism. It is in this direction that evolution in religion would lead us. This is one purpose of the new theology.

IT IS THE ASSUMPTION of the new theology that nature furnishes a matrix, and that God furnishes a new soul in the creation of every human or other being. Nature is simply God working upward through the forms of life, starting down as low as we can conceive them to have existed, and culminating at last in a human body, which is fitted for the comparatively exalted human soul. There is an unbroken continuity of life up from the lowest to the body of a human being. Bodies derive quality from this evolution which condition, but do not control the soul. In this body, prepared at great cost of time and culture through the process of the ages, the soul works out its evolution for a time under the controlling providence of God. Its destiny is involved within the scope of a great scheme of cosmic art. The soul receives support and re-enforcement from the body as it grows by drawing its nourishment from the visible order of things below and around it. The soul influences the body for good or for ill while it lives in it. There is a mutual exchange of influences. The environed and the environment have interchangeable relationships and resultants, but not such as would subordinate the soul to the body. To keep it supreme, and to cause it to rise superior to all incidental influences, and to EVOLVE IN THE DESTINED Spiritual direction, there is an omnipresent spiritual force, called the Holy Spirit, which co-operates with the soul and with the influences of truth to enlarge and improve the quality of the soul. The evolution of a soul goes on slow or fast according to environment and choice. No choice can separate a soul from its supernatural environment, though it may separate itself from the body. What is commonly called "the new birth" is simply the realization in consciousness of this supernatural presence and power upon the life. This is never exactly alike in any two beings. It may go on slowly by an unconscious method. It may suddenly leap into recognition and power in the soul. No human being and no being of any kind can escape this one universal law of evolution. Ye must be born again. Behold, I make all things new, God is greater than the soul; the creator than the creature. Happy is he who appreciates, understands and co-operates. There is one God, one faith, one baptist. All other phenomena of life must and can be harmonized with this central view of being and its evolution. It is easy to reconcile science and religion on this basis.

THE NAMES AND TITLES OF Jesus are entirely luminous and consistent upon this basis. Before his public ministry, and almost entirely through it, he was called simply Jesus, which is a common Hebrew savior. Joshua is another form of it. In the Gospel by John, his most beloved disciple, it occurs over 250 times; in Matthew about 175 times; in each of the other evangelists about 100 times each. In the Acts it occurs about 50 times, and in all the Epistles from the same number of times. He is never called Lord Jesus in the Gospels, and less than 30 times outside, and evidently under such circumstances only as would assist those who read or heard to appreciate his dignity under that form of expression better than under other forms. In a few cases it occurs evidently by force of habit. In the Gospels and among the Jews he was distinguished in the usual manner by giving his place of residence. Jesus is his personal name. In referring to him simply as a being no other term is necessary or appropriate. It is now entirely respectful and duly descriptive. It has the advantage of brevity and expressiveness.

IN THE HEBREW "Messiah" (used only twice in the Old Testament, in Daniel and in the Greek "Messias" and "Christ" we have words for what we now mean by anointed. By John Babtist, by Peter in his celebrated confession, by the high priest at his trial before the sanhedrim, and by Jesus himself, we have authorization to speak of Jesus as "the Christ," or Christ, by pre-eminence. In the twelve cases in the Gospels, the article "the" is used and this distinguishes the ordinary use of the term from the common. It simply means Jesus was the most highly anointed of God by the Holy Spirit, but that others before him, during his lifetime and since have been so anointed, are now, and will in the future be so anointed, but not so highly. This is commonly accepted by the Christian world, but perhaps not quite in the sense here intended, but nearly so. It is simply the broadening out of terms and unification of method that is insisted on here. Such part of the Holy Spirit as enters into any human life and re-enforces it, or anoints it with power and becomes part of it in a new and ever-enlarging way, is

WHAT IS KNOWN IN THE New Testament as "Christ," "Christ in us," "in Christ," and other forms of expression similar. Jesus, "the Christ," "the son of God," simply indicates the pre-eminence of one among many.

It was natural that from a people who had cultivated the monotheistic form of thought to a high degree there should come an example of the highest form of human being, viewed from the spiritual standpoint. How eminently filled with the Spirit of God he was we have the simple words of Scripture, which say that "in him dwelt the fullness of the Godhead bodily," or as much as could dwell in a human body specially fitted for it by the evolution of the Jewish people. Outside the Gospels the article "the" was usually dropped and the terms Jesus Christ, Christ Jesus, the Lord, Jesus Christ, the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ were used by way of fullness and comprehensiveness, but with no special significance. Outside the Gospels the expression, "the Christ, Jesus," is used about fifty times. All these names and titles show the confused use of terms which were not authorized by Jesus himself, and which his immediate disciples did not use during his lifetime. The evolution of names was natural, and is instructive, but must be understood to be appreciated.

A PIN THRUST AT A BUBBLE.

Brain Cells Are Cups That Hold Brains.

To the Editor:—I do not seek controversy, but endeavor to make the attainment of knowledge a life-long pursuit. This motive has induced me to read the various lessons of occult wisdom given by Professor Charles Dawbarn in your columns, and particularly his unfinished essay on mediumship, that appeared in No. 889.

It cannot be denied that Professor Dawbarn is a charming writer. He possesses the rare faculty of combining general good humor with grand philosophical subjects, in such form as to render the mass unusually attractive

But his brilliancy seems to suffer an eclipse when dealing with affairs outside the paling of theory, and the evidence he produces is seldom conclusive to a mind habituated to weighing it, and allowing only sixteen ounces to the pound.

I find in his latest unfinished lesson substantially the statement that mankind are provided with a duplicate series of brain cells, some of which are permitted to remain idle, or as he expresses it, "to let" during certain periods of time, but when aroused, the result is mediumship.

If true, this is a remarkable condition of things, and is entirely a modern discovery. Such men as Plato and Aristotle never dreamed of it, and so far as I have knowledge, Prof. Dawbarn is the only man living who knows, or thinks he knows anything about it. But he makes the statement with so much assurance that the reader might be tempted to believe he had served an apprenticeship in the brain-making industry.

Brain cells are cups that hold brains, and are probably incapable of either being put to sleep or aroused. Perhaps, however, their contents may be subject to such experiences and evidently it was to those contents that the California philosopher alluded.

But what evidence has he produced to sustain the truthfulness of his claim? If the reader will give it careful examination on the scales of reason, he must find that it is represented by the mathematical figure 0, usually called a cipher. It consists in the fact that a man named Prince was acquainted with a certain woman who was sometimes very good, and at others very bad, and he (Dawbarn) cannot account for it, unless two groups of brain cells were alternately aroused to activity, from dormant conditions.

Moses! and the Apocalypse! what reasoning!

If Prof. Dawbarn had said his allegations were theories only, they would have had no criticism from me, but he has failed to do so.

Irving, I think, gives theory a proper definition; he calls it a "bubble." Equip a boy with a clay pipe and a pint of suds and he will make two hundred of them before school time—each, I believe, of equal value with the dream that a portion of our brains is kept in "cold storage," and when withdrawn the possessor becomes a medium. Such gas structures always disappear after they receive a "five-point" visitation.

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

Or, the Pathway of the Spirit Traced.

By J. M. Peebles, M. D., M. A.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage, 12 cents.

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Camp-meetings and Other Spiritualist Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

Dr. George A. Fuller as Lecturer for the First Association of Washington, D. C.

Dr. George A. Fuller of New York, president of the Massachusetts State Spiritualists Association, and secretary of Onset Bay Camp Association, and until recently a resident of Massachusetts, has been speaking during the month of December for the First Spiritualists Association of Washington, and fairly electrifying his hearers by his logic, oratory and Spiritualism.

Dr. Fuller is a master of the art eloquent, and a fine inspirational psychic; a medium and Spiritualist of the old school of Spiritualism, he gives definitions and statements of our philosophy in clear, ringing and graphic terms. Progressive and ever up-to-date he accepts all that is instructive and spiritual in every school of thought, but contends and shows with clear incisive touch that nothing can exceed in beauty and usefulness Spiritualism, per se, which is builded upon the ROCK OF TRUTH.

We trust that some of the grand and erudite lectures of this scholar will find their way into the columns of The Progressive Thinker, for they are worthy the attention of every thinker and student, and fit to grace the pages of the most elegant and valuable journals of the day. Many expressions of regret were made among Washington Spiritualists that the engagement of Dr. Fuller had been so brief but the promise is held out of his return another season,—and for a longer stay, we trust. THE HOME CIRCLE.

Excellent Results Flowing Therefrom.

To the Editor:—I see the question of Home Circles being agitated. Having had quite an extended experience in my own home during a term of five years, I feel that I can give some details that will interest your readers.

These circles were private. None admitted except by invitation, and no charges made, and no motive for fraud, and there was none.

The circles were always held in the light, often in the day time.

The medium was a neighbor lady, over sixty years of age.

At first we got table moving and raps. Soon the medium was controlled to write, and we would get messages direct from our spirit friends; as many as a half dozen or more pages would be written at a sitting.

There were ten spirits who could control the medium to write, and each one wrote a hand different from the others, and during the five years those ten different hands appeared as the different spirits controlled, and we could tell by the writing whose name would be signed to the message by being so familiar with the different handwritings.

It seems impossible to be able to imitate ten different hands for that length of time without a mistake. If there were any motive in doing so, none of the ten different hands resembled the medium's own handwriting.

We would meet our own spirit friends and spend the evening just as if they were neighbors who had dropped in to visit.

We were visited by nearly all we knew in earth life who had passed on. The table would be tipped up to the member in the circle to whom the spirit desired to communicate, and the name of the spirit would be spelled by our running over the alphabet, and the names of people whom we had almost forgotten, would be spelled. We would then tell them if they would like a message written they could dictate what they wanted written to ———, who would write it for them. I have hundreds of these messages in my possession, although our circles ended in 1903. Since that time I have tried with success to develop writing mediums. In several cases the pencil would move at the second or third sitting, and in less than a dozen sittings the spirit could write to their earth friends. For this development no circle is necessary. The person can sit by a table with pencil in hand, and have in mind some spirit friend, having regular time to sit. Be prompt, and wait results, which will surprise many who don't know they are mediumistic.

In one case we were able to communicate at the third sitting.

With such evidence coming from members of your own family, it is proof conclusive, and this is what convinces humanity of a future life. This means of communication should be encouraged, and suitable instructions given to such as would like to experiment.

THE CASTLE IMPREGNABLE.

So, Wind of the North, you are faring forth
To harry us once again.
We've hearkened before to your call to war
And welcome it now as then;
Such strife is good when the sluggish blood
Creeps slow in the veins of men.
So, Wind of the North,
Come forth! Come forth!
And harry us yet again.

Yester eve he came, when the sunset's flame
Had burned to an ashen gray,
And we heard him first like a far, faint burst
Of horns in the woodland way.
But he gathered might as he rode the night;
How bitter his strength, how great,
We knew at last when his full-grown blast
Rang loud at the outer gate,
And each echoing note was a blow that smote
On casement and roof and wall;
And we heard, in the wood where the titans stood,
The noise of a great oak's fall.
With buffet and blow, and the spears of snow
That drove in a smothering rack,
He taunted us sore with the challenge of war,
But gayly we flung it back,
As we heaped great logs on the hearthstone dogs,
And over our leaguered dome,
In a pennant of smoke from our chimney broke
The flag of the castle—Home!

So his hordes swarmed forth all night from the north,
Investing us as we lay,
Till the mystic, white, half-luminous night
Was merged in the whiter day.
It was then we rose in our might to close
At handy gripes with the foe.
Oh! the sally out for that fierce glad bout,
Knee deep in the whirling snow!
Oh! the power to feel in his grapple of steel
Such thrilling and panting bliss,
As the maiden knows, who requites with blows
Her lover's audacious kiss.
Oh! we felt no fear that our foeman here
Waged war he could hope to win,
For he wrought in the breast but a keener zest.
For all that was housed therein,
For the love of life, for the babes, for wife,
For joys that be, and to come,
For all things there in our stanch and fair
Impregnable castle—Home!

Yea! Wind of the North, come forth, come forth!
And harry us yet again,
Such a strife is good when the sluggish blood
Creeps slow in the veins of men.

TELEPATHY.

W. T. Stead Predicts That It Is to Be the Future Method of Communication.

Noted Briton Cites Instance of Americans Who "Talked" 1,200 Miles Apart; —Clear as Conversation of Those in Same Room—Also Greatly Impressed by Psychic Performance of London Stage Celebrities.

That Santos Dumont [as set forth in the Evening Telegram, N. Y.] will succeed in wiping out the frontiers of the world at about the same time that telepathy will emerge from the experimental stage and become the universal medium of communication between man and man is the astounding prediction made by W. T. Stead in the current English edition of the Review of Reviews.

In voicing the prediction, Mr. Stead calls attention to the remarkable statement of Andrew McConnell, a resident of Atlanta, Ga., who declares he has been able to converse telepathically with a young woman 1,200 miles away. McConnell says the minds of the young woman and himself had become so sensitively receptive, that they could talk through them though more than a thousand miles apart, with the ease and distinctness of two men conversing orally in the same room.

Mr. Stead also instances the mental feats of M. and Mme. Zancig, two London variety stage demonstrators of the psychic specialty of which he writes.

Mr. Stead says that telepathy from the subconscious mind has for years been employed by himself for the reception of news without the intervention of the ordinary channels of sense. The difficulty, he continues, of working with the subconscious mind is that "its consciousness is rarely conterminous with that of the physical consciousness; it ignores much that to us appears important, and in chronicling facts it is more embarrassingly indifferent to conditions of time.

Tantalizing Obstacles.

"These are, however, but the obstacles, the inevitable difficulties which baffle and tantalize the investigator in any unknown field. What has been demonstrated times without number, is that friends at a distance of hundreds of miles, can and do transmit to me, by the agency of automatic handwriting, the most secret thoughts and confidences of their hearts. They are not conscious of the use which their subconscious self is making of my hand. But they cannot deny the extraordinary accuracy with which time and again the contents of their inmost minds have been communicated to me.

"My experience has sufficed to prove to me that, providing two minds are in tune, mind can transmit thought to mind instantaneously over distances of hundreds and thousands of miles.

"There are plenty of errors in transmission, flaws and imperfections in the telepathic process. But the fact that mind can and does transmit thought to mind across vast spaces without the agency of any wire or electrical instrument whatever, is to be almost as well established as the fact that there is a postal system, and that a letter dropped into a pillar-box in the street, with a penny stamp upon it, will be delivered in the course of the next day to any address within a radius of three hundred miles. But my experiments have hitherto been entirely confined to the receipt of messages from the subconscious mind of the transmitter, who is not conscious at the time that the subliminal part of him was communicating to me his ideas, his hopes, his fears, or his actual experiences.

Two Minds, One Thought.

"I have, however, always believed that it would be possible to make the physical consciousness as receptive and as communicative as the subconsciousness. Hence, when the manager of the Alhambra invited me to witness the performance of Mme. and M. Zancig, who claimed to have two minds and but a single thought, I gladly responded to the invitation and was abundantly rewarded by what I saw.

"After seeing the Zancigs at the Alhambra I called upon them by invitation at their rooms and subsequently invited them to lunch at my house, No. 5 Smith square. On each of the two occasions on which I experimented with them in private the results were the same as those to be witnessed by anybody at the Alhambra. The only difference was that at the experiments in private I had ample opportunity to impose conditions which rendered fraud or trickery impossible.

Mr. Stead then goes on to explain that the Zancigs are Danes of about forty years of age and were brought up in the same village in Denmark and afterward came to this country, where they married. After some time they discovered they were so much in harmony with one another that Mrs. Zancig often read her husband's thoughts before he expressed them in words or writing.

Zancig then tried a series of experiments to see whether he could by thinking intently on a thing impress a picture of that thing on his wife's mind. 'He found that when he thought red, she saw the air about her grow lurid; when he fixed his mind on green, she saw green; when he thought of a rose she saw the rose, and so forth. But while he could transmit his thought of her, and often did so unintentionally, he could most easily impress her by thinking intently of a definite object. On the other hand she could rarely, if at all, impress his mind, think she ever so intently.

After some years of experience they went on the variety stage in this country. Their "act" consisted of Mr. Zancig going out among the audience asking for names, numbers, to be shown some object, and in all instances Mrs. Zancig, standing on the stage, marks on a slate the proper name or number. Sometimes she makes mistakes, mistaking a six for a nine, or a three for an eight, but rarely.

Mr. Stead avers that in order to make certain that there was no fraud he invited the Zancigs to luncheon at his home on November 15 last. He continued:—

"They did not get the invitation till eleven in the morning of that day. Two hours later they arrived at No. 5 Smith square. The company present included Mr. Harold Begbie, Mrs. S. Trier, of Copenhagen; my wife and myself, and, of course, Mr. and Mrs. Zancig. After lunch he went into the drawing room. This is divided into two by a heavy curtain which shuts off the half of the room looking westward from the rest of the room looking eastward. Mrs. Zancig went alone with her slate into the east end of the room; the curtain was drawn. Mr. Begbie, Trier, my wife and I each chose objects, names or numbers, which were no sooner shown to the husband than the wife announced them quite accurately from the other side of the curtain. Mr. Begbie wrote three names one above another. Mrs. Zancig wrote them down.

"He then gave Mr. Zancig a watch key on which the maker's name, Hunt, was distinguishable with difficulty. 'It is a key,' said Mrs. Zancig from the other room; 'the name is Hunt.' A series of eight figures was correctly written out. Then, remembering Mr. Labouchere's familiar challenge to thought readers to tell him the number of a bank note in his possession, I took out of my purse an old discolored banknote and handed it to Mr. Zancig. 'What is this?' he asked. His wife replied from behind the curtain at the other end of the room, 'It is a note.' 'The date?' he asked. 'July 3, 1885,' she answered. 'And the number?' 'There is a 5,' she said, 'and a 9 and an 8, and a 4.' She then drew back the curtain and showed us written upon it '44,895,' which was the number of my bank note.

"I ought to have said that she had previously stated that the bank-note had been scorched in the fire. It has every appearance of having been singed, as I have carried it in my pocket for twenty years. It was thrust into my hand twenty-one years ago by a lady as I was forcing my way to the platform of Exeter Hall, at the meeting which welcomed me on my release from Holloway Gaol. I have kept it ever since as a kind of mascot for luck. I don't think any living soul has seen it since then but myself alone. And I certainly did not know what was its number."

A Telepathic Phenomenon.

Meanwhile, if the statements of Andrew McCormick, of No. 20 Capitol avenue, Atlanta, Ga., are wholly to be accepted, he fled in thought to have the same electric vibration that would produce a magnetic polarity of attraction. There is far more depending upon the two minds being in the same electric vibration than in the power of the current.

"It is difficult to discover the two minds sufficiently unified to act as the transmitter and the receiver. But it is possible to overcome this difficulty by sitting in a circle round a table. Hitherto the practice of sitting at tables has been used almost exclusively for Spiritualistic purposes. What I have discovered is that they can be used with equally satisfactory results for telepathic communications from the living.

"The practice of sitting at table—as in the Spiritualistic seance—in order to establish telepathic intercourse is beneficial in two ways—it unifies the minds of the sitters and creates combined currents of mental electricity, which facilitates a conscious talking with our friends at a distance. We have abundantly proven that telepathy exists subconsciously among all people, and to make it a conscious natural talking of mind to mind at a distance simply requires two minds very congenial, thinking the same thought to the same metre—that is, whose electrical vibrations are the same as in the Marconi instruments—and then to generate a sufficient current to produce a conscious communication. Where two minds are thoroughly tuned to the same thought-vibration, they would be in communication without any current added, as two like minds attract each other's thoughts sufficiently to keep a communication between them. The less congeniality, the stronger the current necessary to make a communication conscious. So two highly receptive minds, keyed to the same thought vibration will be in conscious communication all the time.

"The fact that we have not had such conscious telepathy is proof that no two highly receptive minds in history have been in the same thought vibration.

"So the table can be used to make minds more receptive consciously, to more nearly unify them into the same vibration, and when they come near a fine receptivity and unity, the united current of the table can add the additional electricity necessary to make the communication conscious. When once more conscious the uniting currents tend to unify the minds more and more, until they are so unified and receptive that their thought currents keep up a connection without any effort.

"In fact, two minds can reach a point where they cannot keep from hearing each other's thoughts at a distance. Through the table experiments I have developed a conscious communication that has lasted a year, and is absolute proof that I have discovered the next highest form of communication to the wireless telegraph."

Mr. McConnell then details at some length how he worked on this theory with a young woman whose name he withholds. They eventually became so sensitively receptive that they "could talk through their minds at a distance of 1,200 miles with as much ease and distinctness as two men converse orally in the same room."

Mr. McDonald very rightly thinks this a greater discovery than Marconi's and it doubtless is if he can demonstrate it.

Concerning Mr. McConnell Mr. Stead says:—

"If he is capable of conducting a conversation with a lady at a distance of 1,200 miles, it will be easy for him to demonstrate it before a picked committee of scientists. He only needs to be asked to transmit from this end a statement of fact of, say, one hundred words, written down at the moment by an investigator, and handed to him to be transmitted telepathically to the lady at the other end.

"The lady, on receipt of the message by telepathic current, would be requested to communicate its contents to an other investigator at the other end, who, making due note of the same, would exchange telegrams with the investigator at the other end. If their telegrams cross, bearing with them messages identical with those delivered for transmmission in the first instance, Mr. McConnell will have proved his case."

DORMANT BRAIN CELLS.

A Few Pertinent Queries on an Important Subject.

Can it be possible that our worthy Brother Dawbarn in his well written article in No. 889, in The Progressive Thinker, actually endeavors to prove a theory therein set forth, that spirits and mortal hypnotists prefer to act through dormant brain cells, or does he simply pen an unsubstantiated theory to awaken thoughts in others on a very important subject? Be that as it may. Man is his own maker, mentally and physically, subject to opportunity and prenatal hindrances.

Now, awaken a man to think beyond the ruts of early narrow training, his first thoughts will be to think and act the safest, surest and better way to make a more useful and exemplary citizen of himself. His self-respect and moral worth will be his aim to cultivate, while at the same time he will abhor more and more, from day to day, as he succeeds in his object, thoughts and acts on lower strata of human development; and as he does then daily develop, cultivate and train those organs which best enable him to carry out his efforts, the animal tendencies will recede, and those brain cells will in a measure be inactive, as no vitiated blood is sent to the brain to feed them, while the cells in use will expand by constant use.

The reasoning of our worthy brother, that brainy, self-reliant men are not found among our sensitives, or mediums, the history of Modern Spiritualism refutes that in toto. Take Henry T. Childs, Hudson Tuttle and A. J. Davis for instance; what dormant brain cells were ever found in either of these modern giants of general reform? All of them have proven to the world that it does not take imbeciles or men with clogged brain cells to be mediums of the highest and noblest type; and this holds good with thousands of others.

For upwards of forty years, with one or more mediums in my home continually, it has proved to me that every spirit acts out him or herself as far as conditions and ability of the control permitted. But few Mongolians can pronounce the letter R, and few Indians the letter V, in physical or spirit life, although the vocal organs of the media were never in any way obstructed while from under control. They would give what information or instruction they were able to give, in their own way. The child would still be the child, while the scientist would often instruct in the higher mathematics, and the mineralogist give scores of names of known gems; both of the latter teaching lessons far beyond the accomplishment and knowledge of the media.

Now, such being the case, as a rule, how can it be possible, that as every thinking man is striving for the higher, while restraining the lower tendencies, that if only these brain cells restrained in their partly inactivity could be the only ones used by foreign controlling agencies? It seems beyond all reason.

According to the reasoning of our worthy brother, every sensitive must be absolutely negative, and be influenced by every passing vibration; which is far from being the case. Many negative mediums may be swayed by spirits of vicious tendencies, if their own inner being doesn't revolt; but, according to every professional hypnotist with whom I have conversed, they all claim that they could not control any subject to commit crime, or any immorality, unless their subject was so disposed, even under the most perfect control.

The very soul of man acts best through our most highly developed organs—be they reasoning, moral or animal organs,—then how can our brother maintain that a foreign force reverses this natural trend, and only uses the inactive, undeveloped brain cells to act through? Would they be doing it in such an unnatural way out of sheer contrariness, or to show mortals what they could do?

In order to bring the question down to actual every-day experience, let us follow the individual life from its source of earth experience: Where Mother Nature is not interfered with by ignorant mortals, and hygienic laws are complied with, it is supposed that the tiny infant is like a healthy sprig (if not tainted by hereditary faults) capable of maturing and growing to highest possibilities, governed by climatic conditions and native environments. In later years, as this child matures, his avocation, trade, profession and training, may cause certain brain cells, certain parts of arms, limbs and digits, through disuse, to be inactive; are we then led to believe that such disuse can be remedied or brought into action on the spur of the moment by any outside agency—spirit or mortal—when the possessor cannot, but through lengthy training accomplish such? Are we to believe that when an inactive mortal, by long continual abstinence from manual labor, has caused thousands of his lung cells to be clogged for want of action, that any hypnotist on either side of the "River Styx" can better operate these clogged parts than the possessor, and that such foreign agency would prefer to act through those organs in preference to active parts? In the same trend of reasoning, if a right arm should, through disuse for a lengthy period, prove worthless to its possessor, would any controlling power prefer such an arm to act through, either to uplift it in prayer, or to smite an enemy?

A Fraternal Order.

We present this week the Fraternal Charge and Obligation of the First Society of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists,—an organization founded by Dr. Alex Caird, formerly of Lynn, Mass., where he presided over the largest and most prosperous Spiritualist society in the United States, and he hopes to achieve with this new organization a success that will surpass all his former efforts.

Fraternal Charge and Obligation.

The objects of this organization are: To study the spiritual philosophy and religion; to investigate its phenomena, and to practically apply its principles to everyday life. To publicly explain and demonstrate through speakers and mediums the theories of Spiritualism. To so conduct this society in all its spiritual and social relations, that the light of truth, harmony and love may illume the souls of all.

Spiritualists should believe that men and women are spirits. Spirits are immortal. The change called death, is but the separation of the spirit from its earthly body, and its transition to a higher life; retaining an indestructible body of spiritual elements and surrounded by superior conditions and opportunities for advancement.

Spirits, under favorable conditions, can and do communicate with men and women of earth, giving tests of identity, counsel on the conduct of life; healing the sick, comforting the bereaved, and manifesting their presence in various ways, leading all to a realization and enjoyment of a better life.

All persons are susceptible to spirit influences; mediums, though in different degrees. The faculty of mediumship can be developed to a degree that spirits can speak or act their thoughts more or less perfectly. Spirits are not infallible, therefore all communications should be judged upon their merits.

Everything in the universe, both mundane and spiritual, is governed by immutable law. A supreme intelligence rules all by universal law. Happiness is the result of the harmonious exercise of wisdom, love, virtue and purity. Character is the supreme consideration, as well as eternal progress of mind and soul to finer uses and larger powers.

One of the most important objects of this society is to afford its members an opportunity for the development and exercise of that fraternal faculty which is inherent in the souls of all.

Fraternity, in its material sense, is the binding together in the bonds of brotherhood for purposes of business, pleasure and helpfulness; in its spiritual sense, it is a binding together of all the virtues that tend to the upliftment and unfoldment of the human soul. Truth, Charity, Fidelity, Loyalty, Friendship, Justice and Brotherly Love, bind with the strong ties of a common purpose, and we have Fraternity, a combination of all the virtues, as applied to the betterment of mankind. Many of life's problems, which cannot be solved by individual effort, yield readily to combined or collective effort.

We, with the majority of Spiritualists believe in a Supreme power or force overruling and governing all forms of life, both on the physical and spiritual plane.

We believe in the continuity of life; that it is an established fact that man survives, in a conscious state, the change called death, and can communicate with those left on the earth.

We recognize the power of thought and the inevitable effects of a life of indulgence or indifference upon our spirit welfare on the other side, and urge upon all the necessity of leading pure and clean lives here.

We believe in and encourage every form of honest mediumship, recognizing it as the gateway through which we may communicate with our spirit friends; and while we uphold all genuine spirit phenomena, we deeply deplore those conditions which give rise to the practice of fraudulent manifestations, and we pledge ourselves to use all legitimate means to rid the cause of Spiritualism of those practicing the same.

In furtherance of the objects and work of this society, we subscribe ourselves to the following obligation:

"I, ..., of my own free will and desire, and in the presence of the angel world, and the worthy brothers and sisters here assembled, do most solemnly promise and swear, that I will, to the best of my ability, aid the officers and members of this society in expounding the true principles of the order.

That I will not cheat, wrong or defraud this society or any member of the same, nor will I knowingly by any word or act of mine injure the name or character of any member of this society whom I know to be worthy of membership.

I furthermore promise and swear that I will assist a worthy member of this society to the best of my ability, without injury to myself or family, and that I will promptly warn such member of any danger that I may know to threaten them.

That I will not knowingly assist or be a part of any fraudulent or dishonest meeting, gathering or seance where the work is partially or wholly fraud or dishonest; and furthermore, should I know of any member of this society who is practicing fraud or dishonest methods to delude or deceive any or all persons who are seeking after the Spiritualistic truth or light, that I will report the honest and unbiased facts to the proper officers of this society, that the proper action may be taken by such officers to expose and bring to justice the guilty parties.

To all the foregoing I most solemnly swear, and should I violate any of this obligation knowingly and wilfully, I hereby consent, that I be expelled from this order and that my name be posted on the roll of dishonor. And may the holy angels aid and assist me in keeping and performing this my solemn oath as a member of this, The Fraternal Order of Spiritualists.

President's Charge to Candidates.

Brothers and Sisters:—In the name of Spiritualism, the corner stone of our structure, the rock upon which we build our house, I welcome you to this Association, and charge you to be in the spiritual and mental planes as faithful to the vows you have taken on the physical.

Let loyalty and fidelity to each other and to the spirit world, be ever your watchword. Be true and faithful in all your relations to your fellow-men. "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you." Conquer hate with love. Lend a listening ear to the cry of distress, and as far as in your power lies, assist with a willing hand. Live pure and clean lives, always remembering that loved ones on the other side are cognizant of your every act. Be as careful not to offend or distress your spirit friends as those in the body. Speak no evil of friend or foe, nor listen to evil tales that may sully the fair fame of another.

Be honest, just and upright; let every act and deed of your lives reflect credit upon the cause you have espoused.

Be forgiving; throw the veil of charity over the errors of your fellow-members, bearing in mind the frailty of human nature, and that "to err is human, to forgive, divine."

And, finally, give, as far as possible without injury to yourselves or your families, of your means, your time and your most earnest effort, to the cause of Spiritualism and to the support of this Association.

Be constant in your attendance upon its meetings and do all in your power to assist the officers and your fellow-members in their efforts to spread the divine gospel of spirit return, and may you ever receive the love, care and protection of the spirit world.

You will now be instructed in the teachings of our order.

Phenomena.

All religions of which we have any record, were founded on some form of spiritual manifestation. Among the early Christians, it was considered a test of conversion that they receive the "Power of the Spirit," i. e., demonstrate some of the various forms of mediumship. At times the manifestations ceased; the reason for which was supposed to be that they had fallen from grace; wandered from the fold, and their leaders labored with and exhorted them to get back to the path of holy living, that they might again receive the manifestations of the Spirit.

Even at this ancient time there seemed to have been a question as to the reliability of the communications received; so much so, that St. John was led to advise his followers to "try (test) the spirits." Later on this same unreliability caused the church to exclude the mediums and depend upon their speakers only, to perform the offices of the church and act as instructors to the people.

All forms of mediumship with which modern Spiritualists are familiar were practiced in the early days of the Christian church. The gifts of inspiration, healing, discerning of spirits, prophecy, etc., were in common use, much more so than at the present time. Materialization is proven by numerous accounts of spirits manifesting themselves in a fleshly body.

According to Biblical history, spiritual manifestations were enjoyed by each succeeding generation from Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden to the time when angels guided the wise men of the East to the birth-place of the infant Jesus.

All are more or less subject to spirit influence in some form. To advise you in your investigation seems well nigh impossible, for the reason that so much fraud has crept into the work. That there are genuine mediums in all phases has been proven beyond a doubt.

We repeat the advice, under all circumstances, test the spirits, or the communications. Approach all investigation with an unbiased and unprejudiced mind, judging the manifestation entirely on its merits. Bring to this matter the same good judgment and common sense you would use in any other matter; if what comes to you seems reasonable, accept it, if unreasonable, reject it.

Individuals seem to have a penchant for some special phase; and are not interested in any other; to some, materialization is the highest form of mediumship, while others think that the mental phase is all that should be allowed.

We believe in the fullest liberty of thought for all; we advise each to follow his own inclination, but not with blind faith. An honest skeptic makes the best investigator.

When you have had demonstrated to you beyond a reasonable doubt, the fact of spirit communication, use your own brain power to determine what it means for you. Did the early investigators in their ignorance interpret it aright, or was it left for a more advanced age to discover its true meaning? If the fact of spirit return be true, it means that "There is no death," and that the theology we have been taught is in error, and this being true it must teach us a new philosophy and a new religion. It is ours to seek and find.

Philosophy.

Spiritualism teaches us that we are spirits temporarily clothed in earthly bodies; that death, so-called, makes no sudden change in the individuality, that as we lived here, so shall we pass into the next state of existence, the same spiritually and mentally. If we have lived lives made beautiful by deeds of charity, love and kindness, we shall find the inevitable results of such living awaiting us there, and if we have lived lives of selfishness, or have wronged or injured others, we shall not be happy in the spirit realm until we have atoned for these acts.

Spiritualism has no vicarious atonement, no system of rewards and punishments. Its philosophy is founded on the universal law of cause and effect. As ye sow, so shall ye reap. Every violation of spiritual law brings its own punishment.

Effect follows cause just as surely as night follows day.

Spiritualism teaches that the earth life is a state of preparation for the life in the spiritual realm. That the spirit life is a life of activity, of duties and cares, a world of life, love, energy, endeavor, and never-ending progression.

That its occupations and enjoyments are as varied as those of earth life.

It teaches us endless progression; that guided and led by infinite wisdom, every human soul shall ever strive for perfection.

Religion of Spiritualism.

You have been instructed in the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism, which are externals, and now you are asked to consider the religious phase.

In this Order religion means an inner conception in its relation to the individual life and character. The acknowledgment of a spiritual energy, superior to all forms of existence, animate, physical and spiritual; creative and sustaining in power; pure, sacred, intelligent and developing in character; individual but not personal. The name of this spirit energy we leave for each candidate to give an interpretation as best suits the individual conception, provided, that such name shall be consistent with attributes herein named.

The recognition of this spirit energy by the individual when permitted to hold sway over the inner life, manifests in deeds of kindness and charity, words of love and sympathy; the subjection of self, developing a spirit of unselfishness which considers the whole human family as one brotherhood, whose rights, pleasures and happiness are to be considered paramount to individual ambitions and selfish desires. This is also worship.

The general recognition and application of this spirit energy tends to the abolition of crime and evil; the purifying of public, social and private morals; a better policy and administration of government; a righteous and just standard in all business affairs; an equitable adjustment of matters pertaining to labor and capital; and a general uplifting on the material and spiritual planes.

Individual worship consists in a daily life that is consistent with the fruits of this spirit energy self-applied.

Public worship is a service devoted to the teachings of these principles; and should be maintained that the public may become enlightened regarding Spiritualism and its anticipated fruits.

You are exorted to harmonize your inner life with this spirit energy; to manifest its fruits by individual and public worship; to advocate the religious principles of this Order as far as is consistent and reasonable, and without trespass upon individual opinion; seeking always the best good for the brotherhood of the world as well as of this Order. To consider all approach to the spirit plane, whether by worship, study or phenomena, with feelings of sobriety and sacredness, inspired by a desire for spirit development and upliftment.

The Fraternal Order is not intended for a local affair. Any society in the world, organized, or to be organized, can become a part of it, by adopting the ritual and notifying the First, or Parent society. Later we will be in position to furnish a Constitution and By-Laws, Ritual, Hymnal, Traveling Transfer and Withdrawal Cards. Any person wishing to join the First, or Parent society can do so by subscribing to the above obligation and sending their full address and one dollar to the President.

DON'T YOU KNOW?

'Tis not wise, friends, to mourn when our kindred depart,
For the time comes to all, don't you know.
We are bound, it is true, by our love, heart to heart,
But a soul never dies, don't you know.

There are always some left one must help up the hill
To life's uses, and blooms, don't you know;
Ours must do for the hands which are stricken and still;—
That is wise love, and true, don't you know.

Oh, if wishes could rule fate how much would we change
Of what looks so mis-wrought, don't you know.
We imagine ourselves could far better arrange,
But unread laws clash in, don't you know.

To live on and be brave is the part most noblesse,
It takes courage to live, don't you know,
And the truer we stand in the times of great stress
The diviner we are, don't you know.

FRIENDS.

Not he that counts my errors,
Not he that holds me back
With doubting words to show me
Wherein and how I lack;
Not he that sees my failings,
And, seeing them, is free
To take my measure by them—
He's not the friend for me.

But he that learns my virtues,
Who takes me at my best;
Who notes my greatest failings,
And overlooks the rest;
Who—after I have striven,
And have not failed—is free,
With words of commendation—
He is the friend for me.

He that forever warns me,
Of dangers in the way,
Who doubts my strength to meet them,
And ever bids me stay,
May truly seek to shield me—
May "wish me well"—but he,
Whose faith is inspiration—
He is the friend for me.

Not he who flees when slander
Assails my fair, good name—
Lest on him falls a shadow,
Of all I bear of blame—
But he whose voice upholds me,
And speaks a word for me;
Who wields a blow in my defense—
He is the friend for me!

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Lively Doings of the Truth Seekers' Society.

The Truth Seekers' Spiritualist Society, of Dallas, Texas, held its regular meeting in Maccabee Temple, December 28.

The meeting was opened with a short address by Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner. After the address two little children of Mr. H. C. Degn and Dr. Dolly Degn, the oldest two years of age and the younger two months old, were christened. We were glad that we were permitted to have the innocent babes christened by our worthy pastor into the holy rites of Spiritualism. May they prove to be a credit to our society, and as years roll by may they be leading and shining lights in our church, and religion. Blossoms of white hyacinths were sprinkled on them, and each babe received a bouquet of pure white hyacinths and ferns. Mrs. Kayner spoke tenderly and lovingly of the innocence and purity of the babes, and in an impressive and solemn manner dwelt on the parental duties in giving the innocents in charge of the parents.

Three persons were received in full membership with the society, and we are very much encouraged with the increase in our numbers in the last month, and the bright prospects before the new year.

It was with joy and pleasure we welcomed the hour that enabled us to show our love and appreciation of our beloved pastor, who has worked so earnestly and faithfully for Spiritualism and our good. In the past year, and the many months there has not been one word of discord in the society, and I presume nothing but the most kindly thoughts or feelings towards Mrs. Kayner, and it was in consideration of her kindness towards us and our love for and appreciation for her that our president, George W. Morris, in behalf of the society, presented a gold watch as a slight token of regard for our pastor, hoping that though time may be wearing away the delicate works and dim the lustre that encases them, may it bring to her memory the love of true friends, and may we never forget the happy hours we have spent with her, and the instructions and good advice she has given us. The whole affair was kept secret and was a great surprise to Mrs. Kayner, who responded in her usual happy vein.

During the evening many of the members gave interesting accounts of their experiences and of the way in which they were led into Spiritualism, and how by the convincing messages and the phenomena they were fully convinced of spirits returning to earthly friends.

I think our good friends who are scattered over the states will be pleased to hear what we are doing in a social way.

New Year Eve the writer gave a "watch Social" at her home, 218 Hill avenue. The first intimation had of the guests was a serenade, and by nine o'clock most of the guests had arrived. The first thing on the program was drawing numbers for a pair of knitted slippers. President G. W. Morris, drew the lucky number. Then the hostess announced that she had prepared for a "Sewing Bee." Each lady and gentleman was supplied with needle and thread, and then the fun commenced. In the midst of the circle strewn on the floor were squares of various colored calico for patch-work, and premiums were to be awarded to both ladies and gentlemen for the first finished block, the neatest work, and the greatest number of blocks—time limited to thirty minutes. The ladies were judges of the gentlemen's work, and vice versa. The premiums were awarded to Mrs. Jessie Marshall, first block; Mrs. Mason greatest number; Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, neatest work; gentlemen, Mr. Harry Travers, first block; Mr. Severe, greatest number; Mr. H. C. Lamar, neatest work.

Refreshments were served, and all joined in wishes for a Happy New Year. A chorus was sung "God be with you till we meet again," and all returned to their homes in the wee little hours in the morning.

ANNIE J. QUINN.
Secretary Truth Seekers' Spiritualist Society of Dallas, Texas.

Jennie Hagan Brown Called to Arlington, Nebraska.

To the Editor:—You will be surprised to receive a letter from me, here. I am here because the family of Hon. J. A. Unthank sent the message "Mother is gone. Come." So here I am, at Arlington, Neb.

The members of the Unthank family are among the oldest settlers of this part of Nebraska, and among the most honored and respected; have been Spiritualists ever since the Hydesville rappings.

I was here four years ago, when Mr. Unthank fell asleep to waken in the summerland.

At that time the Congregational Church was filled to honor him; and on last Sunday again all the people, even those who could only find standing room, were there to hear the last tribute to this mother, this woman of strength and loyalty.

For over sixty years she and Mr. Unthank walked hand in hand down life's rugged road, as real lovers; then he went to spirit life; now she has followed him, leaving behind a son, daughters, and grandchildren. Among this family are rare men and women, brilliant minds of natural ability. One of these grandsons is the youngest judge in Nebraska. The family consists of people to be proud of. All, even to the children, are Spiritualists.

Mr. and Mrs. Unthank, and Hon. J. A. Cuppy and his wife (she is still here with us), were the first to place me on the platform in this State. They have gone home through the long, soft twilight of many years, but like the setting sun, they left golden glory and radiant splendor streaming over the planes of life where they have journeyed.

THE TONGUE.

"The boneless tongue, so small and weak,
Can crush and kill," declared the Greek.
'The tongue destroys a greater horde,"
The Turk asserts, 'than does the sword."
The Persian proverb wisely saith;
"A lengthy tongue—an early death."
Or sometimes takes this form instead;
"Don't let your tongue cut off your Head.'
"The tongue can speak a word whose speed,"
Say the Chinese, "outstrips the steed."
While Arab sages this impart:
"The tongue's great storehouse is the heart."
From Hebrew wit the maxim sprung:
"Though feet should slip, ne'er let the tongue."
The sacred writer crowns the whole:
"Who keeps his tongue doth keep his soul."

The Annual Convention

Of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists.

The Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists held its annual meeting in the Boston Friendship Hall, Tuesday, January 1, 1907. In the absence of the president the first vice-president Mr. J. B. Hatch, called the meeting to order at 10:45.

President's report was read and referred to a committee of three, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, Mrs. Nellie S. Abbott, Mrs. Osgood Stiles.

Secretary's report was read and received and ordered printed.

Treasurer's report read and referred to auditing committee.

Other committees—laid over.

Greetings were read from Director, Miss Susie C. Clark, and from Mr. H. D. Barrett, President N. S. A.

The auditing committee reported the books, vouchers and moneys of the treasurer, and financial books of the secretary, all correct in every way. Committee, Mrs. Maud Litch, Mrs. M. M. Nichols, Mrs. W. B. Belchers. The report was accepted, as was then the report of the treasurer.

The committee on President's Report brought in a very careful digest of the same, and recommended the adoption of all the recommendations, and also recommended that the incoming board appoint the necessary committee. The motion was made to accept the report of the committee, except in regard to 9th recommendation. The motion was amended to accept it as a whole. Much discussion upon the point was held, but the motion as amended was carried, and the committee report was accepted.

The President's Report was then adopted as a whole.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, George A. Fuller, Onset; First Vice-President, J. B. Hatch, Boston; Second Vice-President, Hebron Libbey, Dorchester; Third Vice-President, J. Q. A. Whittemore, Newton; Secretary, Carrie L. Hatch, Dorchester; Treasurer, Carrie F. Loring, E. Braintree; Directors, Simeon Butterfield, Chelsea; Susie C. Clark, Cambridge; Maud L. Litch, Lynn.

The treasurer reported balance on hand after all bills were paid, the sum of $360.47.

The meeting closed after the election of officers.

CARRIE L. HATCH, Sec'y.

Secretary's Report.

January 1, 1907.—To the officers and members of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists:

Once again I have the honor to present to you a report of the work of the M. S. A., for the year 1906.

First of all, I will report that there are 100 names upon the membership roll, in good standing, and I have paid over to the treasurer the sum of $200.60 from membership, collections and donations for the year, and let me state all meetings of the M. S. A. are free to all.

The work the first part of the year was very strenuous, as your secretary was kept very busy attending hearings at the State House, as she was appointed by the Board to look after these matters. Sometimes the word would come that a hearing was to be held at the last moment, and it would be too late to communicate with anyone, and in these cases your secretary attended alone (as in Capital Punishment bill), and speak for the abolition of this iniquitous law. At other times the secretary was able to communicate with talented speakers, and they would appear for her.

In regard to the Clairvoyance Bill, our president, Dr. Fuller, (by vote of the Board of Directors), acted as chairman of the meeting, and all can testify he did so in a most able manner. Some of the finest speakers upon our platform were present to testify against the bill, also able lawyers and judges.

Your secretary notified societies that the bill was to be presented on a certain day, and urged all to be present, as numbers at the State House often speaks louder than words. A most excellent gathering was present, filling the largest audience room at the State House. Suffice it to say, the bill was defeated.

In regard to the Medical Bill (which was also defeated). Your secretary communicated with many prominent workers and had them present to speak against the same, but the issue of this bill seemed to be directed particularly against the Christian Scientists, therefore there was very little for us to do, as they were well fortified with defense, and the bill died at the hearing.

In regard to Mass Meetings, will say the first one was in Worcester, Mass., on March 20, where a very enjoyable meeting was held, the president of the society, Mr. Woodbury C. Smith, stating publicly that the M. S. A. had been of great benefit to them, as it aroused the interest of the people, and made them renew their allegiance to the local society.

We then went to Amesbury, Mass., in April. Mrs. Nellie S. Morrill had written several times to your secretary, saying she wished there was a society in that place, and it was voted to hold a Mass Meeting there; the day was fine, the meeting well advertised, and the hall was full, to overflowing at both sessions, the people were earnest and seemed to want to have a society, and at the earnest solicitation of your First Vice-President, J. B. Hatch, about 15 people pledged themselves to form a society. All collections taken at this meeting were given to Mrs. Morrill for a nucleus for the new society.

The Haverhill people, from Mr. S. S. Ham society, went to Amesbury in a body, and did most efficient work toward organizing the work. This body of people at Amesbury are holding meetings every two weeks, and a report just received from Mrs. Morrill tells of good progress.

At Onset our banner meting is held, and most of our receipts come from this place, many of the friends visiting the camp take an interest in this association and give of their means to aid it. Our sincere thanks are due the Onset Bay Grove Association for their courtesies extended to the M. S. A.

The mass meting at Greenwich village was one of the most harmonious ever held; the beautiful little church in the valley, the dear, devoted workers, need special mention. Here in this quiet little village the only church to be seen for miles is that owned by the Spiritualists. When the bell pealed forth its notes, calling the friends to the mass meeting of the State Association, it carried a sacredness to everyone, with every tone. Everyone in Greenwich village was interested in this meeting. The president of the society said that more good had been done the local society because of this meeting than had ever been done before.

Thus, in a small way, your State Association is sowing seeds of good. It must be remembered that all mass meetings, and in fact all meetings of the M. S. A., are free. If there were more funds in the treasury much more could be accomplished.

Our Anniversary exercises, held in Boston, were a grand success; harmonious and uplifting, and one of the spiritual occasions that occur annually in Boston. The best talent is presented, the admission is free, and everything is done to make it a truly beautiful celebration. Our Association has sustained a great loss, not in the transition of a member, but of one who has endeared herself to all Spiritualists throughout the country, by her staunch loyalty to Spiritualism and by her willingness to always respond to a call from the Association, our beloved sister and counselor, Mrs. Sarah A. Byrnes. We feel her loss most deeply, and only ask that her spirit may be with us to aid and guide this association in its ministrations.

Your secretary most earnestly recommends a vote of thanks to all mediums, speakers and musicians, who have so nobly aided this Association during the past year. Also The Progressive Thinker for special favors.

Your Secretary has written hundreds of letters during the past year, and answered many inquiries in regard to spiritual work; reported all meetings, private and public; and has attended to all duties presented to her. Many letters of encouragement have been received from the secretary of the N. S. A., which have all been read in directors' meetings, and this association fully appreciates all the work being done by the M. S. A., and congratulates Massachusetts for its loyalty to the cause. The N. S. A. has ever assisted with money when called upon for charitable work.

Respectfully submitted.
CARRIE L. HATCH, Sec'y.

President's Report.

Officers and members of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists—Greeting:—

Again it is my privilege to present to you my annual report as President of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists. This is the second time in its history that I have been unable to be present with you at an annual meeting. The first time I was filling a lecture engagement in Chicago, and this time I have just completed my labors in Washington, D. C. By extraordinary effort I could have been with you upon this occasion, but knowing the efficiency of the First Vice-President, Mr. J. B. Hatch, upon whom would fall the duty to preside in my absence, I have felt unwilling to make the effort to be with you. My interest in the State Association is not lacking, but there are times when it is not advisable to overtax oneself even in a good cause. At this time the State Association will be in good hands, therefore, will not suffer on account of the absence of its president.

The work of the past year under the supervision of its Board of Directors, has proven of great value to the cause of Spiritualism. All of its mass meetings have been largely attended, and the work of mediums and speakers needs more than a passing notice in order that the full appreciation for the may be expressed. At these meetings hundreds of spirit messages have been voiced and have met with full recognition by those to whom they were given. The addresses of the speakers have been of a high order and characterized by a most careful presentation of our science, philosophy and religion. We may mention the following as places where these meetings have been held: Amesbury, New Bedford, Worcester, Greenwich Village and Onset. If the name of any place has been omitted it is the fault of my memory, as I am writing this report several hundred miles away from my note books.

At New Bedford we found a good working organization holding meetings every Sunday.

At Worcester a society, among the oldest in New England, working under most able management and calculated to hold the respect of the entire community.

At Greenwich a good society, strong, alike in noble workers and also in members, worshiping in a beautiful church of their own, entirely free from all encumbrance.

At Onset, as usual, a largely attended meeting at this most successful Spiritualists' Summer Home by the sea; and at Amesbury we found a little band of earnest men and women, unorganized, but seeking some method whereby meetings might be held for the advancement of the cause.

In passing it would not be wise for me to omit mention of the Anniversary held in Berkley Hall, Boston, for this meeting has become one of the prominent features of our organization. As usual, it was a complete success, and your President hopes it may continue to be held each year as long as the association exists.

The charitable work performed by this association grows as years pass by, Although at first this was not intended as a charitable association, yet it has been forced into that line of work by the pressing needs of many of our old true workers, who in advancing years have been left without means of support. Your president labors under the impression that in the past year more funds have been disbursed for this purpose than in any other preceding year. This work of the association should receive the thoughtful attention of all its members, and some definite plan should be contrived for extending this line of work during the coming years, for undoubtedly, the necessity of rendering quick aid to those in need will increase instead of shrink, as the years roll by.

That the association has failed to accomplish much of the work that has been outlined in the recommendations adopted at its annual meetings, is an assured fact; yet the officers of the association should not be blamed in relation to this matter, for without the necessary funds these measures could not be carried out.

Your president would suggest that none of the recommendations presented in this report be adopted unless at the same time funds are raised for the purpose of making it possible for the officers of this association to see their way clear to move in the directions suggested.

We are all aware that this association has been a power for good from its inception to the present hour. During the past year, if it had done no more than what was accomplished by and through it at the hearing at the State House, on the Clairvoyants' Bill last winter, it had proven most conclusively to the world its great usefulness to the cause of Spiritualism. Here certainly was a great victory won for mediumship in its every phase.

The great amount of clerical work conducted by the secretary and the president in answering the many inquiries concerning societies, the work of Spiritualism in general and the directing of investigators to mediums of undoubted veracity, etc., has formed no small part of the work during the past year. Besides all the other necessary writing, the secretary has always furnished most excellent reports of all its meetings for the spiritual press. This work has taken a great deal of the time of the secretary, and certainly deserves the thanks and full appreciation of all the members of this association.

The secretary will undoubtedly give a full report of all the meetings held during the past year; therefore it is unnecessary for the president to take up your time in going over this ground. For this reason he will turn his attention for a few moments to the consideration of the work that lies before us as an association:

1. Legislative work must demand our attention as it has done in the past. Undoubtedly measures will come up before our legislators which are inimical to the cause of Spiritualism. One of the most important phases of mediumship is healing by and through spirit power. The so-called regular physicians, who, in our humble opinion, are the most irregular and illogical of all practitioners, it is to be presumed will be on hand to offer new bills to still further restrict medical practice. It is our duty to present a bold front and fight all these measures.

2. The great curse of Vaccination is being recognized by many of the ablest scientists in the world, yet we have our compulsory vaccination laws. In the past we have aided the anti-compulsory Vaccination Society in its noble work for liberty of the people. It seems wise to your president that this aid still be continued.

3. This association has already aided materially in organizing new societies. Work of this kind should be continued in the future, and aid should also be rendered as far as practicable to all worthy struggling local societies.

4. Our quarterly mass meetings have proven to be of great material aid as well as spiritual uplift to the local societies that invited us to meet with them. It is our opinion this work should also be continued.

5. The Anniversary Meeting in Boston is looked forward to, not only by a great number of Spiritualists in the city limits but also by societies throughout the state. This meeting should not be abandoned, but instead even greater efforts should be made toward making this event one of the great features of this association.

6. Our loyalty to the N. S. A. should be emphasized at this time, and all local societies in the state should be urged to unite with the same.

7. At this Annual Meeting some means should be desired for carrying forward the charitable work of this association. Your president would suggest the advisability of establishing a fund for this special purpose.

8. The matter of Ordination must necessarily come up at every annual meeting until at last the question is settled. At this time the matter ought to be most carefully considered by all workers of this association present. Its legality in Massachusetts should be ascertained beyond questionable doubt. It may take some little expenditure of funds to accomplish this, but would it not be wise, even at considerable expense, to have it settled once and for all? Your president would suggest that a committee of ladies and gentlemen living in or near Boston be appointed at this time to investigate most carefully this whole matter, and report to the incoming Board of Directors, as soon as such investigations can be made.

9. This association has recognized the power of the spiritual press and has ever been the steadfast friend of the same. It is with feeling of sincere regret that your president has to chronicle the cessation of the publication during the past year of the oldest advocate of Spiritualism in the world, 'The Banner of Light," that for years had been a household necessity to the Spiritualists of New England, if if not for the whole world. That paper was ever the friend and ally of this association. Much of its success was due to articles that appeared in the columns of the same. Our full appreciation of this journal has been expressed again and again, and at this time it is not unnecessary to repeat what has been both written and spoken in the past. Now that it is no longer a living entity in our midst we have turned toward that journal known as "The Progressive Thinker," and its editor has assured us of his interest in the work we are seeking to do in the east. Therefore, at this time, we would urge upon all members of this association the advisability of their becoming subscribers to the same. We should pledge ourselves to do all in our power to increase its circulation in our state. Our thanks are already due to the editor and publisher of this paper, Mr. J. R. Francis, for the valuable assistance he has rendered our association in publishing our notices and reports. Your President would recommend that the thanks of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists be rendered to him for the kindly spirit he has displayed toward our organization, and finally—

10. Your President would recommend the continuance of all lines of practical work that past experience has found to be a necessity.

During the past year your Board of officers have worked together faithfully and most harmoniously. Your secretary, and likewise your treasurer, have both been most faithful in the discharge of all duties that have devolved upon them, and are worthy of all praise for the services they have rendered. Your first vice-president has most ably attended to the duties of the president in his absence at some of the mass meetings, and much of the success of the association is due to his unselfish labors for the cause of Spiritualism. The thanks of the association are due him for all that he has done for the advancement of its work. The entire Board of Directors have likewise been faithful in the discharge of all their duties and are worthy of the gratitude and thanks of this association.

In conclusion your president would urge upon those who now are members of this association to do all in their power to aid it in its work. Likewise, would suggest that each member become a missionary and work for the purpose of upbuilding the association, and with this object in view, why not promise at this time to add, during the coming year, at least one new member? This would seem a most practical way of showing one's interest in the work of this organization.

Trusting that the blessings of the angels may rest upon all your efforts for the advancement of the cause of Spiritualism, I am yours most respectfully.

Settling the Question.

Harrison D. Barrett Lays the Ghost of That Ninety Per Cent Story.

Inasmuch as Brothers Hudson Tuttle, Dr. George B. Warne and Thomas Grimshaw have all been accused of saying that they, as well as myself, believe ninety per cent of the phenomena of Spiritualism to be spurious, and, inasmuch as the three gentlemen named have all repudiated the charge, and declared their belief in the genuineness of the vast majority of phenomenal manifestations, it may be well and even timely to settle this question once and for all time by a brief statement by myself.

Let me say at the outset that the story grew out of an interview which a reporter of one of the leading dailies of Los Angeles, Cal., had with me some two years ago, which was published in an abbreviated form in one of its Sunday issues. Messrs. Tuttle, Warne and Grimshaw were not in California at the time, knew nothing whatever of the questions submitted to me, nor of the nature of my replies. They are not responsible for one word I said, and as they have all declared their repudiations of the ninety-per-cent idea, it does seem as if they ought now to stand exonerated of all possible blame that may be attached to this matter. Indeed, even the most credulous in our ranks can ask nothing fairer nor more comprehensive than these good brothers have published over their own signatures. Again let it be known that these gentlemen know nothing of that now famous interview, nor of the sentiments expressed in it.

One of the questions submitted to me read substantially as follows: "How do you regard the so-called paysical manifestations presented in the name of Spiritualism?" My reply was not given hastily. I weighed every word, and give an answer that I considered to be as truthful as I knew it to be conscientious.

"I hold ninety per cent of the so-called physical phenomena, as presented to-day, to be spurious, but firmly believe that the remaining ten per cent contains a rich residuum of spiritual truth, well worthy of the careful study and thoughtful consideration of every scientist." These words stated, with truthfulness of soul, my position then, and I feel they are absolutely true to-day.

The next question was in substance: "How about the mental phenomena?" My reply: "In mental phenomena, the percentage is largely the other way; in fact the figures could almost be reversed." This reply shows the esteem in which I hold our phenomena of the mental phases. Some of these phenomena are by no means established, yet I hold that the preponderance of evidence is on the side of the genuineness of at least a majority of them.

This interview created quite a sensation among those who fancied that they and their friends were hit by it, and in order that there might be no possible misconception of my real meaning, I wrote an explanation which was published in the Sunday issue of the paper following the one in which the interview appeared. In my letter I took especial pains to state that I had no reference whatever to the thousands of mediums in the land who were producing physical phenomena in the quiet of their homes, for their own instruction, and and that of their friends, but that I did mean the sordidly commercial elements in mediumship that had reduced spirituality to its lowest possible denomination, and were making use of their alleged power to extort money from their heartbroken victims.

One of the most famous of this class of mediums is a case in point. He held from three to five seances per day for ten successive days, at which from forty to one hundred persons were present, paying one dollar each for a seat. He cleared something like twelve or fifteen hundred dollars in ten days' time. Am I not quite generous to him and to all whom he typifies in admitting that there is or may be a ten-per-cent residuum of genuineness in his work?

In the days of real test conditions such wonderful mediums as Fred Prince, Mary Andrews, D. D. Home, and, later, Farmer Riley, were well satisfied if they obtained a hand, an arm, one form, or, at most four full forms at one seance. The party to whom I refer in the preceding paragraph never produced less than thirty and sometimes as many as one hundred forms at one seance. Strike an average of fifty per seance, four seances per day, and we have two hundred "spooks" every two hours, and two thousand for the entire ten days. Honestly now, is it not quite a stretch of the imagination to suppose that there was even one genuine spirit form, let alone ten out of every hundred, produced by this so-called physical medium? In this case and all others like him, would not my estimate of ten per cent have to be materially reduced provided there was even one genuine manifestation?

There was no attack made upon Spiritualism, nor upon mediumship in that interview. I took pains to emphasize my acceptance of every phase of mediumship enumerated by Andrew Jackson Davis, and iterated and reiterated my soul conviction of the truth of Spiritualism. A gentleman from Pasadena sat by my side, heard every question as it was propounded to me, and likewise heard in full my replies thereto. He is a better witness in the case than those who listened surreptitiously to what was said, and then distorted it for their own ignoble purposes. It must be remembered further, that the reporter's story was cut down by the Sunday editor, whose combination of sentences and paragraphs gave sometimes only half truths, and others no connection with the narrative whatever. Finally I explained everything in full in the very next Sunday edition of the paper in question, and only the most prejudiced persons, or those who persist in remaining in ignorance of the facts in the case, can possibly find fault now.

The matter is perfectly clear I made no attack upon mediums. I never have in my life. I believe there are genuine physical phenomena, and true and worthy mediums who present the same to the world. Such mediums have no truer or better friend than myself. At the same time, my experiences, my positive knowledge of certain facts, warrant me in holding to what I have repeatedly said, that ninety per cent of the so-called commercial phenomena, especially those physical phases that emanate from dark seances, are, if not absolutely spurious, at least open to question. I should be happy to be shown that I am mistaken, (and I am susceptible of evidence) but until I am convinced of my error, I can only say as did Martin Luther of old, "Here stand I, God help me! I can do no other!"

REPEAL THE BLUE LAWS.

Such Should Be Done According to the Impressive Views of the Chicago Daily Journal.

It is somewhat trite to say that the cornerstone of government, in a democracy, is the consent of the governed. That consent must be continuous, or the government fails.

Just now they are resurrecting the old "blue laws" in Boston. They are fining railroad workers for cleaning cars on Sunday. A South Boston woman was haled into court because she swept off her sidewalk on Sunday. A Back Bay man had to respond to a police summons because he cleaned windows on Sunday.

More than a hundred employes of the Boston Subway were summoned to appear in court for engaging in Sunday labor. This may be a test case, as the Rapid Transit commission will fight the suits bitterly. In all, there have been about 1,200 summonses issued in this latest "blue law" crusade.

Of course, the courts, at least the higher ones, will treat all this intermeddling with personal liberty as unworthy of the present age. If there are any fines, they will be so nominal as to be construed into a mere recognition of the letter of the law. Most of the suits will be dismissed as absurd.

Yet the "blue laws" will remain on the statute books to harass a modern, cultured community. These laws will continue to breed a coterie of bigots, who will insist on a revival of their letter, while forgetting entirely their spirit.

Unhappily, there are, in every community, well-meaning zealots who would cheerfully turn back the world's progress three hundred years if they could make everybody enjoy churchgoing and psalm-singing as they do themselves.

These are the people who rake over the musty legal records, and discover statutes that have long since died natural deaths because the world did not need them any more. The communities that failed to make formal repeal of these laws did so, in the main, because they did not wish to stir up religious strife. They ceased to have any use for statutes that no longer represented public sentiment. But a formal repeal would have meant the fires of bigotry, and they were not repealed.

We have a similar instance in Illinois. We have a state law, known as the "dram shop act," that forbids the sale of intoxicants on Sunday. This law is a dead letter in Chicago, as it is in all large cities of the state. When the "blue law" advocates condemn the mayor for not enforcing this state law they ignore the fact that there is no city ordinance against Sunday saloons. They try to hold the mayor solely responsible for initiative, in the enforcement of a state law, while ignoring the more immediate responsibility of state officers.

Whether in Massachusetts, or in Illinois, the spirit of "blue law" persecutions is the same. It is said that the best way to secure repeal of an obnoxious law is to enforce it to the letter. Boston may furnish an object lesson.

The cosmopolitan tone of Chicago's population makes Sunday closing impossible. To put at rest periodical and intolerant agitation, the law shouldbe repealed, or modified to suit modern conditions. The creators of laws are greater than the creatures of their handiwork.

A CORRECTION.

"An Honest God Is the Noblest Work of Man."

To the Editor:—Some friend has kindly sent me a copy of a new magazine named "The Occult," and I notice the lady editor has given great prominence to that remarkable saying, "An honest God is the noblest work of man," but she has made a great mistake in attributing the authorship to Col. Robert Ingersoll. I read the sentence in one of Andrew Jackson Davis's works long before Col. Ingersoll become famous as a liberal lecturer, and even heard it quoted by lecturers in the Free Church of this city years before the Colonel uttered it. It was quite familiar to the Spiritualists of Sturgis in the early days.

The editress of The Occult no doubt was not aware of the fact that Mr. Davis, and not Col. Ingersoll, was the originator of that peculiar sentence. Colonel Ingersoll was probably not aware of it either, or what is more probable, he spoke it in the course of his lecture merely as a quotation.

I would be very sorry, indeed to suspect the late honorable gentleman of piracy, but I think it unjust to Mr. A. J. Davis to permit that popular saying to be credited to the wrong man, for I have several times seen it credited to Col. Ingersoll, whether through mistake or design, I know not; but it ought to stop.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the
with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. The book will at once appeal to the reason of every reader, and leave him more amazed than ever at the prevalence of the theory of Creation." The Two has always been a fateful number. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

INTERVIEWS WITH SPIRITS

A real visit with friends on the other side of life, and a familiar talk. By Spirit Samuel Bowles; Carrie E. S. Twing, Medium. Price 50c.

Wanderings of the Hull Pilgrims

I believe that my former letter left Billings, Montana, about the time we were packing our trunks to make another jaunt of a thousand miles toward the setting sun. We had just one meeting after that letter was mailed; that was by far the best and largest meeting we had in Montana. The fact is, just as we got ready to go away the people began to get a good ready to listen to our message. Then there were many subjects on which they wanted addresses.

After our last meeting was held, Mrs. McCormick came. She had been with an invalid mother, and she was sorry enough that she could not have been at home. Of course we were urged to return, as we were at Minneapolis, "at our earliest convenience."

On December 10, we took up our line of march for Seattle, where we arrived several hours late. Our brother and sister, Hiram and wife, met us at the train, though it was after midnight. They were glad enough to see us. It had been about twenty-four years since we had met Gertrude, and had seen Hiram but once in that time. In good time brother Daniel and his good wife arrived, and we had a short but good meeting of the remnants of the former Hull family. We also met many of the good friends in Seattle. We did not go there with the intention of doing any work for Spiritualism in Seattle. Harrison D. Barrett is engaged there for some time to come, and we preferred not to accept engagements elsewhere in the city; we wanted to hear him.

We went to his afternoon meeting; their musician was gone, so Mattie was worked in to play for the meeting, and to offer the opening invocation. After this Mr. Barrett arose and started out with a good discourse. I settled down to hear something fine, when, Lo! he introduced me to deliver the discourse. Of course I was taken by surprise, but was not beaten. I had been introduced so nicely, and received with such eclat that I could not help but preach. The fact is, it preached itself.

Mr. Walter A. Hall, the president, had been called away; a medium had been arrested, and Mr. Hall had been called out to go on her bond. He is always a good man to use in such cases. By the time I had gotten about ready to conclude my remarks, Mr. Hall came in and told the result of his visit. This medium and another had been arrested only two days previously, and had gained their point; that excited the ire of the chief of police, and he publicly declared that he would keep up the business of arresting mediums, until he drove them all out of the city. The mayor had condemned certain mediums, and then given especial privileges to Catholics of telling fortunes during a fair they held in the city. It seems that there was nothing wrong in holding fairs, and telling fortunes for Christ's sake. If Christ had been in Seattle and told one of his disciples to go and catch a fish and pay his taxes with a piece of money he would find in the fish's mouth, he would have been fined. Now, if the mayor and chief of police of Seattle do not find themselves on trial before this thing is through, then I am no prophet. I will watch this case, expecting the real mediums to win. I shall expect the mediums to learn as well as to teach the city authorities a lesson before the matter is finally settled.

At night we went back to the hall, when lo! after a few introductory words I found myself in the harness and preaching once more. When I got through Mr. Hall and Mr. Barrett told the audience something of our journey as well as something of our school, and after each of them making a contribution for our expenses, they urged that each one who felt to make a Christmas present to the Hull pilgrims should leave the amount they felt to give, on the table near the door. When we got our present together, we had fully as much as we would have charged to have stopped with them and delivered two or three discourses.

On Tuesday morning, the 18th of December, we reluctantly said goodbye to our relatives and friends and took up our line of march for Portland. We were anxious to get down among the "web-footed Oregonians." Well, whatever may be wrong with their feet, the most of them are all right when you come to their heads or hearts.

If there had been such a state or even territory as Washington when the Oregon people received the cognomen, "web-footed," I can assure the people that they would have had some other name, for if it is possible, it rains more in Washington than in Oregon.

Many do not know that all of the large territory of Washington was cut off of the State of Oregon, and yet they are two states either of which are larger, and richer in some resources, than Illinois. A lady, near fifty years old once said to me, "I was born in Oregon, and married in the same room in which I was born, and yet I was married in Washington. Can you explain that?" At first I could not; the fact occurred to me that the northern part of Oregon was cut off and named after the father of this country, and the mystery was solved.

Well, each of these states has not less than, perhaps, ten times the amount of rain that you have in Illinois, and yet some of the people want more rain. If there are two consecutive days in the winter months without rain someone will be heard complaining for the want of rain. People are more healthful in the rainy season. My brother's wife, Mrs. Emmer Hull, had the rheumatism very badly all summer; in fact she never expected to be able to more than hobble about a little, in the future. When the rainy season began her rheumatism left her, as suddenly as it came upon her when the season began to be dry. Now she is entirely free from her old tormentor.

Well, we arrived at the beautiful city of Portland on time, and have been quartered in the comfortable hotel called "Manhattan Court," 311½ Stark street. We always stop here when quartered in the city, and we commend this hotel to all wandering pilgrims. On to-morrow we must leave this hotel, and, as usual, we are sorry to go. Mrs. Buedekoffer, the landlady, is a Swiss woman who has become thoroughly Americanized, and she knows how to make her guests feel perfectly at home. She is a Spiritualist and knows where every medium and every meeting is in the city.

We are holding meetings with perhaps, the oldest Spiritualist Society in the state, in Artesan's Hall. We always when in Portland, speak for this society; we have often been called to other societies to speak, but, for some reason we never had the time to speak for them. On week-day nights we always speak, when in the city, in Mrs. Mallory's parlors, as about all other Spiritualists do when passing that way.

Mrs. Mallory has, to our certain knowledge, for more than twenty years kept open parlors for meetings; she furnishes them and furnishes light and heat for all comers and goers. From three to eight times each week she opened her church and invited wayfarers in, without money or price. In fact her parlors are a kind of "Areopagus," where any crank who has an idea to air, and cannot get a hearing elsewhere can get respectful hearing. Mrs. Mallory seldom takes any part in the meetings, though she is generally there. Besides all this she has a large library, especially on Spiritualistic subjects, which is always open free to those who need the books, or opportunity to write.

Our last meetings for the First Society were the largest and best meetings we have had. There we with what aid we got at the Mallory parlors raised nearly forty dollars to assist the Morris Pratt School in doing its work, and enough to pay our way on to San Jose, Cal. Our last day in Portland was by far our busiest day. Although we had attended three meetings, besides one lyceum the day previous, and were tired out when the day began, callers began to arrive before we had breakfast, and the stream of visitors did not cease its flow until we got into the cars at 7:30 p. m.

After two nights and almost two days constant and hard riding through snow-capped mountains and over valleys we find ourselves in the summer clime of San Jose, Cal.; but it is not so summery even here as I have seen it in July. The fact is, the weather is exceedingly cold and wet for this country. We have the promise, and confidently expect more pleasant weather within a day or two.

We are making our home with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ringlep. They own a very pleasant home, although it was badly wrecked by the earth-quake which made such havoc with San Francisco, last April. The chimney was shaken down and came through the house into the cellar, and other damaging things were done. They all escaped with their lives and their courage, and have repaired their house in so much that the evidence of earthquake power has been nearly obliterated, and Mrs. Ringlep facetiously says, she prefers California earthquakes to eastern thunder storms.

She is the daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. Ellen M. Dobson, and as a little girl used to be our neighbor in Maquoketa, Iowa. Her mother, who is widowed a second time, by the demise of Dr. Barker, is living with her now. The mother and daughter each owns houses here and in Los Gatos, and other places in California.

Mrs. Dobson-Barker and Mr. and Mrs. Ringlep are among the mainstays of Spiritualism in this city. It is principally by their efforts and energies that we are here now. As the mother and daughter are both clairvoyants and healers they keep up the work of the late Dr. Dobson.

This city is the place where the late Dr. Joseph Rodes Buchanan spent his last days and left his body. The Doctor was eminently scientific, and somewhat eccentric. He gave his head to some scientific association, for scientific purposes, as soon as he was done with it. At the news of the Doctor's death the doctors came and held an autopsy, and carried his head off with them; the result was that Mrs. Buchanan refused to have a funeral over a headless body, and I believe that Dr. B., if he entered heaven at all, went without the benefit of clergy.

This last page is written on January 5; we begin our services here to-morrow. We hope for the best, but are prepared for the worst. We have promised to stay until the first of March if the exigencies of the case seem to demand it. If not we will perhaps go to San Diego and Los Angeles, and over the Santa Fe, to Chicago and home. We already have a few invitations to speak on the route home, but cannot definitely arrange until later. We are willing to receive more calls. More anon.

The Children's Fraternal Home.

Having read Mrs. Longley's recent letter in The Progressive Thinker regarding the Children's Fraternal Home of La Crescenta, Cal., it is my desire, as a co-worker with all who labor in true Spiritualism, to contribute a word of especial commendation as to the work being done in the Children's Home, and to corroborate all Mrs. Longley has written as to the need of financial support from loving hands and hearts, and also as to the worthiness of the workers in the Home, of such support.

There has recently been chartered under the California State Spiritualist Association, the society known as the Children's Fraternal Home Society, its few members having but little of this world's goods or means to contribute, but being staunch and true friends of the cause of the homeless and motherless waif, and interested in this Spiritual Fraternal Home. When it is understood that Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan, as Manager and Matron, are trying to surround the rescued brothers and sisters there, not with a mere asylum, but with a home in every true sense of the word, it will be seen that the undertaking is well worth the financial support sought, and referred to by Mrs. Longley. Especially should the call find response in Spiritualistic circles, as every true principle of Spiritualism and the Universal Brotherhood are taught the children in the Home and an earnest effort made to fulfill. I am informed that Mrs. Longley's practical and sympathetic letter has already been fruitful to the extent of nearly a dozen responses of $1 and $2 donations and one of $5, each accompanied by words of encouragement, and love for the little ones, and all of which were gratefully received and appreciated, the contribution being faithfully applied to the work.

Living in close communication with the Home workers, I thus add my "mite" of hearty endorsement and encouragement, and sign myself their sister in spirit and in truth.

ANGELIC MINISTRATIONS.

They Reach Down to the Lowest Hells, Irrespective of Creed or Nationality, and Stand on Top as to Merit.

If you are a stranger in New York [says the New York Sun] and have a premonition that you are liable to die in your hotel and shudder to think what disposition would be made of your body until it could be sent home, here is a bit of information that may console you."

Then the city man who thus cheered his friend from out of town gave him this information:

"Over in a quiet street not far from Fifth avenue is a little, unpretentious church. Here is a card on which is written the name and address of the man who will look after your body free of charge.

"At his own expense and in his own way he has constructed a mortuary chapel in connection with his church. The church has nothing to do with the chapel. The chapel is under the personal care of the minister. Whether you are infidel, heathen or Christian makes no difference.

"You may never have entered a church in all your life. You may be friendless, which is the same as saying you may be penniless. No questions are asked.

"If you have this card in your pocket when you quit living the minister will be notified. He does the rest. No vision of potter's field or undertaker's establishment need haunt you.

"Interesting things are told about this man. One night a young woman was taken ill in a little hotel near by.

"The landlord knew she was a stranger. He inquired if he might send for a minister. She repudiated the suggestion. The landlord was worried. He acted upon his own judgment and sent for the preacher I am talking about, and he came over.

"He went to the woman's room and knocked. She was not too ill to answer the knock. As soon as she saw that the caller wore clerical garb she became indignant and slammed the door in his face. Not, I take it, because she objected to his calling, but because she didn't like the idea of being overruled by the landlord.

"The minister waited. When he thought the storm had subsided he knocked again, this time more gently than before. The woman again answered.

"'Are you here again?' she asked.

"'I am. I did not go away,' he answered.

"'May I ask why?' the woman inquired.

"'Certainly. I wanted to show you how to close a door.'

"There was something reassuring in his voice.

"'Come in,' said the woman, and the minister entered.

"I have it on the authority of the woman herself that the minister never referred to her illness. He quickly discerned her nature and talked about a number of subjects that interested her.

"Afterward in leaving the city the woman paid a return call at the minister's house. She told me that the visit of the preacher had probably saved her life.

"One day over on the East Side I saw this minister in company with a rabbi. A great gulf extends between the religious belief of these two men, but on this occasion they were on one of those missions of mercy which break down church barriers.

"The object of their mission was a man who had no church affiliations. But he was helpless and the two ministered unto him.

"Sometimes this man is seen at a club whose members for the most part are men of the world. He enters upon discussions with them about everyday affairs. He gets pretty close to them. When he is departing they thank him for entertaining them. Then he gets in his work.

"'Very well,' he says, 'I have visited you; come to my church Sunday if you have nothing else to do and hear me preach.'

"More than once this has occurred. And when he sees these old club fellows in a pew he quits the beaten track and presents some big charity which he has worked up, entirely outside of his own church as it frequently happens, and the plate is piled high with bills of large denomination."

Many Reasons for Thankfulness.

Our National Thanksgiving day is past and gone; but I find myself still very thankful. What am I thankful for? Oh, many, many things too numerous to mention. But I will mention some of the most leading in my mind.

First, The Progressive Thinker has long been before me every week and I have read every number over and over, and gained very much light and help from it, and the books that I have received from your publishing house. Yes, The Progressive Thinker has been my bible and shall be till I leave the mortal. I often wonder how you manage to furnish to your readers such a paper and the books for such a seeming low price.

Again I thank you. You are doing a vast amount of good. And since you have taught me by your unselfish example to do good, I am going to try to get The Progressive Thinker into new hands where it may help others as it has me. But I will be careful not to cast pearls before swine. Like Christian Scientists, I have known them to burn good truth literature that did not have the brand of Mary Baker G. Eddy on it.

I am thanful that I am not in their prison. I am thankful I am free.

I am thankful that I am not tied to any church. I used to be, but got free.

Thanks to my spirit influences, I was years ago influenced and guided by near and dear ones that belonged to my family. As much as they helped me, I did not know it for years, but I know it now. They want me to tell the readers of The Progressive Thinker how I found them and who they are. I will wait awhile.

Now, dear brothers and sisters, readers of The Progressive Thinker, please excuse me, but I want to suggest that inasmuch as we are truth students, and know that there is much light on the subject, to be had by reading the good message bearer, let's try and do good by getting new subscribers. What do you say? Will you? Just think of it once. Suppose each one of us who takes The Progressive Thinker should get one new subscriber then the subscription list would be doubled, and how in the world could the editor manage such a large publication? But we will risk that part. Now for work, friends. It is a good way to do good, and we all want to do good. I am as thankful as I can be. NOW FOR WORK!

CONSCIOUSNESS

And the Prominent Part It Plays in Advancing a Person to a Higher Plane.

What we know in this world is in exact ratio with the amount of consciousness we possess. Some possess more, some less—no two people on the same plane; hence no two people see just alike, which is the cause of so many institutions in the world purporting to represent the eternal truth—so many beliefs, so many opinions. Every fellow thinks he is right and the other fellow is wrong. The fellow who thinks he is right (and they most all do) takes it upon himself to enlighten the other fellow who is entirely wrong, point out the way to him, and do all those things that appeal to him as his religious duty in no uncertain tones. Now, if the fellow who is supposed to be wrong fails to respond to the so-called teacher, the one who thinks he is right, then friction begins, inharmony prevails and perhaps abuse fills the air, and friendship ceases indefinitely. Many a heart has been made to ache, many a tender spirit wounded. Can we make this more emphatic? I think so. There has been more blood shed in the name of so-called religion and truth than any other thing in the world's history.

Now, who is to be held responsible for this? Everybody in general and no one in particular; because it is all a process of evolution and essential in the development of a higher civilization. We often wonder why such conditions exist. We cannot always realize in our present status that they are the growing pains in the race as a body. Without the dark side of life, the adverse conditions, our growth would be an impossibility; in fact, we could not exist. It's the duality in nature, the positive and negative, that makes the existence of anything possible. It's the contrast that makes knowledge, by leading the mind to a higher plane of consciousness.

Let's carry this thought just a little further. Everything in all cosmic nature vibrates on different planes, which causes contrast, and the contrast makes physical nature possible. If every color was red, there would be no color. If everything was so-called good, there would be no good. The human mind can only learn and be carried to a higher plane of consciousness by this contrast. It seems to me that Nature or God knows his business; knows how to evolve a more perfect human race; hence it is useless to "kick against the pricks" and complain, but learn each lesson as it comes to us in this great school of life. Let us try and realize that every condition that comes into our lives has a divine purpose, however objectionable it may appear. Of course we may not always comprehend, and I might say only in rare cases can we comprehend and understand the mighty purpose of each lesson, because of our limited amount of consciousness. But we can rest assured that every condition in life (and there are many, many of them) means something.

When our children learn a lesson, another one is given them; but until they do understand the lesson and grasp the idea and comprehend the subject matter, the lesson will remain with them as a stumbling-block. So it is in this great school of life; lessons are continually given us whether we want them or not; or, in other words, we are brought in contact with conditions through the law of attraction adapted to our needs in the unfolding of soul until it reaches union with spirit, the divine part of man. This the end of human endeavor—the bringing of the individual soul into conscious touch and union with the center of all life.

So long as any condition annoys and worries us, just so long will that condition remain with us in some form or other. It remains because we have failed to grasp and understand the esoteric meaning of the condition in question. The law of attraction works in perfect harmony with our present status of unfoldment, attracting to us just that which we need—no more, no less.

Now, through the experiences these conditions give us our souls grow stronger; and in proportion as our souls grow, in that proportion the conditions that once pained us and annoyed us no longer affect us. To illustrate: A little child, who has not reached a very high plane of consciousness, is annoyed and perplexed by small things—conditions that are adapted to the child. But as the child grows toward manhood the conditions that seem to be of an adverse nature change. The things that worried him when a child no longer worry him now, because he has grown stronger in soul power; he has been evolved on a higher plane of consciousness. He is a man now, as far as stature is concerned, but only an infant so far as spiritual things are concerned. He has many lessons yet to learn, has many objectionable things to outgrow.

We have not yet learned who and what we are. We have not yet become acquainted with ourselves. To reach this high plane cannot be accomplished at once, as evolution seemingly works slowly, always along lines of least resistance. We must not become puffed up by our egotism and imagine that God only works through our own particular religion and according to our own particular rules; because if we do, then we retard our own progress by making ourselves positive to the higher and better things. We must become as little children, and thus make ourselves the recipients of the higher teachings.

I care not whether in the Mohammedan Mosque of St. Sophia of Constantinople or the Fire Temple with its burning naptha, from the walls of Baku or the "Rock Temple" of the Hindu and the "Pagodas" in Southeast Asia, all are the manifestations of the spirit shifting on a higher plane of consciousness or moving God-ward.

I opine there are many good people who will not agree with this kind of philosophy, for the reasons already stated in the beginning of this article; but nevertheless we hope to create thought, which in time brings consciousness. It is difficult to speak of the higher spiritual experiences in the words of the lower plane. Emerson, who had experienced the higher consciousness, says of it, "Every man's words who speaks from that life must sound vain to those who do not dwell in the same thought on their own part. I dare not speak of it. My words do not carry its august sense; they fall short and cold. Only itself can inspire whom it will. * * * Yet I desire, even by profane words if sacred I may not use, to indicate the heaven of this duty and to report what limits I have collected of the transcendent simplicity and energy of the Higher Law."

This high spiritual state of which the Sage of Concord speaks so beautifully and philosophically is only reached and understood by developing within himself the higher power of perception. To the objective thinker and the materialistic scientist this truth outside the pales of the five physical senses seems like diluted moonshine. He has not reached that particular plane of vibration, hence is not conscious on that plane. He may be perfectly honest and sincere and feel that his religious duty is to condemn real progress unless it stands the test of his limited senses' world. To those who are so unfortunately constituted the writer desires to say: There is a world you are not yet conscious of; there is a life you have not yet enjoyed.

It is not the purpose of this article to attempt to give any instruction how to reach this highest spiritual plane, or dogmatize in any way; only to give a hint of the possibilities of every human soul. All the instructions we need lie at the very threshold of our being, waiting an admittance just the moment we are ready.

It has been said, "When the pupil is ready the teacher appears. When I pass all my children know me."

A PSYCHICAL EXPERIENCE.

As Related by That Eminent Author, and Advanced Thinker, Matilda Joslyn Gage.

Some time ago, since the death of my friend Matilda Joslyn Gage, one of the authors of the "History of Woman's Suffrage" (in collaboration with Susan B. Anthony, and Elizabeth Cady Stanton). I came across one of her letters to me, in which she related the following personal experience, which, knowing her well, I think she would like to have made public. The letter was dated from her home in Fayetteville, N. Y., July 29, 1889.

"Dear Mrs. Underwood,—I must write you to say how greatly I was pleased with your psychic article in the August "Arena." Like yourself, I was trained a Christian, and have never lost my belief in immortality, save for one brief period, when certain scientific statements regarding the brain were first given to the world. I now believe the spiritual to be the only true life. My father was a man of advanced thought, and trained me from my girlhood to investigate for myself. In so doing, I have studied many things occult. For many years I have been familiar with Swedenborg's works and have read somewhat of Boehme, Franz Hartman, etc.

"In my early girlhood, when but just fifteen, 1841, some years before the experience of the Fox girls, I had VISUAL PROOF of the return of those called dead. Let me first tell you that I was trained by my father to an utter disbelief in anything of the kind, and when a girl companion staying with me over night would say, "What if a ghost should appear,' at the same time covering the head, I would reply: 'Pshaw! there is no such thing as a ghost. If there is I would like to have one stand by my bed,' which would generally cause a tighter drawing down of the bed-clothes by my companion.

"But the time came when I made that partial challenge for the last time.

"A cousin whose mother was dead, made her home at my father's for a number of years; she died of consumption the last day of February; my fifteenth birthday not occurring until the latter part of March. Her next youngest sister, a girl older than myself, took care of her during the latter part of her illness, staying at our home for some time after her sister's death.

"It was in April; a bright moonlight night, when the 'dead' one returned. Her sister and myself were in bed together chatting of the young people we had seen that evening, when we were suddenly startled to see the girl who had passed away six weeks before, stand at our bedside. Her eyes were open. She wore her grave clothes, stood lookinw at us a moment or more, then disappeared. As Hiawatha says:

"Whether rising as the mists rise,
Whether sinking as the sun sinks,
Hiawatha saw not, knew not:
Only knew that she had vanished.'

"I was not frightened; only amazed, as I would be to see anything strange and unexpected. But after she had disappeared I said to my cousin: 'Did you see that?'

"'Yes,' she replied, 'Aizina! Don't say anything!' covering her head with the bedding, an example I then followed. But naturally fearless, I slept many months and years afterward in that room and bed alone. The cousin who saw the spirit with me returned from her home in the West some twelve years afterwards, ill with consumption, and I took a twenty-mile drive in order to have a talk with her about that experience. She recalled the incident perfectly, but became so greatly agitated over it,—coughing and crying—that I was not able—did not dare say so much to her as otherwise I should have done."

Some years later than the date of this letter from Mrs. Gage, in personal chat with her, in Chicago, she related several other instances which had since occurred in her experience, of the power of the unseen to manifest its reality to those still in the flesh.

Mrs. Gage was an earnest worker in all reforms, a brilliant platform speaker, and a writer of fine ability, who was prominently before the public for many years.

COUNTERFEIT.

There was a man who always raised
His voice in dull complaint,
There was nobody whom he praised—
Not even the saintliest saint;
He stalked through life with ponderous mien,
And with superior speech
He criticised with air serene
Most everything in reach.

And people, as his voice they heard,
With one accord gave ear;
They lingered at his every word,
His logic oft was queer,
And still he talked, quite undismayed,
And men approved of it,
For folly, seriously displayed,
Oft passes as true wit.

A REMARKABLE OCCURRENCE.

How a Weird Nocturnal Visitor Saved the Life of a Woman in a Most Remarkable Manner.

As set forth in the American Revellie, of Billingham, Wash., a weird and uncanny tale of how her life was saved by a vision which came to her on the eve of awful danger, was told by a young woman prominent in educational work in the state who was in this city in attendance at the annual meeting of the Washington Educational Association. This disciple of higher education, who is unwilling to let her name be public, but who said she might be known as Miss Gray, her maiden name, is of a most matter-of-fact and practical character, and does not believe in visions and prophecies—all of which makes the story even more remarkable. "Mince pie for supper and a remarkable coincidence" is the way she disposes of the affair, but her story has certain features which seem hardly to be explained by any such convenient means.

The story was told while a party of the educators were dining at the Baker. From "shop" the conversation took a personal trend, and finally, when the group began to relate personal reminiscences, Miss Gray told her story.

"Speaking of ghosts," she said, "I have a real, sure-enough ghost story, which is a marvel in its way. Ever since it happened I have been kept wondering how it all came about, and thanking Providence that it did.

The Strange Nocturnal Visitor.

"I was visiting in Chicago several years ago, and at that time a new department store had just been opened whose elevators were death traps, pure and simple. Several people had been killed in them, but in spite of this an immense amount of pressure had been brought to bear to keep the story out of the papers, and the public at large was unaware of the true state of facts. I myself knew nothing of the danger, and on the first day of my arrival, planned to go shopping at that very place.

"That night I retired feeling perfectly normal, physically and mentally, and was never less nervous or hysterical in my life. In the middle of the night, however, I awoke with a strange feeling of foreboding which I could not explain. Sitting up in bed and looking around, I saw on the sill of my window, a man whose face I had never seen before, but whom I seemed in some way to dimly recognize. I could not imagine how he got there, as my room was on the second story, and it was a sheer drop of twenty feet from there to the ground.

"Scarcely knowing why I did so, I jumped to the floor and started for the window. As I approached it the man, looking always towards me, slid off the sill and seemed to drop outside. Hurrying to the window I looked out into the street, and there saw a sight which I am never likely to forget.

Ghost Beckons to a Hearse.

"A big arc light was in front of the house, and directly beneath it, where it caught the lamp's full radiance, stood a hearse, with my nocturnal visitor occupying the driver's box. The light fell brightly on his face, which was stamped indelibly on my memory, and as I gazed at him he looked me squarely in the face and beckoned to me.

"Call it a dream or what you will, it certainly disturbed and frightened me terribly, and it was hours before I could get to sleep again, but at last towards morning I fell into a restless doze. When I got up the vision of the night before was still strong in my mind, and I could not shake it off, ashamed as I felt of myself for brooding over it. Gradually I became angry with myself, and decided to go on with my daily avocations and put the dream out of my head.

"I had planned, you remember, to go to the new department store that day, and so I set off downtown and went to the store, and right there is where the really interesting part of the story commences.

"I had gone up to the fourth floor to make some purchases, and in the interest of my shopping had succeeded in forgetting all about the dream I had had. Wishing to go to the first floor to look over some things I had noticed before, I approached the elevator. Quite a crowd of shoppers was collected there, and the car filled up quickly as soon as the door was opened. Thinking that I would be crowded out and have to take the next lift I stepped back, but it seems that there was still some room, for the elevator man turned his face towards me, and said sharply, 'One more.'

Saved from Death by a Face.

Then he beckoned to me, and the light, falling strongly on his face, showed the very features of the man on the hearse. Naturally I did not go into the car. As a matter of fact, I think I fainted; I know at least that I was in a state of sick, deadly fright and shrank from the horrible man as I would from a gibbering ghost. Seeing that I was not coming he slammed the door to and the elevator started down, stuck, and dropped four stories, killing two of its passengers and injuring everyone else in the car.

"And then," Miss Gray concluded simply, "I was very glad that the man had showed me before that he meant to ride me in the hearse when he beckoned me."

"Did you ever try to explain it?" asked a university professor, one of the members of the party. Might it not have been telepathy?"

"Or auto-suggestion?" asked a high school principal.

"Or merely a vivid imagination?" suggested another educator.

"I don't know, I'm sure," said Miss Gray. "I myself have always said that it was indigestible food and a wonderful resemblance in faces. But still, 'there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in thy philosophy,' you know. I think I am satisfied to accept the vision as a strange fact and not try to explain it."

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned

"Actina," a Wonderful Discovery That Cures Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or prodding the eye for the cure of most forms of disease, for a new system of treating afflictions of the eye has been discovered whereby all torturous methods are eliminated. There is no risk or experimenting, as hundreds of people have been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye through this grand discovery, when specialists, they state, termed the cases incurable.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes, "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kan., writes: "My honest opinion of Actina is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It cured my eyes, and cured my wife of asthma."

Prof. Lockwood's Books.

Store your mind with the great but demonstrative truths found in consecutive order only in these writings.

Prof. Lockwood is the only writer, thinker and lecturer in this country who affirms that the evolution of the soul of man is in strict accord and agreement with the evolution of the soul of nature; and that the only proof of immortality inheres in an analysis of nature's fundamental principles and the co-relation of cosmic elements and energies.

These great truths are explained and demonstrated from the plane of the Spiritual Philosophy founded on Nature itself.

The Molecular Hypothesis of Nature and its Relation to the Philosophy of Spiritualism. A scientific demonstration of the invisible principles and attributes of nature and Modern Spiritualism. A mint of scientific truths as the basis of its phenomena. Price 25 cents.

The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism—A Menace to the American Civilization. The entire hierarchy of Ecclesiasticism arraigned as infidels for subverting the scientific demonstrations of universities and colleges, by substituting the immoral phantoms of the Mosaic Hypothesis. It is a hot shot. Price 25 cents.

Historical, Logical and Philosophical Objections to the Dogmas of Reincarnation and Re-Embodiment. A concise and masterly review of the historical origin of Reincarnation as an ancient dogma. Its illogical claims and inconsistent assumptions. Its glaring defects and dogmas dissected. Price 25 cents.

The Spiritualism of Nature. Modern Spiritualism has its basic truths in nature, and is proven not by the bible or any sacred cosmogony, but by an analysis of nature's self-existent principles. Price 15 cents.

Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth. The greatest book, and the greatest truth of any age; a book of 212 pages with several telling scientific illustrations. Continuity of life and the association of spirit realms demonstrated to be in scientific accord with principles of the Co-relation of Force, and the Conservation of Energy. The greatest book ever written in the defence and support of Spiritualism. Price $1.

The Relation Science Holds to Natural Philosophy and Its Conflict with Every Phase of Religion. In this essay the author shows that science is not a thing—a corporation or individual, but a process of inductive and deductive reasoning. Its acceptance means the death of Theurgical religions. Price 15 cents.

All of Prof. Lockwood's publications are on sale at The Progressive Thinker office, Chicago, Ill., and at the rostrum when he lectures. These treatises contain the wealth of a vast historical and scientific research.

The Universe By L. M. Rose. This booklet contains 71 pages of explanation regarding force; the beginning of creation; what matter is; what life is; immortality; psychic science; the soul of things, and ends with a poem entitled "Song of Psyche," by Emma Nickerson-Warne. Price 25 cents.

Science and a Future Life.

By Prof. James H. Hyslop. Price $1.50; Postage 10 cents.

This work is one of the most valuable acquisitions to the literature of Modern Spiritualism that has appeared of late years. It is scientific in its method, profound in its ethical deductions, unanswerable in its logic, and above all sympathetic to the truth whatever it may be and wherever it may be found. An Old-Time Experience.

A friend of the long ago, a gentleman of strict integrity, writes us the following facts in his experience: He was the editor and publisher of a paper in Pennsylvania, in 1848, and for many years thereafter, and devoted much space in giving accounts of events occurring at Hydesville, N. Y., in May of that year.

It was in June of 1848 when our informant learned of a young lady in a neighboring town who had developed mediumistic powers. He invited her to visit his family and furnish tests. She accepted, and the editor, with his family, spent a half day in investigations. Some of the communications were eminently satisfactory, while others seemed partial failures.

As evening approached our friend determined to have a public seance at the large residence of a near neighbor whose consent was gained. Business men and their wives, to the number of fifty or more, were invited and were present at the sitting. In our informant's family was a young lady, a Miss Helen Groger, resident of Canada, and an entire stranger to all present, save the two with whom she was temporarily stopping, and unknown to them until a very few days before. She ridiculed the idea that the dead could make communications to the living; but as she did not wish to remain alone in the house she accompanied our friend to the neighbor's and was seated in a front parlor, while the medium was seated in an adjoining sitting room.

Various messages were given by Miss Dewey, which were recognized, and transmitted from room to room, all of which were connected by open folding doors.

A professed spirit was reported by the medium, who said he had a daughter present with whom he wished to communicate. Then came words in a strange language which no one present could understand. They were written down and repeated in the next room where Miss G. and our informant were sitting. She sprang to her feet, highly excited, and exclaimed: "My father, my father!" She then said, with tears streaming down her face: "My father was a Frenchman. As he was dying I was called to his bedside, and the identical words repeated here to-night were addressed to me by him. Anglicized they mean, 'Be good, be honest, be virtuous, be truthful, loving and kind to all, and we shall meet again.'"

Our friend says: "More than fifty-eight years have swept by since this incident, but it can never be effaced from my mind. Is it any wonder a large number of those in attendance became Spiritualists from that hour? They knew the medium as an uneducated country girl, with no knowledge of French. A Mr. Wadsworth was present on the occasion, probably a clerk in a store. He was converted, and located many years ago in Chicago, where it is probable he was well known by the older Spiritualists."

Talk about mind-reading in a case like this! It is the simplest kind of shilly-shally. It is like a multitude of other cases which can only be explained on the hypothesis of a continuity of thought and memory into a future life, with ability to communicate with those yet in the flesh.

A good Christian should never go to law; rather should he give up his coat and his pants, and everything that he hath. Churchmen never go to law; they are the most docile and easy creatures in the world on matters of business.—Voltaire.

The scheme of nature, regarded in its whole extent, cannot have had for its sole or even principal object the good of human or other sentient beings.—J. S. Mill.

Crime Is Not on the Increase.

Very much is heard about the great wickedness of the people and the awful increase of crime during recent years. And the preachers in their pulpits dwell upon the horrors of the age, ascribing all the trouble to the loss of influence of the church in molding character and in making men good. They hope to overcome this tendency to vice by fitting more young men for the ministry, and increasing attendance on church services. As the fleeing Jews longed for the leeks and onions of Egypt, so our despairing brothers wish the past glory of the church restored to them.

It is almost too bad to undeceive the pulpit-pounders in regard to their claim that crime is on the increase; but it is probably true there has been no period in time when the percentage of criminals to population was so small as now. Neither has there been any period in modern history when the power of the church was at a lower ebb. The whole system is honey-combed with Liberalism.

There are three important factors that must be taken into account when comparing the criminalogy of the past with the present:

First, There is the immense increase in population, and the larger generation of the criminal class than ever before, in consequence of foreign and Catholic immigration.

Second, The "Satanic press" seems to delight in crime, judging from its immense display of frightful headlines to criminal news, to attract attention and increase the sale of papers. Half a century ago many journalists refused to advertise crime, because, said they, observation teaches the heralding of murders, arsons, robberies and other offenses against good order broadcast over the country, increases that which punishment or conviction does not successfully discourage. Railroad hold-ups are more common because of the few convictions of the guilty. Now, with our telegraph and telephone systems gathering up every item of criminal news which are given to the world before the day expires, and is read with avidity by youth, the boy is liberally educated in crime in the very morning of life. His first knowledge of vice comes from the newspaper, and he is ambitious to imitate Robin Hood, or some other famous freebooter, which he attempts as soon as he can gain possession of a revolver. Then,

Third, the criminal class, as evidenced by prison statistics, comes largely from the churches, the Catholics furnishing by far the largest per cent, while the clergy lead all other professions in populating the prisons. Ninety-five per cent of prison convicts were educated in the Sunday-schools. The casuist should trace the connection between Sunday-schools and our great reformatories.

It has been suggested that the well-known Christian saying, "Jesus paid it all," is reflected on the child, leaving the impression that belief in the "God's" redeeming power, will save all from other than secular penalties, thereby virtually inciting to crime. This should be taken into consideration when consulting criminal statistics.

But we wish to be emphatic in the statement, that VICE AND CRIME ARE POSITIVELY ON THE DECREASE, as is the influence of the churches, whatever the cause may be.

Gave to the Poor and Became a Pauper.

An Indiana man gave $100,000 to foreign missions and is now living in an almshouse, which leads the Titusville (Pa.) Herald to cogitate thusly:

"It is doubtful whether such a display of altruism exhibits more Christianity than insanity. Charity is chief among virtues, but it is a question whether a man has any moral right to beggar himself and his family for charitable or religious purposes. To live decently and provide for the comfort of those dependent upon him is the duty of every Christian man, and he is in the service of his Maker when engaged in such a pursuit."

That "Indiana man," whom the Titusville Herald questions whether he displayed more Christianity than insanity, forgets that Jesus is reported to have said, when a man approached him, and asked, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Then, claiming he had observed all of the commandments from his youth, when Jesus replied, Mark 10:21—

"One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven."

This idea was in harmony with all the "Master's" teaching. "It is easier," said he, "for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."—Mark 10:25.

The "rich man," see Luke 16:13 to 31, for no offense other than being rich and clothed in fine linen, faring sumptuously every day, died, lifted up his eyes in torment and begged his captors for a drop of water to cool his tongue, being tormented in a burning flame; but not a drop was given him. Lazarus, on the contrary, for no virtue but that of being poor, was given a place in Abraham's bosom.

The heathen are classed with the poor; and this "rich man," of whom the Titusville Herald writes, gave all he had to the missions, for the relief of those who he believed, unless instructed, would perish in unquenchable fires. It does closely resemble insanity to believe such teaching; but the whole Christian world who accepts this Bible teaching is in the same category with him, provided they obey the instructions of Jesus, and "give all they have to the poor."

Much of the religion to-day is only respect for the religion of the past.—Investigator.

THE TIDAL WAVE.

It Is Still Bearing Forward The Progressive Thinker.

From almost every State in the Union comes a recognition of the influence and worth of The Progressive Thinker. In fact, there is a TIDAL WAVE of VIBRATION extending throughout the United States in favor of the paper. It is, as is well known, the only paper published in the interest of Spiritualism that keeps its readers thoroughly posted in passing events connected with our Cause. Nearly all the leading states have selected it as their official organ. It was the only Spiritualist paper that published a FULL REPORT of the proceedings of the late N. S. A. Convention. On account of its EIGHT LARGE PAGES, it has space for a variety of matters pertaining to Spiritualism and occult subjects almost equivalent to a book of 350 pages, and no other Spiritualist paper can possibly compete with it. Read the following from Dr. Geo. A. Fuller, president of the Massachusetts State Spiritualist Association, and a leading lecturer and author:

"This association has recognized the power of the spiritual press and has ever been the steadfast friend of the same. It is with feeling of sincere regret that your president has to chronicle the cessation of the publication during the past year of the oldest advocate of Spiritualism in the world, "The Banner of Light," that for years had been a household necessity to the Spiritualists of New England, if not for the whole world. That paper was ever the friend and ally of this association. Much of its success was due to articles that appeared in the columns of the same. Our full appreciation of this journal has been expressed again and again, and at this time is not necessary to repeat what has been both written and spoken in the past. Now that it is no longer a living entity in our midst we have turned toward that journal known as "The Progressive Thinker," and its editor has assured us of its interest in the work we are seeking to do in the east. Therefore, at this time, we would urge upon all members of this association the advisability of their becoming subscribers to the same. We should pledge ourselves to do all in our power to increase its circulation in our state. Our thanks are already due to the editor and publisher of this paper, Mr. J. R. Francis, for the valuable assistance he has rendered our association in publishing our notices and reports. Your president would recommend that the thanks of the Massachusetts State Association of Spiritualists be rendered to him for the kindly spirit he has displayed toward our organization."

A response similar to the above has come from nearly all the leading States, showing conclusively that The Progressive Thinker LEADS in everything that pertains to Spiritualism. Never before in the whole history of the paper has the DAILY RECEIPTS been as large as now, showing conclusively that it is on a TIDAL WAVE OF SUCCESS. Such being the case, we are sending out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT something new and valuable—"THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST." It is nicely printed and contains THIRTEEN illustrations, and will lead you into a new field of thought. Send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay postage on the book, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year. Remember, the order for the book MUST be accompanied with the yearly subscription for the paper. The book is A GIFT to all who comply with the conditions.

PLEASE UNDERSTAND.

Every order for "THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF CHRIST must be accompanied with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and it WILL NOT be sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT on any other terms. If you only send ten cents in stamps without the order for the paper, the same will be applied to your subscription. Remember the conditions.

An Honest Question.

Is it not very possible where ritualistic work is introduced on the Spiritual platform haters of ritualism, the great majority of the thinking, reasoning world, will go out? There is a class of self-styled leaders in our ranks who are ambitious to make Spiritualism an appendage of the church, with its titles of, now reverends, soon bishops, and possibly a little later cardinals and ultimately a pope, from all of which, "Good God deliver us."

They who wish to make a church, with all the name implies, out of Spiritualism should find in some of the effete and fast decaying churches just what they covet. They can there revel in obsession, evil spirits under the supervision of the devil, if they wish; they can there find that sin and its penalty are protracted into another life; they can resurrect all the discarded creeds, and find something in each of them to harmonize with their views.

We own to an earnest desire to see Spiritualism standing on its own base, built on no creed, each member an equal among equals, and all laboring in harmony to establish the truths of a continuous life.

People may outgrow natural ignorance, but ignorance carefully cultivated, polished, propagated, and called divine truth, can rarely be outgrown, because it paralyzes the power of growth.—Moncure D. Conway.

Author Claims to Have Visited the Spirit World.

Dr. J. D. Buck, a Celebrated Physician and Author, of Cincinnati, Ohio, says The Great Work Loosens the Foundation of Many Beliefs and Dogmas—He Asserts It Sets Before Scientists Problems That Can Not Be Evaded and for Which They Have Offered No Solution.

A book with the above title has just been issued as Volume III. of the "Harmonic Series," by the Indo-American Book Co., of Chicago. It thus enters the arena of the twentieth century at the beginning of the New Year. It is a book that will have to be reckoned with. The present writer confesses to a good deal of diffidence and hesitation in attempting to give an epitome of this book. The book itself is, in many respects, the most remarkable publication of the century. It is, indeed, a Great Work, intelligently, faithfully, and nobly done. No intelligent reader can challenge the intelligence, the sincerity or the spirit of loving kindness; the writer shows himself to be thoroughly familiar with the basic principles of modern science, and equally familiar with the latest utterances and disputed propositions of the leading scientists of the day. He claims to speak from the standpoint of the "School of Natural Science" of which, at their best estate, Physical Science, Mental Science and Psychic Science are special fields of scientific investigation or separate departments. This is made clear in the opening chapters of the book in his "Classification of Data," and definition of Science itself.

But the title, "The Great Work," has a still broader and more ancient significance. Under this same title, "the Great Work," the "Seekers after God," the "Illuminati" and the real Masters and Scientists of all ages have designated their labors for the higher evolution of the individual, the redemption of man, the well-being of society, and the solution of the great problem of the meaning of life and the powers, beneficent uses, and destiny of the human soul.

The term Science is herein used as representing the actual knowledge gained by experience and confirmed by demonstration. Theory, conjecture, belief, dogma, are laid aside. The province of morals is shown to be one of the departments of Science, concerning which there need be neither uncertainty nor conjecture. Religion and Philosophy are accurately defined and shown to be in perfect accord with all true science, and as harmonic departments of human knowledge, human endeavor, and all human experience, thus realizing the dream of Sir Francis Bacon, in his Restauratio.

If the thesis and conclusions of the author of this book are unimpeachable, then the burning question, "If a man die, shall he live a gain?" is at last answered by "one who knows" through actual personal experience. Differing from all other writers on this subject, he does not speak in parables, or assume the garb of the mystic, but (as Falstaff said to ancient Pistol), "If thou hast any tidings, prithee deliver them like a man of this world." He answers Bacon's requirement to the fullest extent, "The inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it," the avowed purpose being to put the greatest discoveries and demonstrations of the real masters of all ages in the strict garb of science, and so to fit it to the spirit and the needs of the present age.

But aside from this message, which is "Addressed to the Progressive Intelligence of the Age," in the dedication of the book, this Great Work has a special message to, and profound significance for, every earnest and intelligent Freemason. Chapter IV., under the title of "The Lineal Key," gives the real origin, meaning and intent of modern Masonry; its relations to the Wisdom of India and ancient Egypt, and also the relation of Masonry to the great Religions of the present day. These relations are clearly defined in the spirit of language and exact science, and there can be no mistake as to their significance.

With this brief and incomplete foreword, brief references may be made to the various chapters, with the hope of inciting interest sufficient to make every searcher for Truth, and every lover of mankind desirous of carefully reading the book so that he may judge for himself.

The first chapter of this book of 456 octavo pages, and constituting the thesis of the whole work, may be quoted here in full:

"Evolution in Operation."

1. Nature evolves a Man.
2. Man, co-operating with nature, evolves a "Master."
3. The Master-Man, co-operating and controlling the forces, activities and processes of Nature, evolves a ——?

The question is answered as the thesis unfolds.

In the second chapter, "Classification of Data," the "things we know," the "things we assume to know," the "things we believe," and the "things we neither know, nor assume to know, nor even believe," are made clear.

From Chapter III. entitled "Truth and Light," I quote only a single sentence: "The purpose is" (of the Classification of Data) "to establish beyond all question the true relation which mere dogmas and beliefs sustain to relative value and importance of each to the individual."

Chapters IV. and V. "The Lineal Key" and the "Conflict of Authorities," have been briefly referred to in the earlier part of this review.

In Chapter VI., "Scientific Demonstration," may be found (Page 102) the following:

"If those who are responsible for the formulation and presentation of this knowledge to the world at this time were actuated by motives of self-interest by intellectual vanity, by the desire for popular approval, by the ambition for political or social preferment, by greed for material gain, or by any of the ambitions or weaknesses which inspire men to court the attention of applause of the multitudes—they would cease their labors immediately. For they are too wise in the wisdom of a hard and practical experience not to foresee that such motives, ambitions and desires could never find gratification nor fulfillment in such a work."

"If they did not possess that kind and quality of moral courage sufficient to face unflinchingly the ridicule, the derision and even the active hostility of the enemies of human progress, they would never approach the world at this time nor in the future. For it requires moral courage of no uncertain quality to stand forth and with uncovered breast receive the cruel shafts, and do it for the cause of Truth alone, without hope of other reward."

"There is only one process or one method, whereby the physical scientist will ever come to know with 'scientific' certainty that there is a spiritual world, and a life beyond physical death. There is but one way by which we will ever make the 'scientific demonstration.' That is by the development within himself of a higher power of perception." He must admit this new element into the problem. (Page 104.)

"The purpose of this present volume is to identify and elucidate the 'Constructive Principle of Nature' in its relation to and its effects upon individual life, and point out wherein man himself may become an intelligent factor in complying with the Principle and controlling the Process, in their relation to his own individual existence and well-being." (Page 124.)

Speaking of and contrasting the Destructive and Constructive processes, the author says of the Constructive: "It is attained by positive assertion of the individuality, by marvelous extension of individual consciousness, by complete liberation from all possibility of psychical subjection to or control by other intelligences." (Page 137).

"Constructive Spirituality is attained by intelligent assertion of one's own rights and privileges and the discharge of one's own duties and responsibilities." * * *

"It is called 'Constructive' because it builds up character and increases the capacities and powers of the essential being or Soul." (Page 138).

"Every process of Nature which falls within the intelligent comprehension of man has a natural foundation, a scientific basis, from which it proceeds." (Page 142).

"Does Constructive Spirituality rest upon a scientific basis? Answer: It does emphatically."

What is the scientific basis? Answer: Morality." (Page 144).

"Morality, as the word is used by the Great School, is the established harmonic relation which Man, as an Individual Intelligence, sustains to the Constructive Principle of Nature." (Page 169.)

"Science (to the Great School) is exact knowledge of the facts of Nature classified and systematized." (Page 184).

The following questions are answered fully:

"If there be Masters or Wise Men, why do they not present themselves to the world and prove their identity as such? Why withhold anything from anybody, if true?" (Page 194).

"Some of the Great Masters have defined Consciousness as 'The Sensorium of the Soul.' It is a Receiver."

"The entire problem of Evolutionary Development and Spiritual Unfoldment, in one sense, is but the problem of how to extend the Individual Consciousness and thus enlarge the field of its operations." (Page 231).

Then follows a brief chapter on the Will, showing it to be the complete antithesis of Consciousness, the one positive and the other negative; one the doer and the other the receiver.

"The highest and most exalted phase or mode of consciousness is the desire of the Soul for Individual Completion. Its satisfaction involves the highest activity of the Soul, which is Love. Its complete satisfaction we call 'Happiness.'" (Page 244).

In a summary of Chapter XVIII:

"The purpose * * is to make clear one more element of the Formulary which enters into the 'Attitude of Soul,' from which alone our Personal Efforts will impel us forward in the direct line of Constructive Spiritual Unfoldment. The element is to be found in the Spirit in which we stand upon our rights, perform our Duties, discharge our Obligations and carry the burden of our Personal Responsibilities." (Page 319).

"The true Master seeks only the place wherein his intelligence and his abilities shall accomplish the largest measure of the most valuable service to the cause of Truth and Humanity." (Page 333).

Under the law of evolution, each one of us is bound by the most exalted obligation that could be fixed upon us, viz.:

"To make use of all the faculties, capacities and powers of the Soul.

"To make a right use of them in such manner as to conform our lives to the Constructive Principle of Nature.

"To do this to the full limit of our individual abilities.

"To do it all the time." (Page 347).

"There being but one fixed and definite standard of life for each individual, and that being the highest standard of Equity, Justice and Right (as determined by the Soul attributes of the individual himself at any given time), it follows that each individual is bound by the great Law of Personal Responsibility, to conform his life to that standard." (Page 388).

The closing chapter, on "The Passing of a Master," in which a very clear outline is given of the separation of the composite man into the elements that are "of the earth earthy" and those that pass to the beyond is unique, as nothing approaching it reduced to a scientific formula can elsewhere be found in literature. After the most appreciative reference to the Master who taught the author of the "Great Work" nearly a quarter of a century ago and who nine years since passed to the Beyond, this remarkable book closes with a most beautiful invocation from the ancient Ritual.

No one can realize more forcibly than the present writer how meager is the foregoing review of a book that is destined to excite very wide interest, and possibly heated controversy, as it loosens the foundations of many beliefs and dogmas and sets before the world of Science problems that it can not evade and to which it has hitherto offered no solution.

The author writes classic English and his work is divested of all obscurity. There need be no mistaking his meaning. The book is printed in clear type, bound in blue silk and gold designs.

Still They Are Coming!

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

W. M. Jenkins writes from Bradentown, Fla.: "I would also like to become a subscriber for Andrew Jackson Davis' work. Will remit as soon as desired."

J. H. Dreher writes from Scranton, Pa.: "Kindly put my name down for a set of A. J. Davis' works when published, at $20 per set."

A gentleman in high position writes from San Salvador, Salvador, C. A., but doesn't wish his name to appear in print; "Please put me down for a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis' works. Whenever you want the cash send me word."

Peter Wickstrom writes from Seattle, Wash.: "Kindly put me down as one of the subscribers for Andrew Jackson Davis' books. I think this is a golden opportunity, as I have long sought to procure them, but failed."

Spiritualists of Illinois Take Notice!

The annual meeting of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association will take place on the morning of Wednesday, February 20, at 10 o'clock, in the Blue Parlor on the third floor of Handel Hall, 40 Randolph street, Chicago.

The Annual Mid-Winter Mass Meeting or Convention of the State Association will also take place at Handel Hall, beginning Tuesday evening, February 19, and continuing through Wednesday and Thursday, day and evening sessions.

Noted Speakers and Mediums from neighboring states have been engaged for the occasion, and will be assisted sweetest harmony in musical vibrations.

The musical part of the program will be in charge of Mrs. Carrie Crawford Pierce, a noted and prominent singer and teacher of music in Chicago; thus assuring the Convention of the sweetest harmony in musical vibration.

Societies auxiliary to the State Association should bear in mind that the membership per capita tax dues must be paid to the secretary (Dr. H. A. Cross) on or before the morning of February 20, to entitle them to delegate representation at the annual meeting, when reports of officers and the election of officers for the ensuing year will take place.

Which the Most Probable?

It is related as a fact, that on the ceiling of one of the rooms of the famous palace of Frederick the Great, is painted a great spider with its web. The origin of this peculiar decoration was as follows. This apartment of the king's breakfast room adjoined his bed chamber. Every morning when his majesty entered this room he was accustomed to find a cup of chocolate awaiting him. On one occasion, as he was about to drink, he thought of something he had forgotten, and returned to his bed room. When again seated at the breakfast table he discovered a great spider had fallen from the ceiling to his cup. Naturally he called for a new cup of his favorite beverage. The next moment he was startled by the sound of a pistol shot. No sooner had the cook received the order than the report of a pistol was heard. The cook, who had poisoned the cup, supposing he was detected, blew out his own brains.

It was in remembrance of his narrow escape from death, the spider, with its web, was painted on the ceiling.

It is usual to credit like incidents to the interposition of Providence, and hosannas are sung in his praise because of them. Not doubting the genuineness of these frequent occurrences, which the most probable, that God, with a limitless universe, and a wilderness of worlds in his keeping, has turned aside to interfere in the affairs of men; or that the loved ones who have joined the immortals, with a full knowledge of transpiring events, aided in preserving a valuable life that he may accomplish some worthy purpose he had in contemplation?

Numbers Don't Make Right.

There are two sides to the question of creeds, and the imitation of the rituals of the churches by Spiritualists. If it is the desire to enlarge membership, build up another church, and play second fiddle to Catholicism or Protestantism, then creeds, and symbols and all the inheritances from ancient paganism are in order. Their costly churches, salaried priests, mock ceremonials ad nauseum will come into Vogue, and Truth will again take her departure. If, on the contrary, principles are of more value than a braggart display of numbers; if we desire to inculcate the teachings of our loved on the other side of life we will discard all the trappings and mummery borrowed from ancient religions, transmitted to our times by the orthodox churches, and be content to drift as we have done for near fifty-nine years, growing wiser, and we hope better as the years have gone by. Better be in the right with a few than in the wrong with the multitude.

AN ABSOLUTE GIFT TO ALL.

Already about 1,500 copies of THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS have been GIVEN AWAY, and still the orders for it are flowing to this office in one STEADY STREAM. We would like to give away ONE MILLION COPIES. This book contains FIFTEEN illustrations, and constitutes the MISSING LINK in the history of one of the most remarkable mediums that ever lived. Every minister of the gospel; every theologian; every church member; every free thinker, and every Spiritualist should have this book, for as a matter of history it is ESPECIALLY IMPORTANT for future reference, and as it is sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay postage, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year, we expect to distribute a vast number—in fact we would like to send out ONE MILLION COPIES. The Regan Printing House is now busily at work in turning out another edition, and we expect to be able to supply all demands.

Let Us All Rejoice.

Science comes to the aid of the church at last. Telephones, it matters not how numerous, may be connected with the receiver, into which the minister prays, sings, preaches or exhorts, and away goes the voice, borne along on the wing of electricity to every worshiper, and every aspirant for heavenly glory who is connected at the other end of the wire. The converted and the conscience-stricken alike, in the seclusion of home, and home surroundings can hear the spoken word, and triumphant anthem. And there, on bended knee, he can be seen by God and receive his blessing as fully as in some dim old cathedral specially dedicated to his service by priest and chalice, resounding organ and re-echoing choir.

But criticisms are already made. The magnetism of the speaker is lost, and the hypnotic effect does not reach the kneeling neophyte. And then comes some blasphemous skeptic and inquires: "Why not charge the phonograph cylinders laden with prayer, and song, and sermon, and anthem, and bring it out each Sunday morning to wrestle with God, and save the wear and tear of dress parade to church, with all its attendant pleasures of learning the latest fashions with incidental comments?

A Hopeful Outlook.

The great breach between the Vatican and France, instead of decreasing, is widening. To add to the interest dispatches from Berlin represent the sympathies of the German government are with France. Chancellor Von Buelow is represented to have declared in a recent manifesto in the form of a letter to General Libert, president of the German Anti-Socialist League, that "it is preferable the liberal radical parties shall be strengthened rather than the clericals."

Spain, weary of priestly dictation, and giving sure indications that the government under its youthful king is determined to be supreme, it looks as if Vatican control of the secular arm of governments in Europe is nearing its end.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

The Dangers of Psychism.

A Lecture by Col. H. S. Olcott.

Col. Olcott is the leading Theosophist of the world. At one time a lawyer in New York City with a lucrative practice, he abandoned his profession and directed his whole attention to the study of Occult matters as connected with Theosophy. His views here presented will attract world-wide attention, and the interest therein will not be lessened because, in some respects he differs from the great mass of Spiritualists, for they even differ widely among themselves in regard to many important questions, and this fact renders it still more important that Col. Olcott's views be carefully considered. But equally valuable will be the lecture that will follow next week from the highly gifted Elizabeth Harlow, on the same subject, the Dangers of Psychism, the two addresses furnishing an intellectual feast to every student of the occult.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—The subject which has been given to me to discuss this evening is one of very great importance, one which involves a great deal of danger, which leads to a great deal of deception and is often followed by great misery. Psychism is a system of research into the nature and functions of the psychic. It is the principle between the body and spirit mentioned also by St. Paul. It deals with a border land, as Mr. Stead has called it, between this world and the next; a land of clouds and darkness; a land of fearful sights and scenes whose appalling nature has been so vividly portrayed by Bulwer Lytton in his work Zanoni.

Now you will find taught in all books and literature that deal with the subject that the postulant for knowledge of the after-death life, if he wishes to succeed, must call to his aid a will and courage that cannot be daunted by any experience, however startling. It is taught that the neophyte must go into each of the planes of being that are occupied by what is called the elemental spirits; that is to say, the semi-intelligent forces of nature which handle matter under the direction of a general law, and also under special direction.

THERE ARE THE SPIRITS, according to the classification, of the earth, the gnomes that haunt the mines; the spirits of the air, the sylphs; the spirits of the water, undines, and the spirits of the fire, salamanders.

Now this is a matter of observation, that man embodies in his temperament some of these elements; some of these elementary spirits go toward his makeup, and the preponderance of the one or the other is shown in the natural inclinations of the individual. For instance, he who is akin to the Spirits of the Mines or earth, or gnomes, is the one who is a born explorer, who finds the lead or gold or silver; or the man who goes into the market and accumulates money. Some of the greatest financiers have been very stupid and uninformed about general matters, but they have got a certain skill or cunning which leads them to accumulate money; it is no trouble; they cannot tell you how they do it. They only know that they have an instinct that tells them when to operate, and leads them usually to success.

Those who are imbued with the Spirits of the Water are attracted to a sea-faring life. The young man away back on the prairies who never saw a ship or port feels an irresistible longing to find his way to the ocean, and take up the life of a mariner, and is not discouraged or turned back by any hardship through which he has to pass.

Those who are imbued with the Spirits of Fire are those who when spiritual mediums are able to handle fire with impunity. We had an American medium some years ago, a woman, who could handle red-hot lamp chimneys and coals of fire. Then there was Home, the medium, who could take burning coals of fire out of the grate and hold them in his hand and put them on top of another person's head without that person being burned. These are the people who in certain Oriental countries perform yearly the ceremony of walking the fire. I have seen it myself. It is done in this way. A trench of twenty feet in length is dug, six or eight feet wide and perhaps four or five feet deep. For twenty-four hours before the ceremony is to take place wood is consumed and reduced to a state of burning embers. A bed of coals is formed and the heat is something intense. If you should step near the pit you would get scorched. When the time for the ceremony occurs a man who is some kind of a low-caste priest with some fantastic dress on him, comes out and holding a tray in his hand with some figure of a god, or temple, or something of that character on it, he makes a circumambulation of the pit a certain number of times, all the time chanting. He is followed by some of his devotees from the same temple. When they have made the circumambulation then they try to ascertain if the gods of the fire are favorable. To do that they take a handkerchief and they lay it on the bed of hot coals; if the handkerchief is not consumed that is a sign that all is ready; if it is, they wait and go on with the ceremony. Sometimes they throw on some other article, the same test being applied.

WHEN THEY ARE READY the priest begins at one end of the pit to go down the slope of the edge to the bottom and walks deliberately through this bed of live coals, and his followers after him and then they turn round and come back, and so keep on. The people at large come close and walk around through it but they do not get burnt; that is to say if they have made certain preparation for the ceremony by systematic bathing.

When I saw this ceremony it was made for our particular benefit on the grounds of the Hindoo Central College at Benares. Among the foreign visitors who were with us at the time was a French physician of the navy, a man of science, a member of our society, who wished to inform himself whether there was any fraud or not. He deliberately took off his shoes and stockings and walked over the coals. That was a case of heroic courage on the part of the scientist; he was not burnt. He wanted to try it over but I advised him to leave well enough alone.

A student of occult science would say that by obtaining the favor of this Elemental who is attached to the individual, and has been placated by worship and offerings a "koush," a fine layer of impenetrable, condensed ether is laid over the fire, invisible, but which enables the person to walk with safety over this very hot bed of coals. When the priest goes away, if anyone dares to walk the fire he is sure to be burned.

One who is akin to the Spirits of the Air or Sylphs, is the one who climbs on top of barns or trees, and who becomes a tight-rope walker or balloonist. They are never happy unless they are above the surface of the earth.

One who is akin to the Spirits of the Water is attracted to the sea and has the best chance for his life in case of shipwreck.

NOW I AM STATING these things to you here without any reserve, because I personally know they are true. I have told you what I have seen done by a European, untainted with any Oriental blood, walking with impunity on a bed of coals.

There are superstitions, so-called, among the Russians and others, that a child born on a certain night in the year has a congenital power to see these Elementals of the other world; they are friendly with them, and will come and play with them like living children, and lead them into all kinds of adventures.

There are other persons who have the power of discerning these spirits, and some can attain it by a short course of training. These Schools of Psychism are furnished by our Spiritualistic circles. The development of mediumship implies the development of psychic power, where the person awakens the capacity to see things himself. Now the theory upon which the man can go into the domains of these different Elementals and overcome and subjugate them, is that he is possessed of the divine spark which gives him natural dominion over all interior races; but if it happens by reason of his bad habits, sickness or debauchery that he loses the strength of this divine spark, he then loses gradually his power over these elements and finally falls their victim. Here come in all the stories you have read about the magician who has been carried off by the devils that he has raised, the Greek legend of Actaeon, who was slain by his own hounds.

YOU MAY GET THEM to bring you money or jewelry or anything you like for your own profit or that of friends, but you have put yourself under obligations to them from the beginning, and they are slaves that become masters and finally they will not obey you, but they take dominion over you, and drive you to the last extreme of misery.

When I went to India thirty years ago there was a man, a Mohammedan, who, it was said, had obtained from his father the secret of control over a certain band of Elementals. He was known to all principal European officials there, and was in the habit of frequenting their company. He would go to their houses and at their request he would bring them things that they would ask for—for instance fruits out of season. He would go to the door of the room and COMMAND THEM TO BE BROUGHT, and the next moment he would have in his hand what was asked for. Sometimes they would ask for a bottle of brandy or whisky or beer; whatever they asked for he would get in the same simple way.

I knew a man on whom he played a very nice trick. It had been said this man had only to touch an article of gold or silver, or lock it up in a double safe, and the next moment he would have it in his hand; or you might take a watch or a ring and tie it up in a handkerchief and throw it into a great well; he would then ask you where you wanted them, and you would say you wanted the watch in such a fruit or a tree. He would ask you to pick the fruit and open it, and there would be the object that you sought for. One time he was at a bazaar and he went to the jewelry shop in the place and there was a display of gold objects of different sorts, and precious stones. He took one of these gold canes in his hand and put it down, and when he got home he ordered the elementals to bring him that cane; they did. He tried that once too often and he was arrested. They found the stolen articles; he was tried, convicted and sent to prison, and died in prison.

YOU WILL FIND in accounts of this phenomenon that when a superior is locked up in prison, he loses his power; he must be free to exercise his will. In the case of this man the band of elementals that he obtained control over from his father gradually deserted him until finally there was only one left, and that one was so malicious that when he brought at the man's request a bottle of brandy it would be thrown at him, and he had to throw up his hands to guard his face. He had fallen into habits of degradation and had lost his power. The only way you can have intercourse with these creatures is to preserve absolutely your self-command and be master throughout.

Sometimes these creatures will serve their masters by finding stolen property for people. Sometimes they will take your property and hide it away so you cannot find it, and perhaps you will have to search everywhere, and then you will find it in the middle of the floor uncovered in full view. There is a great deal of literature on the subject. Among others you should read the History of Magic, in three volumes. The author gives you an account of the magic of all different nations. Among other things they do, statues of gods would suddenly lose their weight and float in the air. He tells of a brass statue being carried on the shoulders of a man and it would have no weight at all; and then some small object would be endowed with solid weight and it would be impossible for the strongest man to lift it.

The founder of the great school of Yogi enumerates six of the natural powers, so-called, that can be obtained by man. Among other things are the endowing objects with extreme lightness, and the opposite, enormous weight.

Before the Theosophical Society was formed I took a notion to look into Spiritualism, which I had not looked at for some time, and I found in Vermont there was a family having remarkable phenomena of materialization. I thought that was the most interesting psychic fact of the century, and I went there for the New York Daily Herald. I stayed there two months, writing many weekly letters which produced a great sensation. The New York Herald said I had divided attention with Grant. The performances took place in the presence of witnesses. I had with me an artist who made sketches of everything.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA ordered members of the Royal Society of St. Petersburg to make investigation and to get a medium through whom phenomena could be produced. A representative of the professors from St. Petersburg asked me, and later my colleague, Mme. Blavatsky, to find for them such a medium, and we spent a good deal of time looking for them. Finally we selected Dr. Slade. After three months we wrote to St. Petersburg, and they sent money for his expenses and he went over there.

Among the experiments that I saw made in the presence of a medium named Young was this: She would sit at the piano and play, and as many people as could would sit on the top of the piano and around it, and the piano would be raised and keep time to her music. She would go to the piano and put her hand on it and order the spirits to lift it, and it would be lifted. I tried an experiment with her once. I went with a raw egg in my pocket and two English walnuts, and when she was ready to do the phenomena I said, "Will you allow me to try an experiment? I want to hold that egg in my hand underneath the square piano and you put your hand under mine and order the piano to rise."

She did so, the piano raised, and the egg in my hand without breaking it. Then I took the two walnuts and I asked her to have the spirits raise the front legs of the piano, put them underneath, and ask to have the spirits let the legs down and raise them just touching the walnut shells without breaking them. She did that. She had in her nature that element by which she could command a manifestation of that Principle of Lightness.

Some people think it is a most desirable thing to cultivate the faculties of second-sight or clairvoyance, and clairaudience. They are evidently ignorant of the nature of the things that they are undertaking, or the enormous dangers they are running—dangers to themselves and to others in devoting themselves to the cultivation of these psychic faculties. P—, the founder of the school of Yogi, enumerates the different supernatural powers, and warns us not to cultivate them, because he says they will develop themselves in the progress of a man's development; that vanity and curiosity will lead him away from the straight course that leads him to the attainment of supreme knowledge.

THE BUDDHA, who was recognized as one of the greatest adepts, expressly forbade his disciples to show these phenomena. He acknowledged they could attain notoriety, but warned them against the danger of showing them. It is related that one time he was coming to a place where some of his disciples were gathered and a man came along with a begging bowl, an article of price, quite contrary to the religion prescribed for the ascetic monks, and he put in on top of a tall pole. He said he would give it to any monk who would be able to raise from the ground and take it. Just before he got there one of the disciples did it. The Buddha caused the bowl to be broken and gave orders that they should never exhibit these powers.

These powers can be used for beneficial purposes sometimes. It is affirmed that it is possible to do the thing, the so-called miracle, which is described in the Bible, the miracle of the loaves and fishes; that having a certain amount of grain as a nucleus they can draw from the ether enough material of the same kind and cause a duplication of this grain, so in time of famine food can be obtained. I think that the miracles described in the Bible have been duplicated, except in the case of raising a person from the dead.

AMONG THE POWERS that a person can have that are perfectly beneficent is the power of healing the sick. You can relieve human suffering and do good without the least harm to yourself, on the condition you do not do it for money. You remember the story in the Bible where Simon the sorcerer came to Peter and Paul and offered a large sum of money for them to teach him to heal. He was told, "Thy gifts perish with thee." Such gifts cannot be bought for gold or silver. If you can keep the PRINCIPLE OF UNSELFISHNESS, you can use this divine power for the good of mankind or your neighbor, but if you give yourself up to it for the sake of making money, there is a taint of selfishness and influence that you draw about you that will in time play you some trick.

One time near Colombo I began healing the sick. I had done it before and understood the science. The cures were so surprising and numerous that the people followed me around and locked up their roads, and I saw the people. There was among the cases that came there one that illustrated the necessity of using the power with a benevolent spirit. There came to me among other sick people one who was half paralyzed. I took hold of him; in half an hour I cured the paralysis of his arm. Then I told him to sit down. I was tired and wanted to rest a little while. While he was sitting there they said he was a rich man, a miser. He had spent 1,500 rupees without getting relief.

IF THERE IS ANYTHING that is loathsome to a student of occult science it is selfishness. There is something so degrading to use these powers for the sake of money. I said, "Take him away, I don't want to see him any more. You may tell him he has his arm cured without any cost, and see if he can get his leg cured."

Then they importuned me not to send him away. After much persuasion I said, "Bring him here." They brought him, and I cured his leg so that he could move it like the other; he could hop on it. I was making tours at that time, and went away. Two weeks later I came back in that same district. Among other cases I inquired about this man. They said, "His arm remains cured, but his leg has relapsed." The explanation was that when I treated his arm I had only a benevolent impulse. When I treated the leg I forced myself to use my power. There was not that sympathy for him which made the vibrations of the nervous system to correspond, therefore the cure was not permanent, only a temporary local stimulus.

After going from Ceylon to Calcutta I was obliged in response to public clamor to go on with the healing art. I did not want to do it, it took too much time. Finally I was persuaded to do so. The first thing I did was to cure a man of blindness; it was a hardening of the optic nerve, which makes a man stone blind, and very difficult to cure. I did not know of the difficulty. I simply went to work and cured him in ten treatments. He could read the small type of a newspaper. Finally it got into the newspapers. One day an European came and asked permission to stop and see my cures. He introduced himself as the chief of a special mission of graduates that had been organized by the University of Oxford, and sent out to India to convert the high class Brahmins whom the ordinary variety of missionaries had no influence with at all. So he stopped to see me, and finally when I drove away the people he said:

"I tell you frankly, I never would have believed it if I had not seen it with my own eyes."

I said, "What did you see? Is not the very same thing described in the Bible as done by the apostles?"

"Yes."

"They are called miracles?"

"Yes."

"Any man of good will power who has studied the science as a science can exercise this power. Why should you want me to believe the so-called miracles? If their works were miracles then mine is a miracle; if theirs was not a miracle then mine is not."

He made a most ingenious evasion. He said: "It seems possible our Lord did the miracles through the human side of his nature."

NOW AMONG THE GIFTS that are developed is second sight or clairvoyance. Some people think that if a person has got clairvoyance he must be extremely pure and advanced spiritually. That is absolutely false, and the possession of none of these gifts is any proof whatever of such a condition of affairs. I have known persons immoral, untruthful and unprincipled to have these powers; and, in fact, I could tell you stories which are not fit for a mixed audience that would astonish you and show you that sometimes these powers are only available when the person has degraded himself by resort to some vicious habit.

If you look at —— book on Genius and Insanity you will find long lists of public men, artists, sculptors, publishers, soldiers, musicians, who have been addicted to these immoral habits. You know our brilliant poet Poe always did his best when he was drunk. You know some of the greatest actors on the stage have been unable to play up to the mark unless they were steeped in liquor; so that I repeat, the possession of these faculties is no proof whatever of spiritual advancement. It is the ignorance of this side of the matter that makes many have such mistaken views. There is only one way of gaining spiritual knowledge and that is by LEADING A SPIRITUAL LIFE, AND BY CONTROLLING THE LOWER NATURE AND ENCOURAGING THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE HIGHER FACULTIES.

There are some nations who inherit some of these gifts. For instance, Highlanders have second sight. Usually a man forms a prevision of death; he will see a shroud coming up from the feet of a person near the time of his decease. Usually it comes out exactly as foretold.

By this possible unfolding you are entering into a new world without any map or guide or landmark; you know absolutely nothing of the course you have to follow. Consequently you make yourselves passive or mediums.

THERE IS NOT a greater falsehood than the assertion that mediumship is conducive to the development of adeptship. Adept means the superior normal possession of will power and knowledge of the highest side of nature and the power to control its operations on a limited scale, whereas mediumship means the giving oneself passively to the control of unknown forces. A person sits down in a circle ignorant of the conditions of mediumship, perhaps sensitive, and like a psychic sponge he absorbs the influences about the medium. A person coming into that circle from a scene of debauch brings with him very bad influences, and as the medium and other sensitives present cannot choose as to what they will receive, they absorb the bad influences and bad results follow.

Constant repetition of phenomena leads ultimately to satiety. I have been told since I came here that in Chicago itself there is a sense of disruption among the Spiritualists. That this is in the air of Spiritualism is well known. It is easy to account for that. They have gone on year after year with a surfeit of phenomena, unable to account for any of it scientifically, and getting the teaching which, however well it may be expressed, is after all unsatisfactory, incomplete. It has but one side. There is nothing in its philosophy to provide for a system of compensation or punishment for misdeeds. Persons go on out of the body just as they are at the moment of death, climbing up the golden stair until they arrive at a state of beatitude. That does not satisfy the reasonable man, the man who reads treatises upon philosophy and science. By and by he gets tired of it. That is the reason why so many hundreds and thousands of persons come into theosophy from Spiritualism. I myself led the way. I was familiar with Spiritualism for twenty years before I knew about the Eastern philosophy. I found I had acquired a knowledge in various researches in Psychism which made me understand the Eastern science when expounded by Mme. Blavatsky.

The yearning to know something about life beyond the veil, the desire to penetrate into the future if possible, the wish to have messages from departed friends, the wish to know something about lost property or lost relatives, all these things impel a person to seek the nearest source of information on the subject, so they go to paid mediums and get sometimes the worth of their money, and sometimes not. Although I have seen hundreds and thousands, and a large part of the phenomena of mediumship is real and reconcilable with scientific explanation, I make an individual rule to start with each new case, as though an open question whether the phenomena were honest or dishonest, and I collect my evidence in such a way as to exclude the chance of fraud. That is the only way you can do with any surety at all.

THE HINDOOS have a system of telegraphy, wireless telegraphy, between the dead and living members of the family which is very interesting. In India swarms of crows are flying, and pick up every article of food to be found. It is understood between the dead man and his family that they will perform this ceremony. Hindoos believe that after death a man sleeps for a certain time, lies perfectly unconscious, awakens from that; in the case of the high-class man who has presumably had some spiritual training, in a very short period, in the low class man or laboring man, it is longer.

At the appointed time, according to the caste of person, the housewife makes a bowl of rice and they will put it down on the ground. Then the family withdraw to a little distance and wait to see if the crows will swoop down and pick up the food. If they do not do this, they know the dead man is there, hidden from them, but watching and preventing the crows who have seen him, from coming in. Then the head of the family comes forth and asks various things to know what the man wants, because they believe no person will linger near the earth unless he has an unsatisfied yearning for something to be gratified. If they don't ask the right thing, the crows don't take away the rice.

So they go on until they hit upon the thing the man wants, then the crows take the rice, and they know what the dead man wants. Sometimes the dead man wants them to make a pilgrimage to some sacred shrine; then it is agreed between the deceased and his family when the party shall go and make the offerings at the temple. They make offerings of rice bowls and oil and such things, and the dead man signifies his satisfaction by breaking off the branch of a tree near the house. But they never disturb them after that. They consider it horrifying to disturb the repose of the dead. They believe that the dead pass on to their natural sphere. They never cultivate intercourse between the dead and living—the educated and high minded. That specialty of necromancy is confined to the lowest class of people. I have seen the thing performed, and it is not a very edifying sight, I assure you—a wild dance and burning different things on a tray, and chanting and screaming.

THEY TRY TO HELP the dead through their different phases from the time of leaving the body until they obtain liberation. That ghostly ceremony is performed the first year and every year for a certain number of years, on the anniversary of the person's death; and they recite in their prayers for liberation the names of ancestors, in the case of Brahmins extending to seven or eight generations. Everything is intended to facilitate the progress of the spirit of man, and all the teachings of all the religious writers inculcate the idea of having domination over the lower nature and acquiring the development of spiritual faculties.

Unfortunately the students of psychism in our country and some of the Western countries are not guided at all by common sense. The key is the exercise of common sense. I tell you now that a man that enters into this research must always keep his consciousness and his will power, so that if, for example, he is transported from this physical plane to another and is confronted by some horrible tribe of Elementals, he must always maintain that he is master, and however he is terrified, they cannot come near him; he is clothed with armor impenetrable to the evil spirits. And while it is extremely interesting to see all phenomena, it is most imprudent for the person to give himself up to experiment upon. This holds good in regard to mesmerism and hypnotism. Great danger can be run in the practice of these things.

I HAVE SEEN EXPERIMENTS in the great auditorium in Paris by Charcot and others. I saw two cases where crime was suggested to the patients and immediately they were ready to commence the execution of it. When we were coming from the hospital, he said absolutely they would have done the thing suggested if let alone, because the moral sense was perverted, paralyzed. There you see in proportion to your sensitiveness is your danger. You may be taken possession of by some malicious power which will make you do anything he likes.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.

By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

W. J. Elmo writes: "Our Seventh Annual 'Masquerade Ball' will be held as usual on the first Saturday evening in February (the 2nd). As in the past, a grand time is assured. Many prizes will be given. Come early; invite your friends. Our social dance, which is held every Saturday evening, is always enjoyed by a large attendance. Why don't you come? Our meetings held every Saturday at 3 p. m. and 8 p. m., are interesting and entertaining; test messages and short lectures. All welcome; held in Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes avenue. Car lines—35th street car or Cottage Grove avenue car will take you to the door. Mrs. May Elmo, medium."

Mrs. Marian Carpenter, the lecturer and test medium, accompanied by her husband, left for her winter home in Cuba, January 8. Their address is as follows: Las Minas, Province of Camaguey, Cuba.

D. C. Hinton, of Bismarck, N. D., thinks a good medium is needed there very much.

M. Lizzie Beals writes of the Worcester, (Mass.) Association of Spiritualists, G. A. R. Hall, 35 Pearl street.: "For the month of December we have had the phenomena well represented from our platform. Mrs. Fanny H. Spalding, of Norwich, Ct., and Miss Annie H. Jones, of Lowell, Mass., served our society the first and last Sundays of the month. Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Boston, occupied our platform December 9 and 16. Her lectures are full of interest and instruction at all times. Her strong, helpful thoughts appeal to every thinking mind. Wednesday evening, December 12, she gave a seance for the benefit of the society which was well attended and greatly appreciated by all."

Mrs Georgia Gladys Cooley writes from Buffalo, N. Y.: "After a lapse of two years, I am again in Buffalo, to serve the First Spiritualist Society. A grand audience greeted me Sunday evening, the spacious church being crowded to the doors, some being compelled to stand the entire evening. A Bazaar will be given by the faithful workers of the church, and will be held in the Temple the afternoons and evenings of January 23, 24, 25 and 26. Friends near by or outside of the city are invited to attend, as well as to send any article they may feel inclined to give toward helping this good move along. Anything from a pocket-handkerchief to several thousand dollars, will be acceptable. Send in care of Mrs. C. Johnson, the worthy secretary, No. 477 7th street, Buffalo, N. Y."

G. L. Willms writes: "The hall of the North Star Spiritual Union, 1546 Milwaukee avenue, was filled to its capacity on Sunday evening, Jan. 5, although the weather was bad. Sister Mueller gave a fine lecture. Brother Winter also gave a fine lecture on the Philosophy of Spiritualism, in German as well in English. He was applauded repeatedly by the audience. Sister Winter gave a few messages, and Sister Mueller gave readings of articles to all present, which brought joy to may sorrowing hearts. Bro. Hassmann then thanked the visiting mediums for their kind assistance, and invited them to come and see us again."

Mrs. Rosa Conger writes from San Diego, Cal.: "Dr. Geo. Fuller's lecture on 'Who Are the Infidels,' in No. 892, is worth the price of the paper. Wish it could be sent out in pamphlet form. Such sound and logical reasoning should be spread broadcast."

Societies and camps desiring the services of Sarah A. Crossfield for the season of 1907, may address her at 723 S. Elm street, Muncie, Ind. Her terms are reasonable. She will also officiate at weddings and funerals when requested.

Mr. Merkel writes: "The Spiritualistic church of the Students of Nature had at its hall, 461 W. North avenue, corner Robey street, a beautifully decorated Christmas tree laden with gifts for all. Old Santa in his usual costume came in with his jingling bells to gladden fifty children present, distributing stockings with candies, nuts and fruits. Mrs. M. Schumacher received many valuable presents from the society as an appreciation of her ardent work. The pastor gave us an explanation of Christmas gifts, assisted by many mediums, not only spiritually given, but from God's green earth. There was also a New Year watch at the pastor's residence, 144 Loomis street, which was well attended."

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes: "The Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association celebrated the thirteenth anniversary of the organization of the society on January 6, at Cadet Hall. Services were held at 2:30 and 7:30; circles at 4; supper at 5; song service and concert at 6:30, all of which were very largely attended. The exercises were in charge of President H. C. Chase, who read a very pleasant letter of greeting from our honorary president, Dr. Alex Caird, in behalf of the new Fraternal Order of Spiritualists of Chicago, of which he is president. Those assisting in the services of the day were Mrs. Hattie E. Lewis, Mrs. Abbie Atwood, Mrs. Carrie Hare, Mrs. Annie Houston, Mrs. Lydia Ward, Mrs. Florence Tobey, Prof. R. A. Macurda, Dr. R. P. Bishop with W. A. Robbins, soloist, and E. A. Meader, elocutionist. The following took part in the concert: Marguerite and Hazel Vaughn, Olive Stevens, Helen Burns, May Edwards, Carl Chase, Charles Houston and Harold Merchant; H. C. Chase, pianist, and W. H. Atherly, cornetist."

Mrs. Jennie Hagan Brown, one of the most eloquent speakers on the platform to-day, will be glad to lecture at any points she can while in Nebraska, or en route to Texas. She can for a short time be addressed at Arlington, Neb."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may, or may not, agree with their respective views.

C. A. Kelley writes: "Enclosed find $1.10, postoffice order, for renewal of subscription for The Progressive Thinker and the Unknown Life of Jesus Christ. The paper is better and stronger every year. It sounds the death knell of fraud, and makes truth triumphant! Keep up the good fight; it's a winner."

Mrs. L. A. Wilson writes: "The White Key Spiritual Society of Bellaire, Ohio, is in a good state of progress, though a young society not yet two years old, and few in numbers, but all earnest workers. It has paid its hall rent and bought an organ, besides has had six of the state's best mediums come to it, and the year of 1907 finds it with new officers elected to fulfill the special duties that may bring in many new members and build up the spiritual ranks with earnest and efficient workers, that the glorious truth of Spiritualism may be brought to bear upon the minds and hearts of many in this Ohio Valley. It is the desire of this society to become a beneficent society when it shall have reached the number of fifty members, that those having need may receive a helping hand when life's pathway is dark and stormy, thus fulfilling the law of love to all mankind."

Mrs. Mary M. Gabler writes: "Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, New York State Missionary, of Troy, N. Y., held three services, December 22 and 23, in Lafargeville, which were greatly appreciated. The messages were all verified. Mrs. Reynolds is a speaker and medium of fine development."

MARRIED. Mrs. Sarah A. Crossfield, a prominent Spiritualist lecturer of Muncie, Ind., writes: "At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Macdonald, on January 5, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Miss Eva Macdonald, a prominent lyceum worker, and Mr. Scott Fulks, a well and favorably known young man of this city. The bride was beautifully attired in a cream silk princess gown, wearing bridal roses as her only ornament. Many valuable and useful presents were received. The ceremony was performed by the writer, and was in accordance with the Spiritualist belief, and was beautiful and impressive. Only the immediate friends of the family were present. A bounteous wedding supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Fulks received the congratulations of a host of friends. Mr. Macdonald, father of the bride, is one of the official board of the Muncie Society of Spiritualists."

Alice M. Sexsmith writes: "Again I wish to call the attention of Spiritualists to the success crowning the efforts of the Christian Spiritualist Society, conducted by Miss Sarah Thomas. Both afternoon and evening these meetings are largely attended by an earnest, intelligent class who are hungering after the truth of our philosophy, and they are never disappointed. Sunday evening, Dec. 23, Dr. Geo. B. Warne gave another of his soul-inspiring lectures to a crowded house, and as he has endeared himself to the hearts of the people of the society as well as to many strangers, we are looking forward to the time in the near future when he will be with us again. Following the lecture, messages were given by Mrs. Susie Thompson and the writer, which were recognized. Sunday evening, Dec. 30, Mr. Gustav Temple spoke for us. He is a young man, full of vim, and we think will prove a shining light in Spiritualism. Messages were given by Dr. C. A. Burgess, Mrs. Susie Thompson and the writer. Sunday evening, Dec. 23, a suggestion was made by Mrs. Susie Thompson that the people put forth a little extra effort in the way of a contribution and we are glad to say a neat sum was the result, which goes to help defray the expense of the meeting. Remember, these meetings are held every Sunday afternoon and evening, at 3 and 8 o'clock, at Conway Hall, Western avenue and West Lake street, over drug store. Good speakers and messages at every meeting."

Arzella C. Clay of Grand Rapids, writes: "I wanted to get ten new subscribers for The Progressive Thinker, but a severe asthma cough prevents me from going out among friends. Perhaps nearly every reader of the paper can do what I have easily done. I got one new name—

"That one paper may beam as a little light;
Though trifling may be the cost,
It will comfort souls when Death draws near,
And we speak of friends as lost."

G. H. Brooks writes: "I began a series of meetings on Thursday evening, Jan. 10, at LaCrosse, Wis. I am to hold a series of meetings in Baraboo, beginning the 16th of January; then I go to other parts of the state."

W. H. Flury writes: "On Saturday evening, January 5, the members of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society assembled in the parlors of Mr. D. G. Hill, 705 W. Madison street, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year; there was a large part of the membership present. Great harmony prevailed throughout the entire meeting, a well known characteristic of all the Golden Rule meetings. The members seemed to come with their minds all fixed on the same candidates, as there was only one nomination for each office, the secretary being instructed to cast the ballot in each case. The following was the result: President, D. G. Hill; vice-president, Dr. J. H. Randall; secretary, W. H. Flury; treasurer, Thos. F. Field; trustees, J. M. Wier and E. J. Clyburn. The society gives its first grand masquerade on Saturday evening, January 1, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue, with twenty-five prizes."

Mrs. Mary A. Price will lecture for the Secular League of Washington, D. C., Sunday, Jan. 13. Mrs. Price is the only medium except Mr. Colville who has had the honor of speaking for that society of scientists. She is ready to make other engagements with societies or camps for the coming summer. Address her at her home, 1713 14th street N. W., Washington, D. C.

Samuel A. Huntington of Malden, Mass., writes: "The Malden Progressive Spiritualist Society held a very instructive and interesting meeting on Thursday evening, Jan. 3. The Rev. F. A. Wiggin was the speaker and message bearer. Mr. Wiggin gave a fine address on the subject, 'A Revival in Spiritualism,' after which he gave many fine messages, reading from ballots. The hall was filled to the door. Through a misunderstanding of dates, Mr. Wiggin has canceled his further engagement with us until last of February and part or all of March. The Sunday afternoon circle was interesting as usual. Mrs. Maud Litch of Lynn, was the speaker and message bearer at the evening meeting, January 6. Mrs. Litch gave a very interesting address on 'Spiritualism and the Needs of the Hour,' after which she gave many beautiful messages. The hall was filled. Prof. McCurda of Lynn, will be the speaker and message bearer on Sunday evening, Jan. 13, and Mrs. A. M. Whall, of Everett, on Sunday evening, Jan. 20, 1907."

Ferd C. Suhrer writes: "On Sunday afternoon, January 13, the First Society of the FRATERNAL ORDER OF SPIRITUALISTS, Dr. Caird President, held its first meting in Hygeia Hall, Ogden avenue and Robey street. At 2:30 our initiation ceremony was exemplified, after which we listened to a few remarks by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, and Dr. George B. Warne, relative to Fraternalism and what wonderful influence it exerts for the betterment of mankind. Dr. Warne also read several letters from friends in other states, written to our president congratulating him in his efforts in establishing such a society in Chicago, and wishing him God speed. From 4 to 6 p. m. eleven small circles were arranged on the floor and were conducted by Hygeia Hall message bearers. This new departure was favorably received, as it enabled everyone to get a message from their own particular medium. Congregational singing was indulged in at the close of the circles, in which everyone joined with a vim. Evening service commenced at 8 o'clock, Dr. J. A. Marvin favored us with a short address appropriate to the occasion, which was well received. Messages from the guides of our mediums followed. We have every reason to be encouraged by the promising outlook presented us by the attendance at both afternoon and evening services of such a large number of prominent public workers from every part of the city, who not only added their names to our roster, but tendered their services. We feel elated at having secured Prof. Joseph Singer as musical director, and Miss Marian Gordon as our pianist. We are indebted to Mrs. J. E. Haschke, who so ably assisted in the congregational singing. Owing to the inclement weather many were kept away, but we were agreeably surprised at the large attendance, many of whom were public workers 20 years ago. Services will be held every Sunday, commencing promptly at 2:30, and ending at 9, sharp. See page 1 for our ritual in full."

Correspondent writes: "The Illinois Sunflower Club will have a Tea Party in Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Building, No. 70 East Adams street, on Tuesday, January 22, 1907, between the hours of 2 and 5 p. m. Mrs. Howes will preside. On Monday evening, January 21, a dance will be given in the Assembly Hall, Fraternity Building, commencing at 8 p. m. There will be an admission fee of 25 cents, which permits both dancing and cards. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends."

Dr. George A. Fuller lectures the last two Sundays of January, for the Ethical and Spiritual Society, of New York City. His engagement in Washington, D. C., was a great success. In Massachusetts he is very popular, having been for several years elected President of the State Association.

Mrs. Locke writes from Philadelphia, Pa.: "The Philadelphia Spiritualists' Society has had for its speaker and medium during the months of November and December, 1906, Mrs. Katie Ham, of Haverhill, Mass., who did a good work for the cause of Spiritualism. On Sunday, January 6, our meetings were opened for the year by Mr. and Mrs. H. Scott Bledsee, of Topeka, Kan. We had our hall well filled both afternoon and evening, and everyone was delighted with their eloquent lectures, and Mrs. Bledsoe's fine phenomenal ballot readings. Mr. and Mrs. Bledsoe are very great favorites with our Philadelphia people, and always receive a cordial greeting by their many friends. The officers that have been elected to serve the present year are the following: President, Hon. Thos. M. Locke; first vice-president, Frank Luce; second vice-president, A. D. Field; treasurer and secretary, Mr. Henry W. Shope; historian, Mary R. Galloway; advisory board, Mrs. Josephine M. Hinds, Mr. Charles Hammar, Mrs. Ida V. McGlenn, Mr. Lawrence Bissenger, Mrs. Clark, and Mrs. Thomas M. Locke."

C. L. Hatch writes from Boston, Mass.: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society held its business meeting, at 4:30 p. m. The president, Mrs. Mattie E. A. Allbe, in the chair. Committees for the ensuing year were appointed. It was voted to hold a snip sale on Friday, November 25, and to serve a salad supper, with entertainment in the evening of February 1; tickets, 25 cents for supper, and entertainment. A splendid meeting was held in the evening with the following talent taking part: Mrs. Steinen, Mrs. Duren, Mrs. Chapman, Mrs Fremont, Mrs. Berry, all giving tests. Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse spoke briefly and very interestingly of the work of Spiritualists. Mrs. Hilda Green gave two fine instrumental selections upon the piano. Mrs. Mary F. Lovering sang a solo, words and music of which were written by her. It was well received. Next Friday meeting as usual. All invited."

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, the efficient president of the Texas State Spiritualist Association, writes as follows in reference to an abusive article against Spiritualism, appearing in the Fort Worth Star: "I enclose clipping from a home paper; am in haste, and did not intend to write, but cannot resist the inclination to say, that but for the fraud and trickery masking under the name of Spiritualism, such articles would be impossible. Dignified, honest, honorable people teaching this truth must and will command the respect of the world at large, even if it does not accept the teaching. Good luck to you and The Progressive Thinker. Like 'Old Glory,' 'Long may it wave.'"

Mrs. Nina D. Challen has returned to her home in Toledo, Ohio, after holding very successful meetings in Canton, Massillon, and Salem. She was sick while away with an exceptionally bad cold, but at the present time is very much improved. She finds The Progressive Thinker nearly everywhere she goes, exerting its influence for good. Mrs. Challen can be addressed for engagements at No. 2540 Foraker avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

MAY, A LYCEUM GIRL.

She Expresses Her Pleasure About Dr. Caird's Article in the First Issue of This Year's Progressive Thinker.

We who have been trained in the lyceum after becoming adults and leaving our home town for another, find, often, no society nor means by which we can keep in close touch with the movement of Spiritualism.

In spite of the great work done by the N. S. A., this organization is not enough; some societies belong to it and many do not. There is a sense of isolation. If the many Spiritualists scattered could feel they had brothers and sisters with whom they could clasp hands, working for Spiritualism, a greater interest and activity might ensue; but now every one seems to be for himself or herself, leaving the work to be performed by those who will.

In church societies there is much disagreement among members, but duty to the church causes an overlooking of much antagonism, and this feeling of charity holds them together.

On the other hand Spiritualists whose religion is the noblest proclaimed, do not trust one another; there is nothing apparently to bind them. Because Mr. A. does so and so, Mr. B or C will not work with him. There is our mistake. Fraternity, we are sure, is the cementing power.

In our lyceum, one taught us that God, according to his interpretation, was an "inner ruling principle." Another defined God as "an overruling power." Some said, "Law," others scouted the idea of God. What could we children think?

How plainly has Dr. Caird put it, saying: "There is a spirit force which is the source of all life on all planes; which sustains and perpetuates all things by a law so diversified as to meet all conditions of the physical, mental and spiritual worlds."

And he adds the name is immaterial, for the fact is always the same. Let each call it principle, law, God, whatever suits him best. Spiritualists have such varied opinions and are so positive (shall we say dogmatic?) that it is a hard matter for them to agree to work together.

On our Silver Chain Recitation Cards, our conductor read to us one poem about the "Golden Age Rolling On," when "men shall gather gifts to give away," when

"Christian women will not wipe their feet
Upon their fallen sisters in the street;
When want and crime shall be a thing unknown,
And each shall make his neighbor's wrong his own."

To bring about any one of these conditions, mankind must form a grand brotherhood as outlined by Dr. Caird.

Success to the organization for kindness, cleanliness, honesty, fraternity, is the wish of one

URBAN VI., POPE OF ROME.

Spirit Communication Selected From the Faraday Book, by E. T. Dickinson.

There is misunderstanding among Protestants as well as Catholics about the functions of the papal office, and as one who once occupied that chair, I wish to do what I can to correct it.

I think that the primitive idea of the Papacy was not to promulgate dogmatic authority but to exercise a fatherly interest in the religious life of the people.

But this function was perverted by the designs of ambitious men who sought the position because it afforded opportunity for the exercise of arbitrary power.

There were two factions in my time who sought to exert authority, and because of their mutual antagonism, I was selected because of my indifference to the claims of either.

It was necessary when one occupied the papal chair to act cautiously in inaugurating reforms, and although many wise and good men have been popes, yet scarcely any ever dared to attempt reforms of abuses which have crept into Catholic faith by toleration, because integral parts of it.

As a spirit I have long been sensible of the hopelessness of any permanent reform of that faith, on account of the force of the idea of infallibility, ruling in the church, which will only yield its claims to arbitrary authority, by compulsion. There is no element of power in that religion which does not depend upon ignorance for its existence.

Its dogmas are such mixtures of truth and error that they should never be accepted by any one as pure truth; and because I feel an interest in all minds under their power, I come to give my testimony against trusting in them.

The papacy was an experiment to avert evils which at one time threatened the overthrow of human rights. Because the civil power failed to recognize the natural rights of man, the religious element claiming authority from God, placed all men upon an equality before Him.

Originally it was an effort to institute ecclesiastical republicanism; and had it remained true to this idea it would have helped rather than hindered the progress of the race.

But having been perverted from this aim, it became the worst of instruments of oppression, and finally co-operated with the civil authority to establish ecclesiastical despotism over the whole earth.

I did all I could to eliminate what was bad in the church, but one man has little power to stem the current which generations of previous ages set in motion. My earth-life was not a source of trouble to me when I entered spirit life; and I have labored since then for the enlightenment of all who desire a knowledge of the truth.

Protestants are as deeply involved in the errors of religious dogmas as Catholics, especially when they accept the absurd statements which the early writers transcribed, as divine truth.

I have never seen Jesus or Mary in spirit life, and believe that all manifestations from this life which purport to come from them are impositions upon the credulity of mortals; and while individuals of such names may exist here and manifest to the world as the original characters, they are unworthy of confidence. * * *

URBAN VI.

THE MAN WITH A MOUTH

I love the man who knows it all,
From east to west, from north to south;
Who knows all things, both great and small,
And tells it with his tireless mouth;
Who holds a listening world in awe
The while he works his iron jaw.

Ofttimes the evening's holy calm,
When twilight softens sight and sound
And zephyr breathes a perfect psalm,
This fellow brings his mouth aroundd
With its long gallop that can tire
The eight-day clock's impatient ire.

His good, strong mouth! He wields it well
He works it just for all it's worth,
Not Samson's jawbone famed could tell
Such mighty deeds upon the earth.
He pulls the throttle open wide
And works her hard on every side.

Good Lord, from evils fierce and dire
Save us each day—from fear and woe,
From wreck and flood, from storm and fire,
From sudden death, from secret foe,
From blighting rain and burning drouth—
And from the man who plays his mouth.

—Robert J. Burdette.

THE PASSING HOURS.

Every day thoughts come to me,
As the moments swiftly fly,
Oh, the many things I had to do,
As the years have glided by.
There are promises I have not kept,
Though my heart I thought was true;
But life is too short for everything
That one intends to do.

To-day is the only one we have,
To-morrow, who can be sure?
To improve every hour as it comes along
Is the way to be secure.
For every day sings a shorter song,
And every hour holds a truth divine,
And a misspent thought is a jewel lost
From the diadem of time.

I fancy my hold on the future lost
As the years go rapidly by;
Chances to do, carelessly tost—
To the winds of adversity.
I can only pine that life is too short
For the things I ought to see,
And as I walk through the valley of care
I await the life that's to be.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Just as the old year was wearing itself out, our sister, Lila C. Parr, weary of the old body, laid it down, and upon the dawning of the new year took upon herself a new garb, and on the 16th day of December, 1906, at the age of 44 years, ascended to her spirit home. She was a faithful wife, a loving mother, a true friend and earnest Spiritualist. What greater monument need she? We wish you a Happy New Year, sister!

He has lived in Petoskey the last eight or ten years, coming here from Grand Rapids, Mich., where he had lived for many years, and was well known there as well as here as an outspoken Spiritualist, good citizen and an honest man.

JAS. M. WEEKS.

Oliver Merrell, husband of Ella Merrell, passed to spirit life, Dec. 31, 1906. He was born May 23, 1849. Funeral from the home, 729 W. 63rd street, Wednesday, Jan. 2. Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koonts officiated. Brother Merrell has long been an investigator of Spiritualism and a believer in the unfoldment of the soul.

MAMIE YOUNG.

William K. Naylor of Corry, Pa., passed to the higher life, Jan. 2, after a few weeks' illness. Mr. Naylor was a man of sterling worth and honor, kind and companionable, and he was loved and respected by all who were privileged to know him. As the head of an ideal home, he will be sorrowfully missed by his equal mate and children. The funeral took place at the home, Friday, Jan. 4, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond officiating. The discourse was exceptionally fine, including comforting and cheering words regarding "the great change, the higher life," which was most thoroughly appreciated and profitably enjoyed by a large gathering of relatives and friends. R. F. LIVERMORE.

Mr. Reuben R. Skinner passed to spirit life, Dec. 22, near Marcellus, Mich. His age was 71 years. He was an honest man, a good citizen and neighbor, and a staunch Spiritualist. It was at his home that Farmer Riley saw his first spiritual phenomena, at which time a large table would be made movable or immovable by the spirit forces at the request of Mrs. Skinner, who has since passed away. Mr. Skinner leaves his second wife and a large circle of friends. Services at the home, Dec. 24, by

Germs of Mind in Plants.

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Will W. Charlton: Q. In our circle room there are several canary birds, and some of our members think they exert an opposing influence on the manifestations. Are they correct?

A. If the members have an aversion to birds or animals, as some people unfortunately have, the influence, like all and every other which gives rise to antagonism would be harmful. In other words the influence would be according to the mental state of the members of the circle.

In our little family circle, which we have held these many years, when wishing to come into something like the old social relation to those who have left us, I recall the presence of a St. Bernard, the perfection of his kind. Whenever we sat around the table he would come to my side, and watch its movements with eagerness. His puzzled expression wore away, but his interest never weakened. It verified the saying that the spiritual philosophy offered problems which arrested the attention of the profoundest scientist on one hand, and on the other its manifestations appealed to the attention of the lowest. I always felt that his majestic and quiet presence was helpful. For years, when I was writing, his chosen place was at my feet, and when he died, for a long time it seemed to me a most important factor in my surroundings was taken away. Even now, at times, I reach out my hand to caress his massive forehead with its silken hair, to be startled back to the reality that it meets only the yielding air.

D. A. Middleton: Prefacing his questions, this correspondent voices the thoughts of thousands who awaken to the presence of Spiritualism, and with yearnings unutterable hope its glorious proclamation is true, yet have not the evidence that would be to them demonstrative. He says:

"Looking down the years of my past life I find a picture that is strange, so strange in fact that I cannot solve the meaning. I was born in Scotland 36 years ago and received a rather poor education; was brought up in the "Auld Kirk" and suffered all the horrors of that theology "beautiful"(?) and yet although whipped in line under the promise of white robes and harps, or intimidated with the fumes of brimstone, I at a very early age discovered that that theology was repugnant to me, and strangely so, for all my brothers and sisters were thoroughly satisfied in that belief.

"Somehow, somewhere, sometime, I know not when, I was attracted to the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism. I knew nothing about it, not as much as the child unborn, but it seemed to me an attraction existed just as strongly as a repulsion had existed in the old theology, and although that is many years ago, I am yet in the same condition so far as knowledge is concerned regarding that philosophy. But I cannot get away from it, although in my very limited opportunities of investigation, I have encountered many things to disgust me and many things that would, had my own better judgment been allowed to prevail, compelled me to drop the entire matter. But with all, and in spite of all the discouragements, here I am even stronger in the belief than ever, and were I asked the simplest question, by an inquiring mind: Why do I believe it? I could not give a reasonable or logical answer.

"I could not call it belief, for knowledge is necessary first, then follows belief. I hate to admit, but I stand precisely in the position of some of my superstitious friends, who tell me of their religious beliefs, moss-grown to me, yet to them living fire, burning intensely and portrayed in beautiful characters, and although in debate they cannot logically conclude one single argument, still they reply, 'I have that assurance within me, that which sustains me I know. Which is all in all.'

"But what does it all mean? Does some unseen intelligence draw me to my views; if so what draws them to theirs? Why, when I am searching so earnestly, can I not receive knowledge?

"I have little opportunity to investigate, and when I have had, have met with contradictions and discouragement.

"Is it possible for me to develop alone? for that seems to be about the only way I will ever be able to get anything satisfactory."

A. This deeply interesting letter is almost an answer to itself. It verifies the saying, that to ask a question presupposes the capability of answering the same. In all such instances, and they are innumerable, the pull as of a gravitating force is on the other side. The presence of spirit friends may be unrecognized by us, but their intense thoughts beat like rays of light into our minds, and the great current bears us that way.

This correspondent has sought to communicate but has been disappointed. Why? He has sought by every means but the true one. He has expected to be convinced through and by others. He has not sought through himself. Yet his words show how sensitive he is to impressions, and if he would take the right method how easily he would gain access to the rich stores of coveted knowledge. There are seasons for all things, and a season which should be set apart for spirit communion. No bizarre manifestations may be obtained, but if the recipient sits with earnest thoughts, and prayerful desire for the coming of the loved ones, and that they baptize him with their thoughts, he will arise strong and refreshed spiritually. Soon he will distinguish the thoughts of spirits from his own; he will not only receive, but his own mind will be quickened, and spiritualized. It will not be a mediumship of passive receptivity, but of growth.

Our correspondent has not received, although he has earnestly searched, because he has not searched aright. One would not search for the stars in the daytime, or go out to view the landscape in the night. If his eyes were good, he would use them rather than trust to those of someone else.

Eugene Deacon: Q. Will you explain how pianos and other heavy objects are moved by spirit influence?

A. This question of course refers to the movement of inanimate objects without physical contact, as the laying on of the hand of a medium, which may be construed into muscular action, conscious, or unconscious. How a spirit being can thus control physical objects, is difficult to explain, and of all the attempts that have been made, none are quite satisfactory. The most often repeated, is that spirits will objects to move and they obey. But the will of a spirit decarnate is no stronger than while incarnate, and to say they move objects by their will, no more gives the cause than it would to say a man builds a house by his will. True he wills to build the house, and then brings the means for the satisfaction of his will.

Spirits can only employ the forces of nature. They cannot take hold of an object with their hands to move it. But these forces are of intensity which man cannot imagine. He may see something of it in the strike of lightning, the consuming electric heat; the pull of the planet to the sun. A spirit to succeed in moving physical objects must understand how to manipulate these forces. In their power, matter has neither weight or measure. In the hand of gravitation, Sirius, a million times larger than our sun is as easily swung on its orbit, as our pigmy earth, and the countless sidereal systems of the Milky Way are no more than a thistle down to this giant force. Not all—really a very few—are able to control these forces, and these only when conditions, subtle beyond our comprehension are available.

The Happy New Year and Women.

In reviewing the progress made by the radical woman movement in the year 1906, the National Woman Suffrage Association of the United States, points to the enfranchisement of the 2,500,000 women of Finland as the greatest victory since full national suffrage was given to the women of Federated Australia in 1902; calls attention to the granting of municipal suffrage to the women of Natal, South Africa, and to the organization of National Woman Suffrage Societies in Hungary, Italy and Russia; comments on the remarkable increase in the agitation for woman suffrage all over Europe, and notes that 420 of the 670 members of the present English House of Commons are pledged to its support.

The Association declares that the outlook for signal successes at home is more than usually bright, rejoices in the endorsement of the American Federation of Labor, the National Grange, the National Letter Carriers' Association, the International Typographical Union, the Western Federation of Miners, the United Mine Workersd of America, Supreme Commandery Knights of Temperance, the International Council of Women (representing 20 countries and upwards of 6,000,000 women members) and in that of many organizations of lesser importance. The outspoken advocacy of the North American Review and of Harper's Weekly, the favorable attitude of many public men, and the unprecedented prominence now being given to the discussion of the question in the newspapers are additional reasons why the suffragists look hopefully to 1907.

AN EXCELLENT TEST.

A Spirit Manifests Just as Its Mortal Body is Being Interred.

To the Editor:—On a recent Sunday an old friend of mine died very suddenly. On Tuesday I received a letter informing me of his death. On Wednesday we were sitting chatting with Margaret Gaule. We heard several raps, to which I did not pay attention, as they were of common occurrence when in her presence, when she interrupted me, saying, "Stop a moment. There is an old friend of yours here who wants to speak to you. His body is now being lowered into the grave. I can smell the fresh clay."

She satisfied me that it was my friend who died on Sunday, who demanded recognition. I looked at my watch and it was twenty-five minutes to four. I have since ascertained that the time agreed with that of the interment.

As I am not a Spiritualist, I cannot account for this. I have no antagonistic feeling. I simply lack belief. I take much interest in investigation of the phenomena.

It is demanding much when you ask one to believe Archdeacon Colley's statment regarding his Psychical Package Express, and T. W. Stanford's (of Australia) experiences with the medium Charles Bailey.

The Dangers of Psychism.

whatever; positive minded, they cannot keep their hands off; the temptation to take the property of their neighbor cannot be resisted. Look at the homicidal mania, whole communities swept by waves of suicide or murder. A noted writer has said that the impulse to crime is always waiting beneath the surface for development, and great notoriety of crime invariably leads to imitation. Notoriety was once given a dealer who had sold a pistol to a murderer who had committed an atrocious murder with it. This dealer was applied to by about twenty people for a pistol of the same kind.

There was once an epidemic of suicide on the gallows in London, which was stopped by drastic measures adopted by a judge from the bench. One time in the history of Crete the ladies took a notion to commit suicide, some of the most beautiful women. That was stopped by a judge who made the proclamation that the next woman who committed suicide should be carried naked through the streets. The thing immediately stopped.

In other words, it is a thing you cannot dabble with with impunity.

THE ONLY WAY by which you can go into these studies with reasonable certainty of not coming to grief, is to make them under the advice of a person advanced in the science who has these faculties developed, and who, if you go out of the body and get onto the other planes, can watch and ward off danger. I am told by those who know, that through the ether are always flowing currents, and along these currents flow the elemental forces, and when a person clothed in the astral body attempts to go to a certain place, when he comes through these currents, if he is not strong enough to keep out he is swept away like a leaf engulfed by all kinds of bad influences. Not only that, but while in the body you may be subject to influences which make people think you are insane, or may develop mania.

The Burmese believe there is a spiritual body that goes out of the body of a man when he is asleep; and so if you call at any gentleman's house when he is asleep you have to wait until he wakes. A servant would not dare to call his master for fear this wandering spirit might not get back into the body in time and the man might die.

A great field of research is open in this department of nature, a field which requires no belief in miracles or anything supernatural. Whatever appears appears according to law, and one has only to obey that in his mind, and keep always the conviction that he is the master, to go on successfully and attain the knowledge he wants.

In experimenting with the properties of matter, the reproduction of objects is effected, as I told you, by the agency of these elemental spirits acting upon matter. For as you know, everything that is solid in nature has come out of the ether, and everything possible in the world exists in an invisible form, a higher form of existence, so that you can perform duplications of this class by using an object as a nucleus. The particles of the object are held together by the attraction of cohesion; operating on that and antagonistic to it is the attraction of space, the centrifugal force; the force on which it is planned, holds together these particles, but you can take away this protection and there will remain differentiated matter.

ANOTHER THING in regard to the mind, we have no idea of the scope or the nature of mind. We are very ignorant indeed about all these departments of initial science; but those who have studied it say that mind is a force, and that it is the master force of the universe, and that as you possess a quality, the same force that exists in the universe is the whole, the all. You have only got to use that under the control and direction of intelligent will to produce exactly the thing you want, and then you will produce the same object, and that object will be temporary or permanent, as you choose to have or not to have the attraction to the object that you have created.

I suppose that if we could look at the inmates of our insane asylums we would find a considerable portion of them have been brought there by the EFFECT OF UNSEEN INFLUENCES, AND THE PERSON WHO REALLY KNEW THE SCIENCE COULD RESTORE THEM TO SANITY BY CAUSING THE MIND, THE UNBALANCED MIND, TO RESUME ITS NORMAL FUNCTION. Hysteria, a most mysterious disease, is due to a perversion of the moral sense, and one so afflicted must have a pedestal to stand upon, and failing to attract sufficient notoriety will accuse themselves of crimes they are innocent of, merely to get notoriety, a lowering of the moral sense, a thing so prevalent that it is a great danger to society.

Now, of course, this is a subject that is inexhaustible. It would take a number of lectures to traverse the field generally. The one word that I want to say to-night is that PSYCHISM IS FULL OF DANGER; that a person cannot without running great risk undertake the study of it. You may read about it, but if you attempt to make the practical experiment you immediately run the great danger of exposing yourself to deadly influences as bad as a pestilence or death, that circulate about you. Never desert your common sense. Never believe the stories that are told to you without corroboration or without their finding an explanation in what is known to science. And again, if you happen to have any of these powers naturally, never use them FOR ANY SELFISH PURPOSE. So keep yourself clear from all entangling alliances with those who should be the slaves of man but who are most dangerous creatures if allowed to become his master.

THE RIPENED HARVEST.

The Natural Result of Deception and Trickery.

There seems at the present time to be a movement in our city council to do away with Spiritualism or of mediumship, prohibiting mediums from giving messages, or readings, or holding circles of any kind; also clairvoyance, which only means clear-seeing. Fellow Spiritualists, those of us who are honest and sincere, and are anxious to see this glorious movement called Spiritualism progress, now is the time and here is the place for us all to rally to the front and show our colors. Too long have we been slumbering and singing lullaby songs, and have been letting the tares grow with the wheat—that obnoxious weed of Fake Trickery, and have allowed palmistry, card-reading, locating of gold mines, oil wells, tips on horse races, board of trade, speculation, charm selling, restoring lost trade or stolen lovers, to attach themselves to the fair banner of Spiritualism until now the time has come when the law will compel us to discriminate the difference between the above and that which we call true Spiritualism. Which shall it be. I for one am glad that true mediums and true Spiritualists will now, perhaps, have a chance to prove that we are representing one of the most glorious religions that man has ever known, and that in our philosophy we teach the unfoldment of the soul of man in moral and spiritual laws.

There has been steadily creeping into our ranks that obnoxious weed of deception and trickery until to-day we are face to face with the great question of—what shall the harvest be?

We have been like the farmer sowing a field of grain, and with it sprung up that yellow weed called by some herriak. It looks quite beautiful when it blossoms, but is very detrimental to the growth of the grain. If it is not destroyed, and if it is allowed to go to seed year after year, it will at last encumber the whole field thereby destroying the growth of the grain. But the wise farmer usually goes diligently at work and picks it up by the roots and burns it. Now that is the way we Spiritualists have been doing—we have allowed so much deception and allowed so many incompetent so-called mediums on our rostrums that it has become like unto the harvest field; it looked very beautiful for a while, but alas, we now see our mistake. The time has come when we will have to do some pulling up and weeding out the chaff from the now already ripened fields of grain, when we have to step to the front and declare ourselves as a people that are working for the betterment of humanity, of truth, honesty and purity, not for the dollars and cents alone, but for the building up of one of the greatest reforms that the world has even known, or ever will know. Let me say in conclusion that the spirit world is back of all this, and with loyalty, strength and courage victory will be ours.

EVANGELISM IN CHICAGO.

Exhibiting a Marked Tendency on the Part of a Certain Segment of the Population to Embrace Christianity as Set Forth by a Ranting Revivalist.

The evangelistic meetings being held in Chicago should be helped by every citizen who hopes to see the city's moral tone improved. They are good things and if they result in a widespread religious awakening they will be of immense benefit. Chicago needs a revival, which would increase the inhabitants' happiness greatly and make life better for all of them.

More than 7,000 persons fought to get into the Auditorium theater at the first meeting, though it holds only 4,100. They wanted to hear a gypsy evangelist preach the gospel.

That is not a large proportion of the population, but it is a great many people to come down town on Sunday afternoon for such a purpose. The newspaper reports of the meeting say those who got inside were profoundly impressed. Part of the time men as well as women were in tears, and at the close about two hundred persons stood up and testified that they believed themselves to be converted to Christianity.

On the same day hundreds of churches in Chicago were only partly filled with persons worshiping in the most decorous fashion. There was no enthusiasm in them, no fervor, no conspicuous self-devotion, no evidence of religious self-awakening, such as that which was so overwhelming at the Auditorium. We do not mean to say that feeling was not real in them, but it was not stirred to such a pitch.

Several reasons will occur to everybody for this difference, and one in particular. Can it be possible that the crowd at the Auditorium was drawn thither by the news that a man who really and earnestly believed in the gospel was to preach? Can it be that those who heard him felt his earnestness?

Clergymen in the regular business of the church do not keep themselves keyed up to such a height of enthusiasm that it inflames their auditors. They subside too often into a state of propriety and mildness, swinging along from Sunday to Sunday as though religion were merely a rule of conduct instead of an emotional excitation.

But the astonishing success of an occasional evangelist preaching the word of God as if it were the most important thing in life shows that the American people are hungry for something they do not get commonly every day. Whatever else may be true of them, it is certain that they are still alive to the great problems of life and death and eagerly listen to the man who can convince them that they have been forever solved.—Chicago Evening Journal.

WORDS OF CHEER.

Cheer up, dear heart, so saddened down
With misery and grief;
Weep not o'er old Misfortune's frown!
Arise and find relief!
Each tear that falls from weeping eyes
Is like the drop of dew
That bids the drooping rose arise
And take a kiss or two.

Though Sorrow's cloud o'ershadows you,
And hope seems vague and vain,
To-morrow's dawn may bring to view
A mighty growth and gain.
Be not cast down o'er little things
That smaller grow with time;
Take heart, and let thy soul have wings
And rise to heights sublime.

Cheer up! Cheer up! There's light ahead
For all those who may seek;
And even those whom we thought dead
Do now arise and speak.
They bring again to our sad hearts
Glad tidings of great joy,
And a comfort that ne'er departs;
A peace without alloy.

No darkness comes o'er human life
But lingers near the light;
No sorrow, woe, or awful strife
But makes the pathway bright.
No pain that is not Nature's plan
Laid deep to make us grow;
No bitter but 'tis sweet to man
In Time's great ebb and flow.

Were mortal life the end of all;
Did soul's career here end,
Then death would bring a dreadful pall,
And lose its place as friend.
But faces that we used to see
With smiles of love o'erspread,
Now re-appear and make us free
To know they are not dead.

Cheer up, sad heart! The light has come
And all may find its gleam.
Bow not the head with spirit dumb,
O'er some ill-omened dream;
The soul that will can rise above
The valley of deep woe,
And reach the heights of perfect love
And spirit's brightest glow.

DR T. WILKINS.

A LITTLE LIGHT.

The light shone on the headland,
For the storm was raging high;
I shaded my eyes from the inner glare
And gazed on the west, grey sky.
It was dark and lowering on the sea
The waves were booming loud,
And the snow and the piercing winter sleet
Wove over all a shroud.

"God pity the men on the sea to-night,"
I said to my little ones,
And we shuddered as we heard afar
The sound of minute guns.
My good man came in his fishing coat
(He was wet and cold that night),
And he said, "There'll lots of ships go down
On the headland rocks to-night."

"Let the lamp burn all night, mother,"
Cried little Mary then;
"'Tis but a little light, but still
It might save drowning men."
"Oh, nonsense!" cried her father, (he Was tired and cross that night);
"The headland light is enough,"
And he put out the light.

That night on the rocks below us
A noble ship went down;
But one was saved from the ghastly wreck,
The rest were left to drown.
"We steered by a little light," he said,
"Till we saw it sink from view;
If they'd only a left that light all night
My mates might have been here too!"

Then little Mary sobbed aloud,
Her father blushed for shame;
"'Twas our light that you saw," he said,
"And I'm the one to blame."
'Twas a little light—how small a thing,
And trifling was its cost,
Yet for want of it a ship went down
And a hundred souls were lost.

A WINTER MORNING.

The soft blue sky leaned down toward the earth,
Veiled with white, fleecy clouds that moved and stirred,
Like the light pinions of some sleeping bird;
Poised in the ether where it had its birth.
An opal radiance shimmered in the east,
Mounted and widened, till, shot through its bars,
The arrows of the sun dispersed the stars,
Glad from their service thus to be released.
No sun which lights a perfect day in June
Has ever known a fairer sky than this;
It should be welcomed by the songbirds' tune,
Its rose and gold should greet the south wind's kiss;
Who could believe, did he not glance below,
This glory blends above a waste of snow?

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

Important Subjects.

Thoroughly and Comprehensively Considered From the Standpoint of Samuel L. Stiver.

IT IS ONE OF THE misfortunes of the world-smashers that when they have about worked out some new scheme of getting rid of the wicked world and its ungodly unbelievers in their philosophies and have cornered the holy residue of the earth for themselves and their friends that somebody discovers that nature has furtively stored away in her vest pocket some simple power to keep herself going a little longer than was anticipated.

From Menlo Park comes the announcement of the discovery of a storage battery which will last for fifteen years or more, and can be re-charged then at the cost of only a few cents. In the course of time the horse is to become as much of a rare specimen of extinct animal as the megatherium now is. Such simplicities can scarcely be said to be invented; they are rather discovered.

It is often the province of invention to complicate; it is always the happiness of discovery to simplify. When a practical flying machine comes into general use, it will be the result of the discovery of some simplicity rather than the effect of some inventive complexity. Every new practical invention is the result of some overlooked, and often undreamed of, simplicity. It is an old proverb that it takes nine tailors to make a man, and it took more than nine men to make a sewing machine.

The discovery of the shuttle and the needle with an eye in the point was the good fortune of a man who discarded the inventions of his competitors. It may take more than nine aeroplanes to make a practical flying machine, but when the latter does come, it will be different from anything we may be now looking for.

It should be possible for us to make our aerial journeys alone or in flocks, and at night as well as in day time. The electrical breastpin is ready for our service.

In the days of inventive New England before attention was turned to the wooden nutmeg, the Waterbury watch, the sewing machine and the improvements in manufacturing everything, it was well thought out and established that witches rode through the air on broom-sticks and it may be that this lost art must be rediscovered. We must surely get round to some such simplicity before some of us would like to intrust ourselves upon the bosom of the circumambient air. It may be that some new volatile and aspiring gas may be discovered, which, attached in pouches to the shoulders where wings have failed to sprout, will lift us above this dense and dull earth and allow us to use our limbs to propel us through the air, as they do somewhat over the land or in the water. The broom-stick might then become a negligible appurtenance.

IT IS NOT SAID whether Edison's new storage battery is ponderous or light, but we are assured that it is as powerful as, at least, one horse—indeed, many horses if they be not too many or too strong. Such a contrivance attached to a broom-stick would suit exactly a man with apathetic limbs, or anyone on a long journey.

The picture in the dictionary of the celebrated ancient animated flying machine called Pegasus, looks very attractive and suggestive. If there be no last use of anything it is time we were making some account of the myths of ancient civilizations. If the embattlements of ancient and renowned Troy were scaled by a hollow wooden horse of large dimensions, might not the present towers of the air be scaled by a smaller one, hollow enough for a grip-sack and a lunch box, and light enough to be sustained and propelled by the new storage battery?

Newton discovered the law of universal gravitation while lying on his back under an apple tree in combination with the exercise of a lively imagination. He afterward applied the touch-stone of mathematical science and found that apples and planets and suns obey the same laws. Fertile phantasies have been seen entirely without good results. Trimmed off somewhat about the edges, they often become good bodies into which we can insert some mathematical calculations. May not the problems of aerial navigation be resolved in the end by some inspired day dream? It seems about time to abandon some of the methods of solution at the present time as too complex and uninviting. No conjectures at the present moment should seem entirely useless. Simplicity must come to the front in some form or other. But many complexities must often be explcited and found wanting before a new simplicity can emerge.

We are all poor groping worms of the dust, as the hymn-book has often suggested: But we must all continue our dreams and study our calculus just the same. That new storage battery seems to have in it the blossom of a practical flying machine. A domestic condor could easily carry a man.

BUT A NEW SIMPLICITY often becomes, withal, a new complexity. So far as we can surmise, no human brain is now prepared for the final flying machine. Much of the racial mind cannot appreciate the long-established simplicity of Newton's law. The only advantage of the discovery of Newton to much of the human race to-day is to point out the direction and the method of an education. It takes time and effort to work out of the complexities into hte simplicities, even after the simplicities have been discovered and established.

The vantage point of a simple-principle of life which is inclusive and erective, and solutive, and constructive is not reached at a jump. It requires a generation usually to raise the general level of intelligence perceptibly. We all need some time to adapt ourselves to the brightness of a new light. It is said that the most uncommon kind of sense is simple common sense. It is known that the youthful and unenlightened brain has few convolutions. Without convolutions, strange to say, everything is either a mystery or a complexity to the possessor of brain that might be served as corn-starch pudding.

One would suppose that common sense would love to reside in this simple substance unadorned with frills and Hamburg edging. It is, however, otherwise. As a material brain becomes convoluted and cauliflowered, thought becomes more clear and triumphant. Common sense develops by study, and age, and experience, and training, and learning, and also by misfortune. The substance of the brain arrives at maturity and power and simplicity through the elaboration of its own complexity. Common sense must be acquired, and comes later rather than early in life. It is the resultant of compounding, smelting, reducing, clarifying and compressing a great deal of formal and undigested knowledge. To arrive at a new simplicity it requires less of effort each age, on account of the improved conditions of first impressions, but every new simplicity is for many a new complexity.

THE SIMPLICITY OF monotheism had a long and hard struggle with polytheism. Monotheism seemed too simple and unassuming to be right. It was no difficult thing to frame a plausible argument against monotheism How could one God do the work of a hundred gods? Would it not soon tire him out? Has religion any business to make a monster out of a supreme being? It is just as easy for those accustomed to it to think of many gods as of one God.

What shall we do with the divinities we must drop out to accept monotheism? Did not all our great and glorious ancesters accept and defend polytheism? Homer and Herodotus and Thucidides and Socrates and Sophocles and Demosthenes and Plato and Aristotle and Cicero and Caesar and Virgil and Horace and all the others received and believed in polytheism, and they were among the greatest men for intellectual acumen who ever lived. Were their writings not so full of it that if the element of polytheism were taken out there would be but little left, especially of the poets and orators? Will not this process of the elimination of divinities result in the elimination at last of all divinity? What we all need is a god near at hand and no higher than Olympus.

Where shall we find the one God whom you say the heaven of heavens cannot contain? How can he be so far off and yet be omnipresent? It is certainly too much for one God to know all things that go on without having a staff of competent reporters. It surely can not be possible for God to govern the world without some deified messengers. Without Mercury with his swift wings the attempt would surely be a disastrous failure. How could God get along without at least one wife to remind him of things and to polish up his manners at times?

If this one God can manage the heavens, the earth, the sea, and Hades all at one time, and without assistance of other divine beings, he must be very great and know a great deal.

And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew
How one small head could carry all he knew.

Such and other things came to the minds of the ancient polytheists of Greece and Rome when they were asked to give up their ancient religion for monotheism and Christianity.

IS IT TO BE WONDERED AT that Jesus was erected into a deity and that at first all the pagan deities were looked upon as his servants and associates in the minds of many? No matter what the facts might have been by the disciples while he lived, the religion of Jesus could never have made any headway in the Roman world without the assumption of his miraculous birth, his resurrection from the dead and his bodily ascension to heaven.

The most ardent and scrupulous piety could not have withstood the imaginary constructive impulses of such an opposition. Men havevbgkq chrdluthat age and against such an opposition. Men have never, in any age of the world, no matter how wise or heroic, been willing to lose everything they desired to accomplish in the direction of an ideal in comparison with losing some and gaining much. If it be hypocrisy to compromise the form for the sake of saving the substance, the human race has ever been a hypocrite.

We are surrounded by hypocrites. We are all hypocrites. Heaven is a hypocrite. Besides, at the time of the beginning of the Christian era (and it has not been very different at any other time in history) the Jewish people and all other people were not very scrupulous about telling all the truth just as they knew it, if it seemed inconsistent with their political or religious honor and supremacy to do so.

Only he who is to-day without sin should cast a stone at our unworthy ancestors. "How do the heathen rage and imagine a vain thing?"

With such people had incipient Christianity to deal, and if, after a few had lost their heads and lives on a cross, after making some concessions against their will, and all seemed to be about to be lost, should they be blamed who gave up something more that they might live and the world not lose everything?

For the sake of the complexities, simplicities must endure much still.

TO APPROACH GOD acceptably as as they supposed, what laborious and prolonged ceremonials did the pagan and Hebrew peoples of ancient times endure unconscious or unmindful of the fact that more pleasing in the sight of God are the simple and secret devotions of an humble and contrite heart than the smoking hecatombs and the fragrant incense from a thousand bloody altars.

While thousands of men, women and children went hungry and thirsty and shivering through the world, and still do in some regions, how many millions of cattle, sheep and goats have been offered up to appease an imaginary being?

More time and oil and blood and life have been cast up into the visible heavens as incense to non-existent beings than would have made a whole world of simplicity forever happy and prosperous. Under the lash millions of miserable human beings have perished in building the imperishable pyramids as tombs of royal dust until the spirits should return to claim them, only to have those bodies ground up and scattered to the four winds of an all-embracing tomb of all flesh and blood. And yet, many of the enlightened Christions of the present day will not surrender some of the mistakenly sacred complexities of doctrine and worship for the simplicities approved so plainly by Jesus himself when he said: "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven. The true worshiper shall worship God in spirit and in truth, for God seeketh such to worship him."

BUT ALL THE SACRIFICIAL ceremonies of the pagan nations and all the elaborate and bloody rites of the Jewish people, and especially of the day of atonement, and the unbloody repetitions of the mass among Christian people, and all the figures and types and emblems of the Christian church they are not necessary to point the soul to the sacrificial atonement of Jesus, the Christ, which was necessary to the salvation of mankind. Do not the complexities of atonements all lead up to the simplicity of one atonement?

Without the shedding of blood is there any remission of sin? Are we not saved by the blood of the Son of God?

By the death of one are not many made righteous? This is the teaching of scripture. This has been the belief of the church for ages. There must be an atonement to satisfy the justice of God.

How can a sinner be justified before God without the sacrifice of the sinner or his substitute? Did not God so love the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life?

Such is the train of argument of those who hold to such complexities in connection with the atonement and the incarnation. They are the honest, and to many the somewhat pardonable aspects of the great fact in the economy of God's method of developing the latent powers in the human soul. To everything we may say yes or no. It depends on the view-point. It depends upon the nature of the simplicity one finds beneath the complexity.

Among the noblest pagan people there has been an advance all along the ages, into a more rational simplicity upon the whole subject without the influence of Christianity or Judaism to assist it.

IT HAS BEEN DUE TO the enlarging convolutions of the pagan racial brain. They have grown more and more clear and triumphant in grasping the simplicities of life. Before Christianity came into contact with Greek and Roman paganism and polytheism, there had been an uplift all along the line of thought on the subject. The noblest characters of ancient Greece and Rome were dropping their complexities of worship and growing into the simplicities of life which we now call purely Christian. Their best thought on the subject breathes the Christian spirit. If they had not greatly modified the opinions of their people by the presentation of simpler and nobler views of life long before the coming of Christianity it is not likely that Christianity would have been successful, as it was after much trial and loss of life, in establishing itself among them. It was not the enlightened spirit of the Roman empire against which the religion of Jesus had to contend, but the national bias and prejudice of the unthinking masses who could not give up their complexities for such a bare and blazing simplicity.

Debauched and beastly rulers at times themselves claiming divine honor and homage, made things worse. But the simplicities prevailed at last among the pagan peoples as they will always prevail in the end everywhere. Atonement, even then among the philosophers, was looked upon as a spiritual and psychological event in the soul and not an outward thing in the ceremonies of a people or an impossible thing without the shedding of animal blood. Along the sky-line the Romans were drifting into the best view of the Hebrew people, simply and beautifully expressed by one of their poets long before the time of Jesus.

And what was that view? Every people have a right to be judged by the noblest specimens of life and thought among them when we come to take their altitude for comparison with others. David, the sweet singer of Israel, and the best spiritual type among the Hebrew people before Jesus came, a poet and philosopher and statesman and priest and king, BRINGS THE WHOLE MATTER DOWN INTO THE CONFINES OF THE HUMAN SOUL WHEN HE SAYS: "BURNT OFFERINGS AND SACRIFICES THOU WOULDST NOT; BUT THE SACRIFICES OF GOD ARE AN HUMBLE AND A CONTRITE HEART; SUCH THOU WILT NOT DESPISE."

THE GREAT WORK THE CONSTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

Vol. III of the Harmonic Series—by the Author of The Great Psychological Crime—Text work of The School of Natural Science—and vital addition to the Philosophy of Individual Life. Over 425 pages—beautifully bound in silk cloth and gold. Price $2.00.

This much anticipated and long delayed work of Exact Science, Psychical Research and Moral Philosophy marks a crucial period in the Extension Work of the Great School, and opens an entirely new and impressive theme to its Students, Investigators and Critics.

THE GREAT WORK is an exhaustive exposition of The Constructive Principle of Nature in Individual life, covering the Ethical Section of the Scientific Formulary for Independent Spiritual Self-Development, with an explanation of the "Technical Work" and of certain subsidiary Disciplines and Exercises;

It defines and explains the School of Natural Science and for the first time in history furnishes to its Origin, Character, Methods and Purposes.

THE LINEAL KEY

The work nears the close with "The Mark of the Master" and a scientific analysis of "The Transition Called Death" carrying the reader to the doorway of the succeeding volume—in a final chapter entitled "The Passing of the Master"—from the plane of Earth into and beyond the dark "Magnetic Field" outward and upward through "Nature's Brilliant Barriers" into the dazzling splendor of the "Real Spiritual World."

Because of lateness of publication we are urging our friends to send Holiday Orders without delay—and to accompany them with cash payments—by P. O. or Express Orders or Bank Draft. Price, $2.

I OFFER what is really a GODSEND to sufferers from Catarrh—Head, Bronchial and Throat troubles.

A new and wonderful medical discovery that cures by striking at the root and cause of the disease—by KILLING THE GERMS.

A CURE for YOU, no matter in what bad shape you are.

NOW I DO NOT ASK YOU to take my word, nor that of the cured hundreds. Instead, I want you to try this treatment, entirely at MY personal risk, at my expense. Just say the word, and I will send the treatment to you, without pay or promise on your part. If, at the end of ten days' trial, you do not feel like a new being, if you do not honestly bless the day that you answered this advertisement, simply return the Medicator to me. You are nothing out. Isn't that a fair and honorable offer? Your word decides it. I fully trust and believe you.

MY AFFLICTED FRIEND, do not suffer longer from this cruel Catarrh. Don't drag out a miserable existence, a curse to yourself, a nuisance to those around you. Don't let down the bars to more dangerous disease. (CONSUMPTION MOST FREQUENTLY STARTS IN CATARRH) MY NEW TREATMENT is applied direct. No drugs to swallow; its application is a pleasure. As if by magic it stops the hawking, spitting, sniffing and snuffing, relieves the maddening head noises, does away with the nauseating dropping of mucus into the mouth; the queer, stuffy and oppressed feeling of the head; the painful burning and smarting of the air passages. Soothes and heals the irritated membranes and leaves the head as CLEAR AS A BELL. IT IS FOLLY to take medicine into the stomach to kill the germs of Catarrh in the head.

MY treatment cures Catarrh, Asthma, Head Colds, Pains and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, Partial Deafness, La Grippe and all diseases of the air passages by a patented method of dry inhalation.

IN EVERY CASE our customer is the judge. We were the first to send our treatment on trial free. We have done this kind of business for 16 years, and our customers have enjoyed this privilege during that time. We want no money unless we give value received. Our customers trust us, and we trust them. We try to be honest with them, and ask as a favor that they try to be honest with us.

IF YOU HAVE CATARRH and continue to suffer with it, it is simply a matter of carelessness on your part. You can get well at home if you want to. We offer you the most effectual remedy, on approval. You will not need to spend a month to get a benefit. Ten days will tell the story. You get relief often on the first day. Stubborn cases require a longer time, of course. From every part of the country we receive complimentary proof of its wonderful cures.

WE WILL MAIL the Spray Medicator to any reader of this paper, who is afflicted with Catarrh. We want no pay unless it benefits you. We take all the risk in furnishing you the treatment, paying the postage, the cost of the advertisement, our reputation and all. You can use the treatment which will take only a few minutes of your time, several times a day. It will be time well spent, and you will soon see the folly of continuing to suffer with your Catarrh.

OUR TREATMENT contains no alcohol, no opiates, no narcotics, and conforms to the pure food and drug act of June 30, 1906. No treatment has a better reputation or more adherents for the length of time it has been on the market. The way we offer this treatment establishes confidence in every thinking person. It is the treatment for Catarrh, and don't forget it.

WE LEAD, and others are trying to follow. Ten years of successful business in giving the people, at all times, more than their money's worth, have placed us beyond the novice. When people write us for our treatment, they know they will have something that will give satisfaction, or they have the privilege of returning it. We always try to deal with the people so that our conduct and the merit of our goods establish confidence on general principles.

The treatment is easily carried with you; may be used anywhere, at any time.

Our treatment is its own testimonial. You pay nothing until we prove the treatment to be as represented.

My Special Trial Offer

For a short time, if you will write me a mere postal card, mentioning The Progressive Thinker, I will mail you my new Spray Medicator with treatment of Liquid Spray with complete directions for a quick home cure. If it gives perfect satisfaction after ten days' trial, and you are pleased in every way, and wish to continue the treatment, send me $3.00, and I will mail the balance of six months' treatment free. If you are not satisfied, mail me back the Medicator, which will cost you only 12 cents postage, and you still have your money. Nothing could be more honorable. I will deal fairly with you as I do not want your money unless you are benefited. Write this very day. Address,

A CURIOUS TEST REQUIRED.

"With the end in view of providing a manifestation of the above character, I have, in colaboration with my Venerable Mother, an ardent Spiritualist, placed in a small basket several small bundles of parlor matches, the most accurate pains being taken to prevent either of us or any other person from knowing either the number of bunches or the number of matches in any bunch, and yet the number of either is not so great but that the number of each may be determined by mere inspection. This basket was then closed and wrapped and cross-wrapped with thread, the knots of which and all intersections were sealed with wax. This basket rests upon the side-board in the dining-room of my home, at 811 South 6th street, this city. We will invite all persons with mediumistic power to tell us the number of bunches of matches, and the number of matches in each bunch."

M. T. CUMMINGS.

To the Editor:—Enclosed herewith I hand you the latest which came to hand by last mail. The writer of it is a very earnest, well educated and wealthy gentleman, who is amply able to fulfill all the obligations he has proposed to enter into. As he has requested those who receive it to make it as public as possible, I do not feel that I am betraying any trust in forwarding it to you together with a request that you publish it as soon as convenient—in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. Already been published.

Speaking for myself, I can only say, that in my twenty-six years of public mediumship, during which time I have been able to satisfy the minds of hundreds, yes thousands of earnest investigators of the reality of spirit communion with mortals, until at this late day in life, I feel that I have too much to do in removing the burdens from sorrowing hearts and grief-stricken souls, filling their lives with sunshine and gladness when they come to realize there is indubitable evidence that their darling loved ones do still live on and are still conscious of all our life's daily walk, and our successes and failures, rejoicing and happy when we walk aright, and grieving when we go astray. What a stimulus it is to the leading of a noble life of true manhood and pure womanhood.

Yes, I am too busy to spend any time in trying to convince anyone by signs and wonders, so that when I receive such as the enclosed I give them neither my time nor attention, knowing that if I did and should give the fullest answer imaginable to a skeptic, it would contain no proof of being the work of excarnate beings, for they would at once declare it was but a proof of projected clairvoyance, or traveling clairvoyance, and would be of little utility to either the world at large or to individual skeptics.

Brother Francis, as we are at the threshold of a New Year, allow me to congratulate you upon the consummation of a year of grand success in uplifting the right and the purification of our beloved cause, and to wish you a happy New Year.

May you achieve greater and more glorious work during the incoming year than you have ever accomplished in the past. Again wishing you God speed, I am as ever, your sincere friend and co-worker in the Cause of Truth. MATTIE E. HAYDEN.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., JANUARY 26, 1907 NO. 896

SIGNS AND OMENS.

They Often Owe Their Origin to Spirit Influence, and Are Prophetic of Future Events.

Neither education nor genius [says the Chicago Record-Herald] seems able wholly to banish the strange instinctive belief in signs and omens, and there are many of the world's most prominent figures who secretly subscribe to the following frank statement of Lord Wolseley, until recently commander in chief of the British army: "I not only believe in many superstitions, but I hug them with warm affection. They link me, if not with a spiritual world, of which I know nothing, at least with a glorious and artistic and picturesque past of which history has told me much. I believe in ghosts and in amulets. I have worn out the rims of several hats since I have been in Dublin, through my salutation of single magpies. I would not on any account walk under a ladder, etc. In fact, I am prone to adopt any superstition I am told of which I find others believe in."

Napoleon Trusted His Omens.

Napoleon always had an unlimited trust in his presentiments. When the the news came to him that one of the Nile River boats, the name of which was L'Italie, had been wrecked and the crew put to death, he gave up all hope of ever completing his conquest of Italy by annexation. Napoleon believed that the stars exercised an occult influence over human destinies. When General Rapp, at one time his aide de camp, returned from the siege of Dantzic, he found the emperor gazing with concentrated attention at the heavens. "Look there!" shouted the Emperor. "It is my star! The fiery red one, almost as large as the moon! It is before you now, and ah! how brilliant! It has never abandoned me for a single instant! I see it on all great occasions. It commands me to go forward; it is my sign of good fortune; and where it leads I will follow."

The shoddy adventurer and charlatan, the third Napoleon, inherited his uncle's superstition, if nothing else. He was for a long time the dupe of an American Spiritualist who affected to foretell the future, and his unwillingness to withdraw the French troops from Mexico was due in great measure to the fact that this prophet had displayed to him a whole panorama of glory centered about the figure of the unfortunate Maximilian.

Another victim of this American seer, according to Lord Odo Russell, was the contemporary Czar of Russia, who used to guide the most important actions of his official and private life by the predictions of the impostor. One of the most accomplished diplomats of England was excluded from the Russian court, as it was afterward found out, merely because the American had declared that he had the "evil eye."

The father of Nicholas II. was also an adherent of the occult sciences, and once sent his head astrologer off on the weary journey to Siberia because the train on which he was traveling was wrecked by Nihilists on the very day that the unfortunate man had proclaimed to be the most propitious in the whole year.

The late King Humbert, of Italy, lived in constant dread of the evil eye, and as a precaution always wore a bracelet studded with bezoar stones, which he believed to be a sort of antidote. Whenever he wished to make recognition of any exceptional service on the part of a subject, he would always present him with one of these stones.

Most of the Eastern potentates are victims of one or another form of superstition. The Shah of Persia not only has a court astrologer, but also carries with him when traveling a ring of amber, which tradition says fell from heaven during the lifetime of Mohammed, and which the Shah believes renders its wearer invulnerable. In addition to this he has a jeweled star, the particular virtue of which is to make conspirators confess.

Official Astrologers Maintained.

The Empress of China, King Menelik of Abyssinia, the Ameer of Afghanistan, the Sultans of Morocco and Zanzibar, the Khedive of Egypt, and the Prince of Montenegro all maintain official astrologers. Even Isabella, ex-Queen of Spain, is said to believe in the potency of the heavenly bodies.

As a more astonishing instance than any of these must be mentioned the hard-headed German Chancellor of "blood and iron," Prince Bismarck. Count Bismarck Bohlen is the authority for the statecent that one day in 1870, when the Prince gave a dinner at Rheims, one of the invitations had to be cancelled because Bismarck would not be one of the party of thirteen gathered at table. On another occasion in the same year, Friday, October 1, Bismarck refused to receive the envoy of Marshal Bazaine with propositions for the capitulation of Metz, because, as he himself declared, he would do nothing of importance on a Friday, much less on Friday the anniversary of Hochkirch, Jena, and Auerstadt. At another time he called the attention of his Generals to the fact that one of the few German defeats of that war was sustained on a Friday. While there is no evidence to show that Bismarck had any confidence in astrology, it is known that he believed his life was governed by a mystic number.

The old English philosopher Hobbs did not believe in a God, but he had a most intense fear of the devil. Byron believed in supernatural apparitions and ghosts, and regarded Friday as an unlucky day. Even the ponderous Dr. Johnson was not free from superstition. He would go to the greatest inconvenience while walking in order to touch every post he passed, in the fear that misfortune would follow if he missed one. When entering a door or gate, he always so maneuvered that his right foot would precede his left.

President Grant and Dreams.

Our own great General and President, Ulysses S. Grant, placed much confidence in dreams. He believed that it was a sure precursor of good luck to dream of crockery. On one occasion just before his appointment to the colonelcy of an Illinois regiment, he dreamed that he was in a field filled with the most dainty china, and in the morning informed his wife that prosperity was finally coming to him. Then there was Admiral Farragut, who declared that while he was at the masthead of his flagship at Mobile Bay just before he ran the gauntlet of the Confederate forts, he distinctly heard a voice at his ear saying, "Keep on! Keep on!" The English naval hero, Nelson, who broke the power of Napoleon, always carried a horseshoe on his flagship.

Not long before his assassination, Abraham Lincoln was deeply moved by a vivid dream in which he saw his own body lying in state. His contemporary, old Thaddeus Stevens, the tyrant of Congress, during the Reconstruction, believed it unlucky to pass pins, and he always stopped to pick up any that might be in his road. James G. Blaine, defeated for the presidency by Cleveland, would never turn back to enter his home after leaving it, even though he had forgotten something. Secretary Carlisle believed Friday to be unlucky, and Secretary Folger was under the impression that the number three governed his life.

I. C. O'MAHONEY.

Spencer's Philosophy Anti-Materialistic.

There is sectarianism in philosophy, or in what is assumed to be such, as well as in religion; and most people who are interested in philosophical problems deem it important to affix a label to every system, whether they understand it or not. A term is applied to a thinker, and it is often made to do duty in place of understanding his thought.

The same label is often put upon thinkers whose views and methods are widely different. If a theory is advanced that is new or but very imperfectly understood, still it is labeled according to the first impression that some popular critic gives to it. Popular writers are almost invariably superficial. They do not penetrate beneath the surface. Their oracular utterances influence readers for the time only, and thinkers of great merit come finally to be appreciated, and their shallow labellers are forgotten.

A not uncommon practice is to apply to a thinker some epithet like "atheist," "agnostic," "materialist," "infidel," and then to invest the word with a meaning that is at variance with the thought and character of the person thus described.

Herbert Spencer has been very commonly represented by his opponents as a materialist, notwithstanding the fact that in a number of his works he brings against materialism, as a philosophy, the most powerful arguments with which it has ever been opposed. In a letter received from Spencer he wrote: "I have had to rebut the charge of materialism times too numerous to remember, and I have now given the matter up. It is impossible to give more emphatic denial or to assign more conclusive proof than I have repeatedly done, as you know."

Spencer's position is that things in themselves are not perceived, yet that they correspond with perceptions. Between the mental and the external order there is congruity, but not resemblance. The objective existence is known only as it is symbolized, as we conceive it. It may not be in the least what we conceive it to be through our forms of perception and modes of thought. As for matter, we know it only as a series of phenomenal manifestations; and these we know only as states of consciousness, which we call color, sound, odor, resistance, extension, etc. All these words describe states of consciousness. All the qualities of matter are what they are by virtue of mind. All that we know directly is mind,—our own mind; the mind of others we know by inference. We can think of matter only in terms of mind, but mind we know only as a series of states of consciousness. The ultimate cause and basis of all phenomena, of "the shows of things," of the effects produced in us by that which is manifested objectively as matter and force, and subjectively as feeling and thought, is unknown,—is Spencer's unknowable.

This doctrine of the relativity of knowledge and the inscrutableness of the ultimate nature of things has been held by the greatest thinkers, including Kant.

Spencer's philosophy does not, as is popularly believed, teach that mind has been evolved from matter, but merely that in evolution the series of physical phenomena has been parallel with the psychical phenomena. The relation between the two classes of phenomena is one of concomitance, not a causal relation. With wonderful ability and ingenuity, Spencer has argued that the phenomena called consciousness are compounded of elementary feelings or psychical shocks, the ultimate units of consciousness. The series of phenomena known as consciousness corresponds with the physical phenomena which in the last analysis are resolved into simple pulsations of the atoms.

Mind and matter are manifestations under two different aspects of an unknowable reality which cannot be formulated in the terms of one or the other, since both relate to the characteristics of conditioned existence. The "substance of mind"—that which underlies mental phenomena—cannot be identified with matter; it cannot be identified with a series of conscious states; it is the same that underlies force and matter,—the unknowable.

But Mr. Spencer's "First Principles," at least the early editions, contain some passages which are liable to mislead one who is not acquainted with his philosophy as to his real meaning; for instance, the following quoted from page 217 of the work mentioned:

"Various classes of facts thus unite to prove that the law of metamorphosis which holds among the physical forces holds equally between them and the mental forces."

Now physical forces like heat, light, chemical affinity, etc., are not transformable into sensation, emotion, thought; and Mr. Spencer did not mean to convey any such conception. Wave motions of molecules in the brain may be changed from one wave of motion to another; but no kind of molecular motion can be converted into sensation and thought, which are subjective states, and not objective activities. As John Fiske, who has written very clearly on this subject, says, in one of his works, whatever goes into organism any way as physical force must come out as physical force. Every change that it may undergo must be accounted for in the terms of physical force, or else the requirements of the law of the conservation of energy is not met.

Spencer's statements about the transformation of modes of physical force into feeling, emotion, and thought, should be interpreted to mean only the relationship between those modes and the nerve changes which accompany feeling, emotion and thought. All who understand the drift of Spencer's philosophy will have no difficulty in making allowance for inaccuracy or incompleteness of expression, in seeing that in such passages as the one I have quoted Mr. Spencer means only the correlation and transformability of the physical modes of motion—those of the brain and nervous system, which are concomitants of thought—with all other modes of motion, such as heat, chemical affinity, etc. To those who are not familiar with Mr. Spencer's philosophy such passages must seem to have materialistic implications, and they furnish occasion for unintentional misrepresentation of his thought. It was more than those of any other thinker, the reasonings of Herbert Spencer, especially in his great work on "Psychology," which a third of a century ago convinced me of the utter inadequacy of materialism to explain mental phenomena, and yet how many times have I seen him quoted or referred to by careless writers in support of the materialistic philosophy.

TESTS OF SPIRIT PRESENCE.

Sustaining the Grand Truth of Spirit Return.

To the Editor:—I wish to relate an incident which happened in Byefield, Mass., when I was quite a small boy (I am now nearly 74 years old).

A man in our neighborhood named Larkin, had a snuff mill which he used to operate himself. He had a son William who went to sea as a sailor before the mast. He had not heard from William since he started on the trip. One day when he came up to dinner he was surprised to see William standing at the side of the door (this was in broad daylight and a bright, sunny day at that). He said: "Why, William, when did you get back?" Immediately the person vanished. When he did hear from the ship, he learned that William died in South America, just about that time.

Now this was long, long before the Fox girls and Spiritualism as now known, was thought of.

I wish to relate a little of my own experience:

When I was about eleven or twelve years old, my father bought a farm in Hampstead, N. H., and moved there from Byefield, Mass. Soon after moving he had business at the old home town. Now, one of these chums, Wm. Hill, had a dancing party at his house, the same night father was there. He wanted father to join the party. In those days no young man would think of dancing with his boots on; he must have dancing pumps—slippers, we now call them. Father was very fond of dancing, but he said, "I cannot, I haven't my pumps," but after awhile he could not resist, and he pulled off his boots and danced in his stocking feet. When he came home he told what an enjoyable time he had, and the circumstances of the stocking feet. Now comes my test:

After I married I came west. One night I had an invitation to a circle at a neighbor's house. A young man was influenced. Turning to me, he said: 'There is a man here who says he knows you, and is glad to see you here." Then he said: "He is a jolly fellow. He loves to dance. He is dancing now." Then the young man commenced to laugh, and someone said, "Curtis, what are you laughing at?"

He said, "He is dancing in his stocking feet." Now this was more than forty years after the above incident happened, and no one present except myself knew of it, and I had not thought of it since father related it on his return from Byefield. This, I think was a good test to me that father was there and took that method to convince me that he could see me, although I could not see him.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

Spiritualism on the Decline? No, It Is Growing.

Why is it that there are so many in our ranks who say that Spiritualism is on the decline? I cannot say, unless it is because they are not posted. I claim that Spiritualism is growing all the time, and always will grow until every one in the world is of one opinion in regard to spirit communion.

Every church is full of it now. If you will let the ministers tell you what they believe, you will find that they believe about the same as we do, but they will not admit that that is Spiritualism.

There are very few papers now printed that will not publish anything in regard to phenomena. A few years ago they would not publish anything concerning Spiritualism, except to make fun of it, but now it is different.

The church people can thank the Spiritualists for the modification of their hell. There are very few ministers that preach hell-fire from their pulpits. The people do not want that kind of preaching any more. They have outgrown that word. They will have to admit now that hell means grave or pit.

Heaven is a condition. We have it as we make it. An old man who peddles vegetables from house to house, came to my house one day, and he is very honest in his dealings. Being of liberal belief would naturally make him honest, as that is where you find your honest men, for honesty is their religion, and he was asked why he was so honest, if it was because he wanted to go to heaven, and his answer was that he carried heaven with him wherever he goes. And this is a fact, for he has a good word for everybody, and is always laughing and jolly.

Some people, when asked where heaven is, point upwards. Now, if heaven is up above the stars, it will be many years before we get there, as there has been one star that has been traveling towards this earth at the rate of 160 miles a minute for a million years, and we cannot see that star any plainer to-day than we could when we were born, but if we look through a telescope, we can see that it is moving very fast. Now, if that star has been coming towards this earth for one millions years at the rate given above, how long will it take an orthodox Christian to go to his heaven up above the stars?

Returning to our subject again, "Is Spiritualism on the decline?" Why, certainly not. How could it go backward when every improvement we have comes from the spirit side of life? Our improvements date back to 1848, when Spiritualism came in.

Just stop and think for yourselves; before that time sewing was done by hand, reaping was done with a small sickle, and threshing was done with a flail, that is two sticks fastened together with a strap. There were no such things as steamboats, sewing machines, self-binding machines, automobiles, or electric cars, but with the coming in of Modern Spiritualism these inventions have followed, and will continue to come in as fast as we can get men capable of bringing them in, men who are sensitive and can get communications from the spirit side of life. Ask every one of these men who bring in these new patents what their belief is, and you will find all of them Spiritualists, and these inventions are given them by the spirits.

Not every man is capable of perfecting these things, and not every one can get these communications. There are also many who can hear voices from the other side of life that do not know what to think of it. When one of our best mediums in the land today used to hear voices, she told her people, and they said there was something wrong with her brain, and their doctor told them that her brain was affected, and that she would have to undergo an operation, and they were going to take her to a catholic hospital and have part of her brain removed, but they kept putting it off from time to time until she was big enough to take her own part, and now she is one of the best mediums for spiritual communications in the world.

I have a little granddaughter who plays with unseen children. She will take them by the hand as you would any child and lead them all around the house, takes them up town and every place she goes, and they are just as real to her as the ones in flesh. This child is just four years old. I also have a little grandson nearly five years old who can see and foretell some things. I also know of one little girl in this city that is not over two years old; her father passed over to the spirit life, and she plays with him just as she did when he was here in flesh.

Spiritualism will not be put down. Some of our people have been trying to down it for the last fifty years and still it grows. It started a little over fifty years ago with a couple of girls, and it has grown until now we number them by the millions, and nearly all who did not believe in it did all they could against it, but with all their working, it continues to grow, and always will.

The time was when every one who believed in Spiritualism was suspected to be a little off, but now a Spiritualist has got the name of being a thinking person, one who does his own thinking instead of allowing the devil or others to think for him.

Some time ago an agent came to Massillon to sell books; the first person he met he asked whether he knew who the Spiritualists were, and he was directed to me. After he had given him the names of some of them, he handed me a book, and after I had looked the book over I told him it was no spiritual book, and he said he knew that. Well, I asked him why he wanted to know who the Spiritualists were when he was selling a book that had nothing to do with Spiritualism, and he replied that the reason he wanted their names was because they were thinking people, and he could sell them his books.

One thing our ladies should be thankful for is that Spiritualism came into the world. Before Spiritualism was known, our ladies were not permitted to speak on the rostrum. The Good Book says that if women want to know anything they should ask their husbands, that they were to be seen and not heard, but we who are Spiritualists think that women are as good as we are and should have the same privileges that we have. Another thing according to the Good Book, the women do not go to heaven. It does not say one word about women going to heaven, the angels are all male angels, but we Spiritualists have accorded them a place with us in the spirit world. It would be a queer heaven without our little children, and our mothers and our sisters. They even went so far in Bible times as to send one person to pick out a wife for another person. Now, brothers, how would you like to have some one to pick out a wife for you? I would prefer to pick out my own.

Earth-Bound Spirits.

A Theosophist's View of the Subject in General, and in Particular.

To the Editor:—The communication of Mr. P. A. Jensen, of Los Angeles, in No. 886 of The Progressive Thinker, relative to the clairvoyant vision seen by Miss "Z" at San Francisco, and her interpretation of the same, partakes so largely of a personal criticism of my endorsement of the lady's explanation, that I am constrained to reply to the same. It will be necessary to separate Mr. Jensen's letter into three divisions: the criticism of myself, the insinuations directed against Miss "Z," and the argument he advances against the possibility of a spirit being chained to an earthly locality, uncared for, for any length of time; in order that the personal argument may be isolated, as far as possible, and the vital part of the discussion brought prominently to the readers' attention.

Let us first consider the insinuations against the lady herself. First, "Extravagant language:" The lady wrote the description of her vision while its memory was still fresh in her mind.

Second, the lady's temperament and environment: She is not of a more nervous disposition than the average clairvoyant, and her environment is a private home life surrounded by loving relatives.

Third, her studies of "thought forms" and "non-human entities" upon the astral plane, have created illusions in her mind: She is a Theosophist, but is almost equally as active in Spiritualistic circles, and her clairvoyant visions have been repeatedly confirmed and corroborated by such well-known mediums and active workers as Mrs. Lily M. Thiebaud and Mrs. S. J. Lemont, both of this city.

Mr. Jensen refers to the author of this letter as a believer in ancient mysticism and a swallower of the ancient and modern teachings of Theosophy. I plead guilty to both charges. The books which have helped me most in studying ancient mysticism are Dr. Peebles' "Seers of the Ages," and Mr. A. J. Davis' lecture in volume three of the "Great Harmonia." What Theosophy I have swallowed has also been digested, and I heartily endorse Dr. Peebles in his saying that "It must be clear to every deep student of moral science and philosophy, that the pure Spiritualism, the pure Christianity of the Christ, and the higher pure Theosophy (as enunciated by the erudite C. R. S. Mead) are in perfect accord—three voices, three names, yet one triangle—Eternal Truth." As to "the rankest kind of lunacy" I displayed in addressing my former letter to the visible and the invisible worlds, that is merely Mr. Jensen's personal opinion and we will not burden the columns of The Progressive Thinker with personalities any more than we can help.

Among the positive statements of Mr. Jensen are the following: "The existence of the astral plane, 'thought-forms,' and 'non-human entities' are not well established facts; progressive Theosophists of the present day do not believe in them; Spiritualists have never accepted them as facts.

The term, "astral plane," as used by Theosophists, covers the earth zone and six more progressive zones or spheres. Spiritualistic literature presents the same idea, only the word "astral" is not used in connection therewith, and different authors draw the dividing lines between the spheres differently. The writer has never before heard the existence of an earthly zone or sphere (dwelling-place of earth-bound spirits), questioned by an occultist.

As to the existence of "thought-forms," we have the word of Madame d'Esperance, a celebrated medium, who upon awakening from a state of trance, described the world she had just left, and said: "I felt that thoughts were the only tangible things." The author of "Dealings with the Dead," described a very clear thought-form of a man hanging to a gibbet, and this book was published before any modern Theosophical literature was printed. Mr. Leadbeater, Mrs. Besant and Madame Blavatsky have, of course, described the astral plane, thought-forms and non-human entities in their various writings. The spirit "Ahrinziman," speaks as follows upon the subject through the medium.

"The oldest records go to show that the astral race was no less immortal than the Adamites and numbered among its people, good as well as evil intelligences of the highest order. These spirits who have never known incarnation in the conditions of the Adamite race, cannot be seen by man, but they can and do act upon him through the intervention and mediumship of that intermediate race who have blended with both the astral and Adamite Races."

To establish a fact, of course, we must consider the evidence.

This author's book, "The Other Side of Death," was published in 1903, and in it he treats of the three subjects under discussion; if Theosophy has progressed beyond this belief since the above date, the writer of this letter is ignorant of the fact.

The question whether Spiritualists believe in the "astral plane," "thought-forms," and "non-human entities," can perhaps be answered by ascertaining who are the Spiritualists. The author of "Ghost Land," writes quite fully of the "elementals." Mrs. M. T. Longley voiced the thought of Spirit Pierpont as follows: "Close to the physical planet is a sphere of sentient, active life that partakes largely of the qualities and properties of the lower, grosser conditions and powers of human life, habit and sensation upon the earth. That sphere is interpenetrated by and infilled with the emanations of selfishness, ignorance, brutality and corruption that go forth from polluted human lives on earth."—Encyclopedia of Death and Life in the Spirit World, Vol. III.

Here is a very good description of what Theosophists term "the astral plane." Whether the author of "Dealings with the Dead," and the guide, "Ahrinziman" are Spiritualists or not, we will leave to others to answer, for this letter is already a lengthy one and there is one more point to be considered, namely: Do earth-bound spirits remain chained to one locality for any length of time after the dissolution of the physical body? This is the pith of Miss "Z's" communication, for a careful reading of her description of the influence hanging over the unfortunate city of San Francisco, (and may not the recent carnival of vice and crime at that point be attributable to this influence) would reveal its character and that the spirits asleep were simply being whirled about in astral currents generated by the vicious and earth-bound spirits who are awake and preying upon the living as well as seeking the further enslavement of the unconscious.

Again we will quote from Mrs. M. T. Longley's inspiration: "If one could behold a picture of the lower plane of spirit life in all its repulsive gloom and barren unattractiveness, he would shudder and turn from it, and yet if he is selfish, tyrannical, over-reaching, toward his fellowmen, or impure and carnal in his tastes and habits, he is surely forging the chains that will bind him to such a sphere until he has wrestled with sin and overcome it."

This extract should establish the premise that earth-bound spirits are chained to a locality. The length of time would of course depend upon the depravity of the spirit's earthly life. The spirit Pierpont testifies very closely to the argument laid down by a Theosophical teacher, that if the spirits are pure and spiritually-minded, they are specially guarded, and sleep out happily the term of their natural life (referring to the cases of those struck suddenly out of physical life by accident, suicide, murder or sudden death) but in other cases they remain conscious—often entangled in the final scene of earth-life for a time and unaware that they have lost the physical body—held in whatever region they are related to, by the outermost layer of the astral body."

In extreme cases, such as a great fire or earthquake, the spirits are in such a condition of terror that they are practically unconscious, being wrapped in a vivid nightmare of the last moments spent while in the flesh, an automatic, self-repeating vision, which can only be dissipated by a strong effort and usually an external one.

But Mr. Jensen urges that A. J. Davis always saw the spirits recently released from the flesh provided for by spirit friends. This could indeed be the case, and yet it would not disprove the argument that where a large number of earthly lives in one locality are snuffed out within a short period of time, there would always be a residue of unconscious earth-bound spirits caught and held within an automatic nightmare, which spirit friends and helpers could not break through or dissipate. Even Swedenborg, whom A. J. Davis characterizes as the "most comprehensive mind, the loftiest genius, that humanity has ever enrolled in her ranks," states in paragraph 449 of his "Heaven and Hell:" 'Afterwards I was told that the spirit of man is held in its last thought when the body expires, until it returns to the thoughts that are from the general or ruling affection in the world."

Until the nightmare is dissipated, spirit friends cannot approach. This truth has been voiced by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, in Vol. III., of the Encyclopedia of Death and Life in the Spirit World, who says: "No spirits will come to you until you wish them to; no one will force one's self upon your presence;" and again, Mrs. Richmond gives this testimony regarding the duration of a fit of remorse: "It might, as I said before, have been days, it might have been hours, it seemed a century or an age of time when all this great shadow oppressed me and held me in its fearful, awful darkness."

In conclusion, I would say, that we were not trying to explain the destiny of the human spirit after death by publishing "An Urgent Call for Help," but we wished to call attention to the fact that the residue of earth-bound spirits enslaved within the magnetic aura of San Francisco, instead of diminishing months after the catastrophe, had actually become larger, proving Miss "Z's" contention, that their very numbers, cohering together, had formed a center of attraction to similar unawakened entities all over the earth plane. This was an unusual and extraordinary occurrence, perhaps an unique event in the history of clairvoyance; and being a menace to the living, as well as to the sleepers themselves, called for prompt and decisive action. An external force of sufficient strength to break these magnetic chains was what was needed. Then the friends of the earth-bound could begin to exert their regenerating influence and the 'spirits in prison" be given a chance to work their way out.

If we have in any way exaggerated the peril above described, Mr. Jensen's inspired rhymes are sufficient punishment for transgression.

ADAM THE UNIQUE.

When Adam went a-courting Eve
He didn't have to watch the clock,
Regretting when 'twas time to leave;
There were no gossips there to shock.

She didn't make him sit away
Across the room and talk about
The newest book or latest play
That others had been bringing out.

She had no red plush album there,
With photographs of Uncle John
And Aunt Louise and Cousin Claire
And others who were dead and gone.

He never when she sweetly sighed
Was forced to flee with all his might
In order to obtain a ride
Upon the last car out that night.

Ah, happy Adam! He was free
From grief the later lover bears—
Eve never whispered suddenly:
"I think I hear pa on the stairs."

THE PATHWAY OF THE HUMAN SPIRIT.

As Reflected From the Brilliant Mind of Dr. Peebles.

To the Editor:—I am delighted to see your announcement of Dr. Peebles' latest work, The Pathway of the Humas Spirit, based as it is on messages from angelic realms, the inspired thought of the ablest authors, the experience of the author, philosophical reasoning and masterly logic, all of which go to make it a positive power for truth. Its exactness and beauty of expression, combined with its richness in poetic thought, are resonant with a lofty spiritual emotion and reverence for that Absolute Being as manifested in energy, purpose, consciousness, reason, will and love. It holds a tender sympathy and unbounded solicitude for all mankind. It is the expression of a world-wide acquisition of the spiritual, consequent on the pathway of the human spirit.

The eternality of spirit and source of wisdom light up the following lines::

"Of the beginnings that never began
are life's tale.
We are caught in the coils of the world's romances,
We come from high worlds and we go
afar,
For the worlds, the worlds are God's books."

The great question of What, Whence and Whither regarding the spirit, receives special attention in this book.

I give the thought as impressed by my reading.

The spirit like to diamond rare,
Dazzling through white etheric film,
From center of man's triple brain,
It builds, to godlike destiny:
Nor captive to its mortal home,
When angel aid and wisdom bring
The opportune to go and come.

From Whence?—"The Paradise-sphere of God."

Whither?—Just rounding in wisdom's paths then back to that home divine, rich in the memories of world's experiences.

After studied research regarding the origin of spirit, both in religion and science, present and past, Dr. Peebles arrived at the conclusion that life is a circle of conscious experiences.

The claim of parental origin of spirit, of unconscious pre-existence generating immortality, is disclaimed with great earnestness by the author.

This spirit horoscope gathering from prehistoric wisdom and handed down from Wisdom Spheres, declares internal obsession to have been commonly known in ancient times by all, but that conditions have arisen until the present, setting aside this truth, which is the unknown cause of so much of human suffering, and which need but be understood by both spirits and mortals to perfect the science of spiritual healing.

In this latest work the eternality of pure spiritual love is touchingly beautiful in expression, and is reflected in the inner life of the author, bespeaking a sweet presence and promise eternal.

In this grand companion work to his Seers of the Ages, the spirit of the Doctor seems thrilled by the fire of the truth of his conviction, while inspired by angelic voices, floating in the thought, "Write, write! The time has come," and like the beloved John he wrote, dowering us with this rare gem.

Dr. G. L. Lane of Boston has pronounced the book the Pilgrim's masterpiece.

After eighty-five years of active life it is not surprising that he should repeat,

"Light of the Universe, when shall I return to Thee?
My spirit longs for its antecedent home."

In seeming reply to holy, tender, loving sympathy Spirit Dr. Scott, coworker with Dr. Lane, wrote the following:

"Greetings, brother in earth life."

"Peace and many years of health be unto you in the flesh before you put off your sandals, drop your pilgrim's staff and cross to our side of the higher life."

May the angelic inspirers of Dr. J. M. Peebles whisper again, "Write, write the truths inflowing from thy Paradise home on this thy latest round of thy world orbit."

NOBODY KNOWS.

Only a kiss on the baby's face,
Only a kiss with a mother's grace.
So simple a thing that the sunbeams laughed,
And the bees ha-hahed from where they quaffed.
Only a kiss, but the face was fair,
And nobody knew what love was there—
Nobody knew—but mother.

Only a word to a mother's joy,
Only a word to her parting boy,
And the changing lights on the window shone
As the boy went out in the world alone.
Only a word from a mother brave,
But nobody knew the love it gave—
Nobody knew—but mother.

Only a sigh for a wayward son,
Only a sigh, but a hopeless one,
And the lights burned dimly and shone with a blur—
Could a mother condemn? 'Tis human to err.
Only a sigh as she took his part;
But nobody knew what it cost her heart—
Nobody knew—but mother.

Only a sob as the tomb doors close,
Only a sob, but it upward rose,
And the lights in the window flickered
and died,
And with them her hope, her joy, her pride.
Only a sob as she turned away;
But nobody knew as she knelt to pray—
Nobody knew—but mother.

REINCARNATION, ETC.

Words of Explanation by a Student of Theosophy.

Please allow me a short space in your widely circulating journal in re articles appearing in your issue of December 8.

First, to heartily endorse the remarks of D. E. Smith and others regarding Mrs. Reynolds, etc.

Next, a word in reference to the article—"Reincarnation," by L. P. Wheelock. It appears some of us are unable to eliminate gross matter from our mental vision. Hence, find difficulty in some of the conclusions based upon more sublimated substance.

The difference between objective and subjective, is to them an "unknown quantity," or rather, quality. In fact I heard an accredited medium declare with emphasis, to a class, "There is no such thing as subjective."

There would be no absolute need for a mature spirit to enter a mortal organism. As the object of re-embodiment presupposes an immature entity desirous of further earth experience, reaching toward a condition of advancement; that no further need of earth life existed before a step higher in advance ensued, would be predicated of a "mature spirit."

And further: Animal life does not extend beyond the earth plane, or the physical. Derived from the physical, bodies of parents, when the physical yields up that life, (which this writer understands to be one of the many differentiations or modifications of universal energy).

The soul is ensheathed in an astral body, being of the less dense material which obtains in space, or place, or condition, which receives the soul, after its pilgrimage on earth. At whatever period during physical gestation, in the physical form, every organ is in full normal activity, it is informed by the waiting soul. Jesus, after declaring "Unless ye are born again ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven," left the question of Nicodemus for man to solve.

Savants disagree as to the process of Nature here on the Planet Terre. Could we reasonably expect at this stage, to agree on the modus operandi.

A correspondent speaks of the insult to Spiritists, by Mrs. Tingley. As neither of the parties mentioned have asked the favor, it seems foolish on her part. Being comparatively insignificant in the great scheme of things, it reminds the writer of an old Prof. who being attacked in a similar manner by a fledgling, replied: "The acephalous youngster had no other way of letting the world know of his existence."

Such smart announcements simply sound foolish. By the best informed Theosophical writers, it is well understood that occult phenomena, have ever existed. Modern Spiritism renewed the interest, and extended the study to a wider perception of the underlying truths regarding the next stage of human existence. Although since time began, the origin and destiny of the children of earth, have been to an extent known to a few of them, not until the 19th century were any large number mentally sufficiently developed to be able to meet and critically examine and accept the natural law which emanates from the One; in and by whom the Universe exists. To our awakening perceptions, Theosophy, meaning the wisdom of the One, can be but slowly, even apprehended; more slowly still, comprehended. And only according to the degree of light from higher spheres or degrees of being, penetrating the souls of earnest and unselfish students, who have risen beyond environments of the past, or present. Those who have attained to that or those higher degrees of clairvoyance and clairaudience which enables them really to see on planes higher and less dense than Earth, or the astral; sometimes called Kama-loca, or the desire region, where the emotional part of each still clings to the soul.

It is well to understand that, being a member of the T. S. does not constitute a theosophist. The most advanced in this study only claim to be students.

Let us analyze the word—Wisdom of God—Universal Wisdom. Who so bold as to claim to be a graduate.

SAYS PAINE BELIEVED IN GOD.

Passages Quoted From Author Which Profess Faith in Creator and in Future Life.

In the Battle Ground [as set forth in the Chicago Record-Herald] appears an article from Galesburg, Ill., making the charge of atheism against Thomas Paine and using as authority Theodore Roosevelt, who, the writer says, "stigmatizes the American soldier and patriot, Thomas Paine, as a 'filthy little atheist.'"

I am sorry if Mr. Roosevelt ever said such a thing, because it is not true, as every reader of Paine's works knows perfectly well. Paine's frequent statements of his firm and devout belief in God are so numerous and forceful that we are forced to the conclusion that whoever has said such a thing, whether Roosevelt or another, could not honestly say it if he had read the works of Paine.

On the very first page of his "Age of Reason" he says: "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life." No one could possibly attribute such language to an atheist.

On page 96 of the same works (part II.) he speaks of philosophy, mathematics and mechanical science as "continual sources of tranquil pleasure," adding that the study of these things "teaches man to know and to admire the Creator, for the principles of science are in the creation, and are of divine origin."

Strange sentiments for an atheist, are they not? Page after page of similar quotations from this author could be given, did space permit, showing him as an unusually fervent believer in the Deity. These facts are very well known by all who have taken the trouble to read Paine's works.

Criticise him if you will because of his disbelief in the dogmas of the church, but let it be remembered that they who in their zeal for cherished creeds overstep the truth, and, possessing scant information of their own, depend upon quotation from others for material with which to calumniate one who happens to be without the pale of these cherished creeds, are doing no good to the cause of religion or to the world.

Because Thomas Paine rejected the belief in the inspiration of the Bible, and in the many dogmas of Christianity, he has been attacked, not so much for what he has written, but because he was not a believer in Christianity. It might as well be said of a Jew that he is an atheist because he is not a Christian, although he is one of the very strongest believers in a God of any race of people, yet not more so than was Thomas Paine.

LEW A. McCONNELL.

Christian Religion Is Not Moral Enough, Publicly Declares Rev. Dr. Crapsey.

Attacks Doctrine of Original Sin—Angry God a Fiend—Cannot Imagine a Deity Who Has Been Wrathful for Centuries.

Inspired, apparently, by his freedom to speak out his belief without trespassing on the clerical laws of his church, [as set forth in the North American] the Rev. Dr. Algernon S. Crapsey, who was deposed as a clergyman in the Episcopal Church for heresy, made a remarkable attack on the dogmas of the Christian churches, in a lecture at a local theatre, at Rochester, N. Y., January 13.

That the Christian religion, as expressed in present-day dogmas of the Christian churches, is neither pure enough nor moral enough for the enlightened conscience of the present age and that the doctrine of original sin is immoral, were the principal points in his address. His theme was, "The Moral Breakdown in the Churches."

He began his lecture with a reference to a certain scene in Athens in the days of Alcibiades. When that brilliant politician and equally brilliant debauchee of a certain banquet was discussing the religious conditions of his time, certain young men who were present were deploring the decay of religion in Greece, but Alcibiades said not so.

Having just returned from Corinth, he said, "Never before have there been so many women consecrated to the services of the Goddess of Love, and never before have the young men of the country resorted more eagerly to the sacred groves."

"The writer who records this event was, if I am not mistaken," said Dr. Crapsey, "the immortal Plato himself, who saw nothing shocking in the words of Alcibiades. This is evidence that what we call religion and what we call morality are not always in accord.

"It is true that, at the time of Alcibiades, these religious observances, which are to us so shameful, expressed the current morality of his day. But morality was then outgrowing that phase of religious observance, the men were beginning to be ashamed of prostituting their women to the services of their gods, and from that time on there was a growth of the moral sense that was in increasing antagonism to the religion of the people. The antagonism began to grow, until at last we heard the prophetic saying: 'God hath not called us to uncleanliness, but to holiness.'

"It is a very common error which holds that religion is a guardian of morality. Just the opposite is true. Morality is a guardian of religion.

"There are no emotions of men, not even the sexual emotions, which need to be kept more sternly under the power of the conscience and guarded more exactly by the power of reason than the religious emotions.

"Man's religious nature is in its essence unmoral, if not immoral. In the name of his gods he has committed the greatest atrocities; has been guilty, as we have already seen, of sanctified uncleanliness, has sacrificed his sons and his daughters to devils; has murdered the righteous thinking to do God service, and has robbed the poor to build temples to the deities.

Our Thoughts of God Immoral.

"We readily acknowledge the immorality of the ancient forms of religion which were supplanted by Christianity, but we fail to see that even in our own religion there are conceptions which the enlightened conscience of today condemns. The underlying thought of God in the Christian dogma is immoral in its nature. It represents God as being in a perpetual state of anger.

"We are told that ever since the year 4000 B. C., God has been angry with man because of the sin of Adam. Now, anger is a debasing passion. He who indulges anger degrades himself, and if this be true of man, it must be equally true of God, in whose likeness man is made; 4000 years of anger would be to change any God into a fiend, and the God of the Westminster Confession, who is in this perpetual state of wrath, is, as Dr. Carter says, 'not a God, but a fiend.'

"Such a God cannot command the worship of a soul that has itself discarded the passion of anger. Cruelty is also an attribute of God as He is represented to man in the dogmas of the Church. St. Augustine devotes two books of the City of God to prove that God can keep, by his immortal power, a body of flesh in eternal existence in order to torment that body in the everlasting flames. Now, a God who would do this would certainly outdevil the devil.

Represented as Having Favorites.

"This whole notion of a God of vengeance has been outgrown and our conscience condemns Him.

"God is also represented in the dogma as having His favorites among children of men, giving to some and withholding from others, without rhyme or reason, except His own will and pleasure. Such partiality upon the part of a human father is always censured, and that which we condemn in a man we cannot allow in a God."

Dr. Crapsey then went on to say that not only was there immoral conception in regard to the Deity, contained in the dogma of the Christian Churches, but those Churches in their teachings held a false, degrading and in a measure, an immoral conception of man. He continued:

"The doctrine of original sin, as it is usually expounded from the pulpit, is insulting to human nature, and tends to nourish impure conceptions of the nature of man. Without his own fault man is brought into the world by a process which, his religious teachers tell him is essentially unclean; than because of this uncleanliness he is damned before he is born.

"Now one does not object seriously to being damned after he is born, for then he may have done something to deserve it, but to be damned before he is born breeds in him a sense of injustice, for he knows he has done nothing to warrant such condemnation.

"Now that there is in man a tendency to evil is evident to us all. It is the drag backward, the tendency to return to a lower estate of moral life than that which man has, in his present life, attained. This is indeed the consequence of his birth as a man.

"It is the price he pays for being a man, but to assert that this natural fact produces wrath in a supernatural God and the curse of God rests upon man because of it has no warrant in the nature of things.

"The conception of the bird is a pure conception, and why not that of the man? The child of a pure wedded love is a pure child from the instant of its beginning in the secret places of nature, and the Church should dwell upon that fact, rather than upon the other.

Should Be Born Right First.

"It should insist upon the privilege of everyone to be born right the first time, and not claim to overcome the deficiencies of a first birth, which is natural, by the magical effects of the second birth, which it claims to be supernatural.

"This doctrine lies at the base of our failure to achieve any great good from men through the forms of our churches. We claim that baptism is the antidote for original sin but to-day we see no difference between the baptised and the unbaptised, and we can say that neither baptism avails anything, nor want of baptism, but that man's salvation lies in his power to love and to love purely.

"The greatest symbol of joy given to us in the Holy Scripture is the joy of the bridegroom with the bride, and where such pure joy is, there is no sin.

"Another immoral conception, which is imbedded in our dogma is the doctrine of exclusive salvation. The saying, 'out of the Church is no salvation,' is arrogant and false. At no period in its history has the Church included in its pale all the moral worth of mankind. There have been as many good people outside as inside, and it is not church membership but essential goodness that saves."

Dr. Crapsey then went on to speak at length of the immorality which is exhibited in the methods of salvation as they are taught in the Churches, both Catholic and Protestant. He said that while on the Continent of Europe he had seen alms boxes over which were signs reading: "For Your Friends in Purgatory," and in these boxes he saw poor women putting their alms to purchase the release of their beloved ones from the pains of purgatory. He continued:

"Such a scheme of salvation is so immoral that we would not for a single moment tolerate it on earth.

Salvation "For So Much."

"If a man deserves his fate, he should remain in purgatory until he has accomplished his punishment. If he does not deserve his fate, to keep in purgatory for a moment is the grossest injustice.

"This whole scheme of salvation for so much has always been the scheme by which the practical Roman mind has sought to gain the favor of God. So many prayers, so many masses, so many journeys to this and that shrine, will gain for man the pardon of his sin. Walter Pater said of the old Roman religion, that it was something to be done, in such a place, at such a time, in such a way. A salvation so purchased would be worthless because it would be the gift of a worthless Deity.

"On the other hand, the evangelical doctrine of the merits of Christ, as this doctrine is so often presented by the evangelists, is utterly destructive of any moral conception of the universe. According to that teaching, God leaves all of the guilt of the sinner upon Jesus, and the sufferings of Jesus atone for the guilt of the sinner, and then God imputes the righteousness of Jesus to the sinner.

"In other words, God punishes the innocent, and lets the guilty go free, and He tells a lie in order to cloak the guilt of the one who is thus favored. To lay the guilt of the sinner upon the sinless is an active injustice, and therefore immoral. To say that an unrighteous man is righteous, is not true, and cannot be moral.

"To Get Something for Nothing."

"We admit that behind this doctrine there are great living truths which give it credence. The innocent do indeed suffer for the guilty, but they do not bear their guilt, nor suffer their punishment.

"This doctrine, as it is usually talked has bred in the mind of the average Protestant that he can get something for nothing, and that notion runs throughout his whole life. and the besetting sin of this age is the desire to get something for nothing, and for this the preaching of the evangelical is not a little to blame. If we can lay our sins on Jesus, why not lay our share of labor upon the poor? That is what we do every day of our lives, or, at least, try to. If we can get heaven for a song, why not get a fortune by a swindle?

"The organized Church has done much to confuse moral values and to bring about the present state of moral chaos. It overlooks altogether those great sayings that a 'Man shall get his bread by the sweat of his brow.' 'Whatsoever a man soweth, shall he reap also,' and it is through such tribulation that he enters into the kingdom of heaven."

NEWS BY TELEPATHY.

William T. Stead, the Great Psychic, and One of the Leading Literary Lights of England, Gives Some Interesting Facts in Reference to Telepathy.

Telepathy from the subconscious mind has for years been employed by me for the reception of news without the intervention of the ordinary channels of sense. The difficulty of working with the subconscious mind is that its consciousness is rarely coterminous with that of the physical consciousness. It ignores much that to us appears important, and in chronicling facts it is most embarrassingly indifferent to conditions of time.

These are, however, but the obstacles, the inevitable difficulties which baffle and tantalize the investigator in any unknown field.

What has been demonstrated times without number is that friends at a distance of hundreds of miles can and do transmit to me, by the agency of automatic handwriting, the most secret thoughts and confidence of their hearts.

They are not conscious of the use which their subconscious self is making of my hand. But they cannot deny the extraordinary accuracy with which time and again the contents of their inmost minds have been communicated to me.

My experience has sufficed to prove to me that, providing two minds are in tune, mind can transmit thought to mind instantaneously over distances of hundreds of thousands of miles. There are plenty of errors in transmission, flaws and imperfections in the telepathic process.

But the fact that mind can and does transmit thought to mind across vast spaces without the agency of any wire or electrical instrument whatever is to be almost as well established as the fact that there is a postal system, and that a letter dropped into a pillar-box in the street, with a penny stamp upon it, will be delivered in the course of the next day to any address within a radius of three hundred miles.

But my experiments have hitherto been entirely confined to the receipt of messages from the subconscious mind at the time that the subliminal part of him was communicating to me his ideas, his hopes, his fears, or his actual experiences.

I have, however, always believed that it would be possible to make the physical consciousness as receptive and as communicative as the subconsciousness.

A Great Season Promised at Lake Pleasant—A New Deal which Promises a Great Success

The annual business meeting of the directors of the New England Spiritualist Camp Meeting Association has just adjourned at Greenfield, Mass.

This was the first meeting under the new management for the important work of voting on the question of who should control the privileges the coming season?

For several years there has been little contest over the questions, but the new life that has come into the institution has been noised around, until "a lively season coming sure," is in the air. At least five applications were on file for the hotel, almost as many more for the dancing pavilion, etc. As a result of the meeting, Savage & Hopkins, of Hotel Lathrop, So. Deerfield, will conduct the hotel; Edwin McLaughlin of Turner's Falls, dancing pavilion, and boats; grocery store, Charles Slate of Montague; general store, H. S. Streeter; ice, Savage & Morse; baggage, H. Savage; ice cream, newspapers, stationery, Leon Henry.

Hotel proprietors are both able, progressive young men, formerly in the employ of the W. E. Wood hotel and restaurant system of Greenfield. This system has all the dining rooms on Boston and Maine R. R. from Boston and Troy, also Whalem Park, Fitchburg and Mauson House, Greenfield, Mass.

During July it is expected that the Chautauqua people may hold some meetings at the Lake.

The Spiritual people at Greenfield are, as usual, having successful meetings under the wise direction of R. F. Churchill, Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Thomas, have recently accomplished good work. Edgar W. Emerson at present is missionary to the society with success.

At the conference of Unitarian churches, at Bernardston, Mass., Rev. Sunderland, recently installed at Hartford, Conn., Church of Unity, read a discourse on the "Higher Unitarianism," which he said must devote earnest thought to the truths of psychic phenomena and welcome to its progressive fellowship all those who believed in the brotherhood of man, the fatherhood of God, and immortality a proven fact. This lecture has been widely commented upon and earnestly endorsed by many of the leaders of the liberal movement.

Rev. Richard Birks of Deerfield, pastor of the old historic Unitarian church, there a man beloved by all who knew him, though somewhere near sixty years of age is hustling the liberal campaign seven days in the week.

Mrs. Augusta Armstrong will address the Sunday meetings in the near future.

Dr. Hilligoss gave some fine selections on his graphophone at one of the late meetings.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman will not be at camp this season.

The grass around the camp has been burned off to secure safety from fire.

Mrs. Brigham has built a woodshed for her cottage, also new floors on the west veranda of Brigham Hall.

The Apartment House has also new floors on the verandas.

Mr. Bartholomew has put a new roof on his "Peek-a-Boo" cottage.

Mr. Palmer has added a bed-room to his cottage.

On Monday, Dec. 9, a corps of willing workers attacked the painting problem, and in three days changed and beautified the appearance of all the public buildings.

Last week the camp received a severe shock in the passing to spirit life of Horace S. Kellogg. He had been to DeLand the previous day and was about in his usual health, but passed out in the early morning of Dec. 13. Funeral services were held Dec. 14, at his cottage, conducted by Dr. Hilligoss, who sent a quantity of beautiful roses from the rose garden, in which Mr. Kellogg took great interest. Mrs. Wheeler offered the invocation. The body was sent the same day to Cleveland, Ohio, for cremation. Mrs. Kellogg accompanied the body, and will return to camp. She has the deep sympathy of everyone at camp.

My excursion for January by Clyde steamship line will sail from New York City, January 25.

SPIRITUAL LOVE.

I know a shrine, my faithful one,
In which my thoughts are arrayed.
I feel our love but the love divine
On your virgin face portrayed.

Your smiles are smiles of innocence
Which beam like silver stars;
Your look, ah! tender and serene,
All earthly vision mars!

Your ethereal sense of mind and life,
Illumines e'er my way;
It lightens every earthly strife,
In one glad glorious day!

TEST OF TRUE RELIGION.

There Is an Aggressive Form of Religion Calling Itself the Dogmatic Faith Which Has Done Far More Harm to the Human Race than Pestilence or Famine. Directly to Its Door Must Be Laid Not Only All the Bloodstained History of Mohammedism, but All the Murderous Doings Which Have in Turn Disgraced Every Sect of Christianity.

In the name of Christ the Apostle of Peace, this dreadful school of thought within a few centuries of his death brought about such quarrels and such murders as had never been heard of in pagan days.

Over the Homoiousian question, a theological point depending upon a diphthong, it has been reckoned that a hundred thousand people lost their lives, champions and victims of faith.

The crusades, the murders of the Albigenses and of the Cevennes, the thirty years' war, the inquisition, the outrages of Catholics on Protestants, the no less detestable outrages of Protestants on Catholics, the persecutions of nonconformists, the manifold domestic tragedies and tyrannies, embittering the lives of countless numbers—surely, when all these are considered, the reader must admit that faith in the positive, aggressive sense has wrought more mischief than famine or pestilence.

All sects have been misled by men of the same acrid frame of mind and have incurred the same blood-guiltiness.

I only know four cults—the original Buddhists, the Quakers, the Unitarians and the agnostics—who can, I think, say that they have no blood upon their hands. Certainly the atheists cannot, for their excesses in France—in the revolution and also in 1870—have been as bad as those of the churches.

And what has been the root of it all? Saying you believe what your mind cannot grasp and what your free reason would frequently reject. A makes his proofless assertion and calls it his faith; B has the right to do the same. Then A and B hate each other with a holy hatred, and there is the epitome of the blackest chapter of the history of the world. We who are like shipwrecked mariners upon this little raft of a world, moving upon the face of the infinite ocean, have enough to do to live kindly among ourselves, without quarreling bitterly about that which is beyond the horizon.

Perhaps you say that even in these very words I myself show want of religious charity. But surely it is not so. If the Catholic find the pope or the Anglican the bishop or the nonconformist the minister a help upon his path, then in every case it is a good thing—if it causes that man to be a better, more noble human creature. Every form of belief is admirable that does that. But when it turns to want of charity and the reviling of those who have other methods, then it is a petty twentieth century exhibition of that which ranks in history among the gravest and most bloodthirsty crimes.

SIR CONAN DOYLE.

SPIRIT RETURN PROVED.

They Visit a Family and Write Messages Independently.

To the Editor:—I write these lines hoping they may be read by some who have lost a loved one, and who may be suffering the anguish I suffered before I found the blessed light of Spiritualism. True it is our loved ones live and rejoice to find avenues through which to make their presence known.

It seems that different gifts are given to different mediums. Some can see the spirits; some can feel their presence and read their thoughts, while others are used by the spirits as electric instruments only. Such is the case in our home. One member of our family seems to possess the requisite amount of electric force, through which the spirits can write. It matters not if he is sleeping or awake, in the house or yard; the writings will often come down stairs while he is working in his studio upstairs. But he is always conscious when they are taking place, as his arms cramp and become numb.

When I think of questions to ask, he sits by the stand, placing one hand upon it. It is soon quivering with life. Then I place a tablet and pencil upon it, and receive answers to any questions I may ask.

At first we were very skeptical and thought the messages written were facts which had previously been stored in our own mind; but that was soon dispelled by the fact that many messages came regarding people and things of whom we had never heard until investigation proved their words to be true.

At one time we thought the messages might be the work of a somnambulist, but a little watching disproved that theory. In fact the dear ones have forced their presence upon us until all doubts have vanished, and today we welcome them in our home with outstretched arms. I have asked hundreds of questions regarding the future life, their sensations while entering the Valley of Death, their emotions on awakening, their surroundings in the spirit world, their pleasures, appetites, labors, environments, etc., to all of which they write answers, clear, concise and to the point. I ask how we shall live to best prepare us for the life to come. Their answers are always summed up in these words, "Be loving and unselfish."

I will gladly write again telling you the beautiful descriptions the spirits have written me. I am a plain uneducated farmer's wife, and could not imagine the beautiful things the spirits write, but of this I am thoroughly convinced, that

"Death is but a kind and gentle friend,
Who unlocks with noiseless hand
Life's flower-encircled door,
To show us those we love."

AN INTERESTING EXPLANATION.

Carlyle Petersilea Reconciles an Apparent Discrepancy.

To the Editor:—I would like you to answer a question, either through the columns of The Progressive Thinker, or privately, which is: In Letters From the Spirit World, by Carlyle Petersilea, in Letter No. 27, and on page 155, it tells us there are no children on the first sphere as they are too pure and could not learn anything good there, as it was none but the depraved and low who composed the first sphere; then in the book, Mary Anne Carew, on page 196 and chapter 13, we find the assertion that none but children inhabit the first sphere, as that is where they get their schooling. Now it is not altogether on our own account, but we want to send these books to friends and would like an explanation. We are searchers for the truth, and when we read one book and have our hearts built on something, and then take up another and find that thing flatly contradicted, it is, to say the least, conflicting. We hope, however, you will explain to our satisfaction and we will anxiously await your reply.

MRS. H. McINTOSH.

Reply by Carlyle Petersilea.

To the Editor:—I laid the matter contained in Mrs. McIntosh's letter, before my spirit husband, Carlyle Petersilea, and the following was his reply:

"We would like all to understand, if possible, that the spheres in spirit life are not arbitrary, that is, they are not marked off like black and white, but run gradually and softly, one into the other, as the colors of a rainbow do. But as the questioner is a lady, perhaps she will the better comprehend our meaning if we call her attention to the manner in which Berlin wools are shaded. She will find that these wools are shaded from the deepest black up to absolute white; from the deepest green, almost black, up to absolute white; and so of the blue, the brown, the yellow, the red; and thus of all the shades of the rainbow; one cannot tell where one shade leaves off and the other commences.

"Now we might compare the very lowest sphere to black. The shading is so gradual it would be very hard to say where, which was the first or which the second sphere. In the lowest part of the shading there are no children, for it would be a most unjust natural law that would compel little children and babes to the lowest sphere. In fact, that which may be called the first, or lowest sphere, belongs exclusively to the condition of the most ignorant, vicious and depraved; but there are all grades and descriptions of even these; they shade off, even as the Berlin wools do; but this condition cannot shade up into white, which means purity, because, by the time they become pure, they are not in that condition or sphere any longer, but by slow gradations have arisen from vice, ignorance and impurity, up into wisdom, virtue and purity.

"Neither could little children be in the same condition, call it sphere if one will, as the exceedingly wise and exalted. All must know that a little child cannot be in the same condition as a wise archangel, but must grow and be taught for a great length of time before reaching such a condition or sphere.

"Now, Mary Anne Carew, Carlyle Petersilea's mother, had been in spirit life many years, and had become a pure and wise spirit. She controlled and wrote the book with her own hand; but, in coming from that high and exalted condition or sphere in which she dwelt, passing down through all these shades and gradations, it was hard for her to readily distinguish which might be called the first, or the second sphere. Then, again, in coming to control, for the first and only time, an earthly sensitive, she did not come in contact with the lowest condition or sphere; and most naturally called the condition of simple childish ignorance, the first sphere; which, after all, is one of the gradations of the first sphere; yet, these gradations run so gently and gradually one into the other, that another spirit, in controlling, might call the second sphere that which Mary Anne Carew might look upon as the first sphere.

The book, 'Mary Anne Carew,' was written many years ago; and Mary Anne Carew was a young and perfectly pure, innocent woman, not thirty years of age. She had been reared secluded from the knowledge of all vice and wickedness. She knew nothing of such things—no, not even dreamed of them—and when she passed from earth she went directly to the condition or sphere in which her little children, that had already preceded her, were located. She, herself, was not a wisdom spirit, but a pure, gentle, and loving wife and mother.

"Shortly after her former husband, Franz Petersilea, the father of Carlyle, went into spirit life—remember that he had lived on earth many, many years after she passed out of the material body, had married again and had a family of children by another wife, he also passing from the earthly world an unmitigated materialist, and finding himself really immortal, being a strong and powerful spirit, wrote, automatically, The Discovered Country—he, we say, on meeting his former wife, whose maiden name had been Mary Anne Carew, implored her to descend, for once, and write her experience, that her beloved boy, Carlyle, might know of his mother, whom he could not remember, being but three years of age when she passed upward.

"This she did, and there was a cord which connected her with the sensitive through whom she wrote. Let scientific men find out about this cord. It will help them wonderfully. This cord held her to the sensitive until the book was written, and when the last words were written—'The End'—the cord snapped asunder with a loud noise, and her flight was so rapid and joyful that it sounded like a bird's whirring wings, real material sound, too, and she was gone.

"What we have now written is the most solemn and heavenly truth, and we herein set our spiritual signatures and seals.

"CARLYLE PETERSILEA,
"FRANZ PETERSILEA,
"ABBY A. JUDSON."

Through the hand of Amelia Petersilea.

P. S.—The cord is the same of which Archdeacon Colley speaks. Let science prove it.

They gave me their seals, but they would be of no use to you. Carlyle's was a radiating disk with faint circles within it. Franz's was a circle with an upright cross within it. Abby's was a Madonna and child within a circle.

LETTER FROM G. H. BROOKS,

President Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association.

It is my intention always to make a report once a month, if possible, of the work done while out in the state, serving as its missionary, interesting our people in the state society and trying to build up the cause. But, I cannot always do as I feel to do, as other work crowds in upon me; hence, a little delay this time.

I attended the N. S. A. convention, and while worn out with the close attention to the work done there, I was obliged to leave for my work under the fatigue of the other. My first landing-place was Superior, Wis., where I went unannounced and unlooked for, and among entire strangers. I went right to work, found out where some of our people were, found Mr. and Mrs Kalbfleisch, who made me welcome, and through their kindness and the energy of Mrs. Kalbfleisch (who went right to work with me) secured the Odd Fellows' Hall for the Sunday meetings and another hall for the mid-week meetings. I was able to begin a series of meetings on Sunday night, continuing them Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evening, and closing on Sunday night, holding in all, five meetings which were well attended and good was the result. But the meetings were largely due to the energy and push of Mr. and Mrs. Kalbfleisch. This is the home of Mrs. Sleuder, a medium and worker, who has done much for the advancement of our cause, and who has spoken for a long time for them, doing her best to keep the scattered forces together. No society was organized, as the time is not yet ripe; but a club was formed which will invite some of the leading minds of the city to lecture for them at different times.

From Superior, I went to Chippewa Falls, where Spiritualism is unknown, and where to be called a Spiritualist is to be looked upon as a curiosity. I had some strange experiences there; found one true, good Spiritualist, though, and spent the evening there, then away, the next morning, for Eau Claire, where I found conditions none the best. There is a heavy tax on mediums who come to that city to give readings, and those who are Spiritualists are, with the exception of one or two, afraid to let it be known—call themselves "Investigators," and seem ashamed to be classed among the spiritual people. While there have been some unpleasant experiences with some who have been there, one in particular playing the old game of beating the public and being compelled to leave the town, and through her and similar experiences, brought certain disrepute upon the cause. Yet no one should be ashamed of what they are. I secured the G. A. R. Hall and gave one public lecture which was fairly well attended, then held one parlor meeting which was well attended and some good was done, later, hope to visit the place.

From Eau Claire I went to Augusta, where arrangements had been made for me to hold a series of meetings in the beautiful Universalist church. But Saturday night came, no one attended; Sunday afternoon and evening the same, for some unknown cause, and we came to the conclusion the meetings had not been well enough advertised, though Brother Shrader did all he could, and was in no wise to blame; it was simply one of those peculiar conditions one meets with once in awhile. I had never visited the place before, and was sorry there were no better results. I then went to Neillsville, where I was nicely entertained and given a royal welcome by Mr. and Mrs. Root, and held three well-attended parlor meetings at their home; the results were good for the state, as well as at Superior.

I then started for Baraboo, and on my way there stopped off one night to see my friends Mrs. J. L. Porter and Mr. Hill and others of our thought. Was expected the night before, but sent a telegram I was unable to get there until the next night, so there were not so many out to the meeting, yet as many as I expected. On my arrival in Baraboo was met by Mr. Pratt, taken to his home, held two parlor meetings at the residence of Mrs. Fischer, then two public meetings in a hall.

Tuesday morning, I went to Leon, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Austin; held two parlor meetings at their home, did some little work for the state among the friends, and on Tuesday night went to Sparta; remained that night, then the next morning returned to Baraboo, where I held one parlor meeting at Mrs. Fischer's, and two public meetings. The weather was fierce, yet a fine attendance, and at all the meetings there was a very good attendance, and good was done.

Bright and early Monday morning, I started for Milwaukee, where I worked hard with the efficient secretary, Miss L. Loebel, getting matters in shape and attending to business. I was out thirty-three days and turned over one hundred and twenty-three dollars for my month's work, which shows the good people of Wisconsin are willing to do their share towards paying up the indebtedness. There are a goodly number of expenses attending all this work, and one must realize there are demands made upon a society of this kind that must be met. I am obliged to be out of the state for December, but hope to take up the work again in January. I am going to follow this letter with another of appeal to the Spiritualists of the state, and see if we cannot do more than has yet been done in the state. I am sure there can be. I am, at present, in Pittsburg, for the month of December, but my interests are just the same for the work there in Wisconsin. The State Society will soon place another mass-meeting in Milwaukee, and other meetings are being arranged through the state. Wake up, friends, all over the state, send to the secretary, Miss L. Loebel, 202 North Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., your name and wants, and let us hold meetings in your city, town or hamlet during the coming winter and spring.

Flourishing Condition of the First Spiritualist Church.

To the Editor:—We desire to call your attention to the re-opening of the First Spiritualist Church of Allegheny, which took place on Sunday, January 6, 1907.

The new church was beautifully decorated with palms plants and cut flowers. The rear of the pulpit was decorated in oil Painting of the rising sun and the rainbow of promise—the rising sun representing the light of truth, and the rainbow the promise of success for our new church.

The first service was opened at 3 p. m., by the congregation singing America. The invocation was offered by Mrs. Anna Gillespie of California. A beautiful violin and piano duet was rendered by Prof. Thomas and Daker. Opening address by Doctor Tallinghast of the Universalist church. Vocal selection by the famous vocalist, Miss Ida Heatley. Address of welcome by Miss Fannie Allen of Boston, one of the old pioneer lecturers on the science of Spiritualism. Vocal selection by Professor Evans and wife. Address on the work of the National, by C. L. Stevens, president of the First Church of Spiritualists of Pittsburg, and also one of the trustees of the National. Duet by Prof. Evans and Miss Ida Heatley. Address on lyceum work by Mrs. Anna Gillespie.

In the evening ten new members were received in the church, and one Spiritualist baptism performed, flowers being used instead of water. The church was crowded to its full capacity at each service, and every one appeared to be delighted with the services of the day.

The First Church has an entire new board of trustees and officers for the new year. Mrs. Haynes, president; Mrs. Shuster, vice-president; Mrs. McBane, treasurer; John Weiss and Sister Albert Fry, secretaries, with nine trustees.

Our church is in the best financial condition it has been in for years, free of debt, with a good sum of money in bank, and in a growing and very prosperous condition. The pastor, Rev. G. C. Day, is drawing large crowds to all of the services. His lectures are scientific, and he is beloved by all that become acquainted with him. His delineations are wonderful, and to say he is a worker for the cause of truth is putting it very mildly.

Sister Hatton's and Pastor Day's delineations on last Sunday evening would have convinced anyone of the truth of Spiritualism. May the angel world give us just a few more such noble workers as Pastor Day, and the cause of Spiritualism will prosper. ALBERT FRY.

A LETTER OF APPEAL

To the Spiritualists of Wisconsin, From G. H. Brooks, President W. S. S. A.

Dear Friends, One and All:—I have been the president of your state society for seven months. As time permitted, I have worked hard for the success of the state association, in trying to prove to the public at large we are an honest people, by paying our debts. While, with you, I question the wisdom of that debt, and feel that a child could have done better than to bring such conditions upon a young society, and cripple its work and influence, yet the debt is there, and like honest people, let's pay it. I am working, as well as the secretary, Miss Loebel, and the board, with might and main, to raise the debt. We ask you to help us. Send in your name and one dollar for membership; that will help us. Send more if you can; but if you cannot send one dollar, send what you can—your half-dollars, quarters, anything to help us along. Sometime during the winter, the state society is going to hold a fair in Milwaukee, and we ask from anyone, and from all, donations of fancy articles; send anything that will sell, aprons, caps, night-caps or any kind of a cap, silverware, or anything that you can and we shall be more than glad for the same. Send to Miss L. Loebel, 202 North Ave., Milwaukee, Wis. If you send the articles by express, please pay the charges on the package, as the money paid on express charge must come from the society and it is better not to do so.

I also ask that in different parts of the state socials be held and send in what you receive from that source to Miss Loebel; no matter how small it may be, it will be thankfully received. In Milwaukee, in different parts of the city, at different times, "Coffees" are to be given for the convention fund; so, let our friends in many places do what they can. I am working for less than what an ordinary mechanic gets, so that the state society can use its money where it belongs. Surely, some of the friends can do something toward helping the cause on. My address is 114 President street, Wheaton, Ill., through which address I can always be reached; so, friends, I ask that a help be extended to us in our work. Surely, in the great state of Wisconsin there are to be found Spiritualists who will aid us in the work. We have a note due in February of over seven hundred dollars, and we desire to raise it, or a part, at least. Who will help? Come on, friends, come to the front and aid us in the work.

SCINTILLATIONS

Written by Henry Morrison Tefft.

"There is not a single belief that it is not a bounden duty to hold with a light hand and to part with it cheerfully, the moment it is proved to be contrary to any known fact, great or small."

Numbers are not always victorious, neither does age always prevail. In artistic beauty and intellectual strength, from a historic standpoint, Greece outweigh China. But it is not classic literature, nor artistic music that has cheered, comforted and elevated the greatest number of people. The lighter reading, the common melodies, have brightened more homes, cheered more lives than ancient lore or classic song.

The world is like a theater stage—the scenery is continually changing. Clouds become mountains of ice and snow as they ascend into the highest atmosphere. Life must be viewed from many a shifting standpoint. For every known fact there are a thousand theories; with each proposition goes an interrogation point. We cannot define genius, inspiration, nor insanity. No one can draw the line between good and evil, normal and abnormal.

A great deal has been written as to what constitutes poetry and oratory—but they evade all rules. We know, feel and experience facts and conditions that cannot be put in words.

There is always a charm about the unattainable. Christ's life is an ideal; His teachings a theory, a sentiment—not a practice. The most ardent admirer of his life cannot put his words into practice.

Fiction, romance, mystery, possess irresistible attractions. The strongest intellect bows in adoration before a superstition. Great men have their foibles. The Indian warrior adorns himself with paint and feathers and the civilized warrior with epaulets, brass buttons and gold braid. What is the difference in meaning?

"As the sun colors flowers, so does art color life." People are never satisfied with plain facts. The imagination craves after highly sensational literature, the same as the stomach craves highly seasoned food. It is stated of Ruskin that "a person derives more pleasure in reading his description of a place than seeing it with his own eyes." The personality that goes along with a speech is more than the speech itself. It is not so important what is said as who said it.

Elocution is not oratory, any more than rhyme is poetry. It takes more than physical development to make beauty. No matter how comely the features of a woman may be, if she is lacking in those indescribable qualities that we call grace and charm and soul—then she is like a beautiful flower that sheds no fragrance. Genius makes everything symmetrical; it changes ugliest features into beauty, gives new meaning to words, and charges inanimate matter with magnetic power. An extreme enthusiast said of a certain lady musician, "She has the attitude of a living legend. She has only to come to the piano and sing or play * * * to make melody agitate with its wings incomparable jewels."

Knowledge sometimes throws a cloud over our most cherished hopes. Things sacred become profane under the searching eye of investigation. Divine revelation sinks away into mere history, superstition, fable.

Whether the benefit derived from prayer comes from within or from without, whether it is subjective or objective, is a matter of argument. Its true relation to the individual does not seem to be definitely settled.

No man knows the commencement of the observance of the weekly Sabbath—its origin is lost in the obscurity of the ages. L. D. Burdick, in his book, "Oriental Studies," speaking of "A Babylonian Saints' Calendar," says, "It is interesting to note that in this ancient calendar of the Assyrians may be found the nucleus of all the laws, written and unwritten, civil and moral, as well as the source of many of the traditions, customs, and beliefs of later ages and modern times, in relation to the observance of the Sabbath."

"We dislike to be disillusioned. The child realizes a disappointment when he finds that there is no Santa Claus. Keats said of Newton that he had "destroyed the poetry of the rainbow by reducing it to a prism."

It is hard to distinguish history from fable, the real from the unreal. This is true in the physical world. We are told that the brightness that is seen and the heat that is felt are not located in the sun. Its brilliancy to us is only apparent, not real. "Brilliant and dazzling though the sun really appears, its brightness, like its heat, is but seeming. * * * Brilliancy is not a quality inherent in the sun. Its dazzling brilliancy, so far from being located in the sun itself, is actually confined to the earth's surface."

Error is a permanent investment. When once it finds a home in the heart of mankind, it lasts for centuries. Truth, in the market, is always below par—hypocrisy goes at a premium. Galileo, for advancing a new thought found a prison, and Bruno the stake. Some are born to make rules and precedents, others are born to follow them.

An original thought or action scares the majority of people unless it is ancient, unless it comes with the credentials of a thousand years, they dare not accept it. There are those who cannot read or listen to any argument or statement that is opposed to their preconceived views. Such a person soon becomes crystallized in thought and hardened in belief.

That which disturbs and irritates, spurs us on to action more than that which soothes and pleases. Irritants are as necessary in medicine as soothing syrups. Enemies are as beneficial as friends. The mind like the stomach, if continually fed upon the same diet, becomes nauseated.

Our judgments are dwarfed by ignorance and warped by superstition. Men have been put to death for disbelieving in the Trinity—a doctrine that has no more to do with our future weal or woe than it has to do with the precession of the equinoxes. A creed is not the determinate factor in a life. Dyspepsia sometimes puts on all the appearance of deep piety; religious enthusiasts mistake a nightmare for an inspiration. A person may be just but not merciful; he may be religious but not moral. The negro is naturally very religious, but often very immoral. A person's environment and inheritance have more to do with his life than his belief in a heaven or a hell—a god or a devil.

Nothing was ever created without a definite purpose. No wide-spread belief ever took hold of the minds of men unless it was called into existence by some deep felt want or necessity for the same. There are those who can see only in one direction, but truth branches out in many ways and the honest investigator follows all trails.

"Agassiz said that he had stood at one place in the Alps where he could throw a chip into the water in one direction, and it would roll into the German Ocean, or he could throw a chip into the water in another direction, and it would reach the Black Sea by the Danube, or he could throw a chip in another direction, and it would enter the Mediterranean by the Rhone."

No two persons follow the same path through life, nor are they guided by the same ambition, nor are they after the same goal; yet there is a kinship in nature. Each heart is an epitome of the whole world. The chameleon can take on all colors but its nature remains the same. We imagine that other people possess virtues and vices that we are void of; we credit them with powers of which they are not endowed and of weaknesses of which they are not guilty.

Goldsmith, it is claimed, "wrote like an angel and talked like poor Poll." The greater the man the greater are his inconsistencies. The mind of man can ascend as high as heaven and go down as deep as hell. There is no solid mahogany in character—all is veneering. Our religion, morals and private thought will not bear too close examination. Even a maiden's tear loses its poetry and tenderness by being analyzed.

Some people's religion is in their heads, and some in their hearts; some have it in their creeds, others in their practice. The church as a social factor is in its meridian; as a religious factor, it is waning. Speaking of the clergy a writer says, "They occupy themselves Sunday after Sunday * * * in combating extinct Satans." Probably there is no such God, nor any such devil as mankind have been taught to believe.

Everybody is working out his own little scheme. Show, pretense, hypocrisy, are all current coin. Men engaged in a questionable business or calling always defend their acts in their own thought. The saloon keeper justifies himself on the plea that if he did not sell liquor some other person would—the article would surely be obtained. The highwayman satisfies his conscience on the ground that it is no worse for him to rob an individual than it is for trusts, syndicates and corporations to rob whole communities which high-minded men, Christian gentlemen, when members of these bodies, never hesitate to do. A person may practice insincerity until it becomes a habit, a trait, a fixed principle in his life.

Words are superficial and often meaningless; our character is best expressed in our works. To the sensitive, the soul, the marrow and substance of a man, shines through the physical framework as clear, and truthful as if the covering was made of glass. There is no law more constant than this—that whatever act we do that is injurious and demoralizing to others, injures and demoralizes ourselves. Every word, deed, or thought—good or bad—brings back blessings or cursings.

"He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' the center and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the midday sun;
Himself is his own dungeon."

We judge a person by the books he reads, the friends he loves, the things he likes and the objects he hates. "Tell me who you live with," says the Spanish proverb, "and I will tell you who you are."

"Birds of a feather flock together," is as true a saying as was ever uttered. What is darkness to one condition of life is light to another. Give one man a single bone and he will construct the animal to which it belonged; give another the climate and the description of a country and he will tell you what kind or race of people it will stimulate; and still another will, from the print of your hand, read your past, present and future history.

"God hath interlined
The human hand like some prophetic page,
And in the wrinkles of the palm defined
As in a map our mortal pilgrimage."

Every one speaks in his own tongue. Genius expresses itself in its own language. Rubinstein once made a concert tour of Spain. He was asked, "Do you understand Spanish?"

"No," he replied.

"Then you must have to use the French language."

"The Spaniards do not all speak French."

"How, then, do you talk to them?"

"With the piano."

A person can drink in the spirit of an article, of a book, or of a speech, without knowing its exact teaching. Language is not the only medium of communication of soul to soul. The multitude, looking at a painting, only see canvas and paint—the soul of the picture, to them is a blank. The personality of a man goes into his work. Each nationality has fixed characteristics; each community emphasizes certain peculiarities; each home creates its own atmosphere. The spirit of a people speaks in their sculpture, in their painting, in their architecture and in their literature.

National development keeps step with individual development; they advance and recede together. We are constantly publishing to the world pictures of our character. The author weaves his life into his book, the sculptor into his statue and the orator into his oration. Some one has said of Ingalls, "Every bright thought and every expression that he has come in contact with has been reground and repolished between the millstones of his brain until it has left its original shape and become a new creature—that of Ingalls alone."

However insignificant a person may be he is a maker of history. The mighty Andes are formed from the bodies of the tiniest animal life. "In the coral reef which forms the further end of the peninsula of Florida and which stretches its unbroken wall for many a league along the sea, you see the labors of many small workmen. How insignificant the workmen—yet their bulwarks laugh at the storm king riding in his chariot of destruction."

"What did I come for? You came for a cause
To strengthen the purpose, to better the laws.
Like a rivet or bolt of a great machine,
You are all important, though all unseen."

Science teaches that there is no longer any "dead matter." All substance is "animated by vital force." Every power and faculty of man is necessary for his full development. Fable and fact, truth and falsehood, good and evil have vied with each other in producing the glory and splendor of the world as we see it today. We cannot tell where legend ends and history begins. The line between instinct and reason is vague and uncertain. What is moral or immoral, ugly or beautiful, religious or irreligious, are questions of age, climate and geography.

A worthless weed in one country becomes a rare, costly plant in another. The current of life is upward. A satisfied man, is a dead man; growth means unrest. The springs that feed the national life come from beneath and not from above. "These bare feet, these naked arms, these rags, this ignorance, this abjectness, this darkness, may be employed for the conquest of the ideal * * * the vile sand which you trample under your feet when cast into a furnace and melted, will become splendid crystal and by its aid Galileo and Newton discover planets." Out of the noisome dung-hill grows the beautiful, delicately perfumed flower.

Society creates its own sins, morals, and its own characters. When there is no demand for a certain class of business, or a certain class of workmen, then the business and the workmen depart. No grade of immorality could remain in a community unless it found sustenance, patronage and tolerance.

Example is better than precept. You cannot make people good by legislation; neither can you govern by statute their moral, religious, social or domestic relations. There is no virtue in forced obedience. The consension of public opinion is a stronger safeguard to society than legislative enactments. Love is a stronger force in the world than hate. Praise redeems more lives than censure.

Life from the cradle to the grave is a continual struggle—a disappointment. "No man has prosperity so high or so firm," says Emerson, "but two or three words can dishearten it. There is no calamity which right words will not begin to redress."

SPIRITUALISM CURED CANCER.

Woman Tells of Remarkable Effects of Electric Treatment.

New York, January 9.—Professor James H. Hyslop, vice president of the American Society for Psychical Research, and formerly of Columbia University, to-day made public a remarkable story of "spiritualistic" healing.

The story in brief is that Mrs. Mary Scott Rowland of Windsor Arcade, Fifth avenue, New York, developed a cancer of the breast and on the advice of her family physician consulted the late Dr. William Tod Helmuth, who was well known as a specialist on the disease.

Mrs. Rowland, when seen to-day, confirmed the story of the remarkable cure which occurred some six years ago. She told of her visit to Dr Helmuth after telling of the development of the cancer and of the futile efforts of her own physician to combat its progress.

"After talking to me awhile," said Mrs. Rowland, "Dr. Helmuth said he wanted to examine the breast again. And then something happened, inexplicable to the doctor, but which I understood.

"Dr. Helmuth put his hands out to touch my breast and suddenly letting them drop exclaimed:

"'I can't get near you, Mrs. Rowland, At the moment he had put out his hands one of my spirit guides stood behind me and sent through his brain and mine the impression that I had been sufficiently examined."

"Dr. Helmuth said he was going to Paris and would be back in a month to perform the operation. He left me some pills and prescribed a plaster.

"He also wrote me on a piece of paper his diagnosis of my case, which opinion I have, also the pills, which I never used. I never applied the plaster.

"Finally I determined to go to the Rev. Mr. Curlis, in Brooklyn, and try through him to get advice from some one in the spirit world. Mr. Curlis established communication with 'Dr. Shirley,' his control, and my case was stated.

"'Do as I direct,' said Dr. Shirley, 'and you will be cured. Take electric treatments through the hands for three months. I will visit you once a month and direct you further.'

Told to Keep On.

"I went to Dr. Townsend, who had in the first place sent me to Dr. Helmuth, and for three months he gave me the electric treatment. At the end of that time, 'Dr. Shirley' communicated with me and told me to extend the treatment ten days.

"'I want the last vestige of the matter removed,' was what he said.

"I was absolutely cured. That was five or six years ago."

Mrs. Rowland then told of going to see Dr. Helmuth and submitting to an examination, which showed that the cancer had been entirely eliminated.

"He was dumfounded," said she. "He walked up and down his office, saying: 'I cannot understand you.'

"Before I went away I asked him if he thought the disease would come back. 'If it does, take the same treatment,' he said."—Chicago Examiner.

A GREAT PSYCHIC WONDER.

H. Spencer Lewis, President of the New York Institute for Psychical Research, Relates Some Interesting Facts.

The year 1906 was one of the most successful for the advancement of psychical research and study, more wonderful discoveries, revelations and conclusions having been effected in this one year than have been recorded in the annals of this science since the first "spirit-raps" were heard in this country in 1848.

In response to the request for an account of the most remarkable psychic exhibition of the year, I will describe the demonstration before the society by a young American Indian, who claimed that in a trance he could communicate with the spirit of an Indian chief, and also with the "Great Spirit," and that this spirit would describe through him the homes of those gathered in the room.

The medium did describe, accurately and in detail, the rooms of six of those present, one room being in England.

He also described the appearance of a gentleman he had never seen, and told where he was at the moment of recital, which facts were afterward verified in the minutest detail.

In this demonstration it was not possible for the medium to ever have seen the rooms he described, and therefore there could have been no fraud.

This leaves but two explanations—that of telepathy and that of actual spirit communication. Of course, those present knew their rooms, and telepathy was possible, for the medium could have received, telepathically, the descriptions of the rooms from the persons present.

But granting this we find that telepathy could not explain the method by which the medium described the room in which the gentleman before mentioned was spending the evening, nor could it explain how the medium was enabled to tell us just what this gentleman was doing; for no one present knew where the gentleman was, and certainly no one knew exactly what he and the others with him might be doing. The medium was a stranger to all present, and there could have been no collusion.

If telepathy can explain this demonstration then we must admit that telepathy between strangers at a distance at any time and under any conditions is possible. This is extending the limitations of telepathy to an extreme, but even so, it may be the real hypothesis. This demonstration on the whole was the most remarkable of its class ever recorded by our society, or perhaps by any other body of investigators.

And Still They Come.

Now right here at home, from the Chicago University Press, comes a book from the pen of Rev. Wm. C. Selleck, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Providence, R. I., entitled "The New Appreciation of the Bible," which perhaps leads all rivals in extreme and truthful utterances, though in some respects the author follows closely along the line of thought in the work entitled The Finality of the Christian Religion, by Prof. Geo. B. Foster, of the University of Chicago, which aroused great interest a few months ago. Rev. Selleck says:

"The Bible has been made to teach almost every conceivable doctrine, and to support many a terrible wickedness—slavery, polygamy and the subjection of women."

The learned writer says very correctly:

"The Bible should be considered merely as a piece of literature, as a collection of ancient writings—not a single book, but a library of 66 books. It contains history, philosophy, poetry of many kinds, fiction, love stories, a hymn book, collections of maxims for practical conduct, biographies, letters of spiritual counsel and friendly correspondence, and ecstatic visions of seers and dreamers. * * * The quality of utterances range from the childish notions of a primitive people just emerging from slavery, and from the moral pessimism of a satiated sensualist to the sublimest and most comprehensive thought." * * * The traditional view of the Bible, considered with reference to the present age, has been and is now an unfortunate view. It has cramped the human mind, allowed little room for progress to such an extent that nearly all progress has had to bear the stigma of heresy. It has begotten idolatry, and is made a fetish. It is full of inaccuracies historically and scientifically. Nearly anything can be proved by the Bible. The real authors of many of the books of the Old and New Testament are unknown, and Christ was not quoted until a generation after his death."

We have abridged slightly, but the language and the ideas are everywhere the author's. His positions are identical with The Progressive Thinker, and we are proud to find the ablest and the bravest scholars in the orthodox churches with us, as the great world of religious thought will be in another generation.

Departing Glory.

Three-fourths of a century ago Congregationalism was a power in the United States. Its distinguishing feature was that each particular church shall exercise ecclesiastical authority over its own body, without being subject to any bishop, synod, presbyter, or council. They held that there was no scriptural authority for prelates and higher officials. Their clergy were of their own number, and were ordained to the ministry by prayer and the laying on of hands, and were subject to expulsion by the church itself. Their creed seems to have had many features in common with Presbyterianism.

Free from outside restraint, what in other churches would be called heresy sprang up in the Congregational churches, and many of them were developed into Unitarians, still retaining their ancient name. This was not very uncommon in the New England states, where their numbers were largest, and if we are correctly informed some Congregational churches were transformed into Unitarians.

The consequence of all this freedom has led to disintegration, the members quietly sloughing off, many of them merging with Methodism.

Perhaps no one of the Protestant churches has suffered more from advanced thought than has the Congregational. It had hell as a sort of whip to scourge recalcitrants, but as that fabled place of torture has fallen into disrepute, and churchmen have grown more intelligent, few seek the ministry, so their churches are now begging for young men to enter their pulpits, with but little success.

A Novel Procedure.

The good people of Colorado elected Rev. Henry A. Buchtel, a Methodist clergyman, and Chancellor of the University of Denver, governor of that state, last fall. He was inaugurated, and entered on his official duties on the 8th instant. But note: instead of the ceremonies and oath of office being administered in the State House, where they properly belonged, they were transferred to the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, and his excellency occupied the pulpit when the oath was administered.

It was an olden custom to crown kings in church and anoint them with oil, thus making them Christians, for the Greek verb christos, from which came the word Christian, signifies "to anoint."

It has heretofore been understood that our state and national governments were secular, and in no way identified with any system of religion; but is not this affair at Denver an attempt to revive a practice unworthy of our Republican institutions?

There is a constant effort among churchmen, particularly with the clergy, to forget that our revolutionary ancestors wisely discarded all forms of religion in the founding of this government, and went so far as to not even recognize a God, either an orthodox or a heretical one, in its Constitution; and the nation has been favored as has no other in consequence.

Whilst other nations are laboring to throw off the shackles imposed on them by a barbarian church, the priesthood in America, on every opportune occasion, is trying to unite church and state. These little attempts like that at Denver, are proof of their evil intention.

Good for France.

On the twenty-five franc coin of France, there was milled on the edge, "God Preserve France." In consequence of the separation of church and state in that republic, an order on January 5, was issued, directing all coins so inscribed to be returned to the treasury; that these words be omitted from all new coin, and in their place shall be substituted "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

The justice of this act, in a nonsectarian government, must be obvious to all. With France coming to the front as a secular government how ridiculous our own coin appears with, "In God We Trust," an inscription placed on American coin during the war of the rebellion. Salmon P. Chase, as Secretary of the Treasury, was alone responsible for this unwise act.

On a bas relief of an English coin in our possession, circling the head of the late British Queen, are the words, "Victoria Dei Gratia Regina," the Latin for Victoria by the Grace of God Queen. It was a copying after royalty that both France and the United States were induced to place God on their coin. It should be eliminated from all governments established by the people.

The Remedy.

The churches are conscious, as is the outside world, that orthodox Christianity is in a terrible decline. Every movement of theirs is proof of the fact. The great schools of learning are discarding their olden creeds, and are teaching science, where they formerly taught theology. And those showing the greatest advancement in teaching the great truths of Nature, in place of the speculations of ecclesiastics, are the best sustained. We often meet with clerical notices in the public press of which the following is a fair sample:

"The undersigned ministers and members of the various Christian denominations, greatly deploring the present signs of the times, with its increase of crime, the rapid advances of skepticism, and the spiritual dearth in our churches, therefore we recommend a special season of prayer to Almighty God, asking him for the outpouring of his holy spirit on the country, to the end that sinners may flee his wrath, and for the upbuilding of his church; and that Sunday, January —, be specially devoted to such service."

Why don't our brothers strike at the root of the evil? They teach that the Devil is responsible for the sins of the world. Why not ask God to kill the old monster? Induce him to crush his enemy—his Satanic majesty, then all their troubles will end. Set apart one day, and concentrate all the energies of the pious in this one direction, then let us hope victory will crown their efforts. The Progressive Thinker will gladly announce their success, and give them full credit.

Pulpit Sensationalism Denounced.

Another Episcopal Bishop has put himself on record as opposing pulpit methods. This time it is Bishop Fawcett, of Quincy, Ill., who has given a black eye to the practices of the late Rev. Sam Jones, Rev. Billy Sunday, and others of their ilk. In the course of a sermon before the Episcopal Synod, at Springfield, Ill., on the 9th instant, the Bishop expressed himself with much warmth against pulpit sensationalism, and declared the actors were "novelty preachers." He likened them to circus clowns with caps and bells. Quoting him: "It is not lectures on bugs, boulders and sensationalism that helps the world, but we need practical sermons on hope, faith, charity and immortality."

Spiritualists everywhere will echo such sentiments. More truth and less fiction is the demand of a scientific age.

A well governed mind learns in time to find pleasure in nothing but the truth and the just.—Anon.

PASSED TO THE REALM OF SOULS.

The Eminent Lecturer and Author, Rev. Moses Hull, Passed to Spirit Life at San Jose, Cal.

The San Jose Mercury of Jan. 13, has the following in reference to his death:

Moses Hull, who has been delivering a series of lectures at Hale's Hall, passed away at 10 o'clock Friday evening. He was stricken with paralysis Wednesday morning and the stroke resulted in death Friday. The funeral will be held from the San Jose undertaking parlors Monday at 2:30 p. m.

Moses Hull was born in Wairo, Delaware county, Ohio, January 16, 1836. He was heard to say many times, he could not remember when he did not expect to be a minister. When but a child he joined the church and entered into its work with the interest of older people. At the age of 17 he commenced work as an exhorter in the Methodist church. He worked in this capacity, as a licensed exhorter, for several years. He later became an Adventist and his connection with the Methodist church was severed.

He preached Adventism twelve years, and became, in the meantime, one of the most popular preachers and writers on Adventism in the country. Mr. Hull was a growing man. He was a student, and especially along the theological lines he made remarkable research. Naturally he evolved from the doctrines of a physical resurrection and, after having parted with some of his best beloved on earth, went into an earnest investigation of Spiritualism. Unbounded evidence was given to him, proving to him beyond a doubt that death did not end all. He was bitterly attacked by the Adventist church, but was so strongly fortified in his own conclusions that he remained impregnable to every attack.

Mr. Hull has labored in the field of Spiritualism upwards of forty years. He has met many of the brightest, most scholarly men of nearly every denomination in the realm of debate. Probably no author on Spiritualism has contributed so largely to the literature of Spiritualism as Moses Hull. He has written upwards of thirty volumes, treating mostly on Biblical Exegetics. Among the more recent works are "The Encyclopedia of Biblical Spiritualism," "Our Bible. Who Wrote It, When, How and Where?" These books contain not less than 500 pages each. Many smaller books, equally interesting, have come from his pen. Probably the crowning work of his life was in connection with the Morris Pratt School, Whitewater, Wis., of which he was one of the founders.

Mr. Hull was accompanied to this city by his wife, Mattie E. Hull. She is an author and lecturer. They have worked jointly in behalf of Spiritualism for more than a third of a century. Their special mission to this coast was to acquaint the people with the work of the Morris Pratt School and to interest those of like faith in its behalf.

Letter From Mrs. Mattie E. Hull.

To the Editor:—You will receive a marked copy of the Sunday Morning Mercury, containing the announcement of our beloved Moses passing to spirit life. He was attacked last week—Wednesday—with hemorrhage of the brain, and within a few hours the second one followed. We had the best counsel in the state, nothing could save him.

Thus in "The Wanderings of the Hull Pilgrims" there has come a "parting of the ways."

Mr. Hull had been in fine health since we reached the coast. Every week brought us encouraging reports from the Morris Pratt School. He had been in the best of courage, and never did a grander work. He has fallen by the wayside; dropped in the harness, true and loyal to the cause he loved.

His "wanderings" henceforth will not be known by the visible eye. He may not be able to communicate all his experiences, but his work will go on just the same.

My present plans are to remain here, to fill the engagement as had been arranged. I shall not return East until near spring, and I hope I may be busy on the coast.

I feel more than ever the nearness of the Spiritual world and would say from my soul, Spiritualism is the only sustaining influence in a time like this. After a while I will try and write something relative to the wanderings of the one left to face the world from a material side.

MATTIE E. HULL.

Just as We Suspected.

Camille Flammarion, the French astronomer who was reported a few weeks ago as having abandoned his belief in Spiritualism, in a late letter to his Boston publisher, wrote: "There is not one word of truth in the story." The lie was off the same web with the one which represented Thomas Paine as renouncing his belief on his death-bed; that Washington was a churchman; that President Lincoln became a Methodist before he died; that Robert G. Ingersoll repudiated his hell-kicking proclivities on his "death-bed," a thing he never occupied, dying in his chair. All these men are in hell, if orthodox teaching is true; and they have as companions the learned and the honest thinkers of all the ages.

There would be more happiness in the world if we would rejoice more with others instead of feigning sympathy with their sorrows.—Max Bewer.

"The Great Work."

Lyman C. Howe, the Veteran Lecturer in the Ranks of Spiritualism, and a profound Thinker along Spiritual and Occult lines, will Review Chapter by Chapter that Book designated as The Great Work, thus affording a rare treat to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and furnishing information to them that will be worth ten times the price of a year's subscription to the paper. Every Spiritualist not taking the paper now should subscribe for it at once. Our present subscribers should call their neighbors' attention to The Progressive Thinker, and induce them to subscribe for it, and thus swell the Tidal Wave of Success on which it now rests.

"THE GREAT WORK."

The Editor of The Progressive Thinker invites me to review chapter by chapter this latest production from the Indo-American Publishing House, and I have the temerity to undertake it. At the outset let it be understood that truth is my aim. I am a Spiritualist without an adjective. We are told that "Spiritualism is no finality." Narrowly interpreted, as it generally is, progressive thinkers will agree with this statement; but from the first it has been to me the one all-inclusive science of life, and religion of Nature. Nothing can be evolved that is not in agreement with it. In its phenomena this door is ever ajar for new and startling revelations. In its philosophy all facts, and their meanings, are included. Though a million graded worlds, appealing to the outlying perceptions of yet latent senses, should be brought within the limits of human consciousness, the scope of Spiritualism would cover them all. If I should be convinced of the absolute truthfulness and scientific accuracy of every claim set up by the author and the "Great School," it would not jar the foundations of the science of life that has been my light for over fifty years.

To bigoted, sectarian Spiritualists, my review may be disappointing; for I do not propose to conjure up objections that I do not think are justified by facts and reason. In my discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime," I found enough to challenge opposition, and I had not approached the most important and vulnerable points, when my fair correspondent suddenly left me, after launching her most vigorous arraignment; and it is quite likely that many readers were surprised, and puzzled, because I made no answer. But the editor had decided that it had run long enough; and "the way to stop it was to STOP IT." In this "Great Work" the author frequently refers to "The Great Psychological Crime," and the volume of the Harmonic Series that preceded it, which I have never seen. In this introductory letter it is due to the author of "The Great Work" to say that I have a pleasing conviction of his thorough sincerity and upright purposes in all he writes. I have never met, and do not know his name; but a picture comes before me of a man past middle age, of average stature, semi-blonde temperament, even features, rather broad forehead, a mild blue, or bluish-gray eye, a serene expression, gentle voice, somewhat musical, and a trustful glow of humanitarian sympathy beaming from his quiet countenance.

But, pleasant and helpful, as it is to believe in the truthfulness of an author, it does not carry with it the necessary conclusion that all he says is true. When facts and reason are against him, or any part of his writings, we must infer that he has mistaken his data, or misapplied them, or else we have to review our premises, and either re-establish the supposed facts, or discover the mistakes that led us to wrong conclusions. For instance; in my discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime," I presented numerous facts that seemed to utterly discredit the statement of the author that in every case mediumship, and hypnotism progressively demoralize the nervous organism, and paralyze the brain. In her last letter, Mrs. Huntley brushed them all aside with the assumption that the testimony of my witnesses—of whom I am one—had "no scientific value." If facts have no scientific value, what else has? Science that has no use for facts is not authority for me. Most of the evidence that I presented was as thoroughly conclusive, as anything found in the dissecting room, or the chemical laboratory; and this bare assumption was the only answer, or explanation offered against them. The book before me deals with different sections, but is in complete line with the preceding book, and I find much that thrills with the delight of a palpable revelation.

After a cursory, and incomplete reading of this book I realize that any approximately thorough review of it will require liberal verbatim quotations. I would suggest to all readers who may honor me with their attention, that the book is worth careful reading; and, whatever they may think of the value of my writing, the quotations that I shall use will be found interesting and suggestive. At the outset I will quote a whole chapter. Like the texts which clergymen select from the Bible, it may serve as a nucleus for the evolution of a vigorous discourse, which an hour's thinking will not exhaust. Here it is:

CHAPTER I.—EVOLUTION IN OPERATION.

1. Nature evolves a man.

2. Man, co-operating with Nature, evolves a Master.

3. The Master Man, co-operating with, and controlling the forces, activities and processes of Nature evolves a ——?

The second chapter deals with the "Classification of Data," and is not so easily quoted. I will, therefore, leave this first chapter to make its own appeal, without incumbering it with any commentary. LYMAN C. HOWE.

AN ABSOLUTE GIFT TO ALL.

Already about 1,500 copies of THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS have been GIVEN AWAY, and still the orders for it are flowing to this office in one STEADY STREAM. We would like to give away ONE MILLION COPIES. This book contains FIFTEEN illustrations, and constitutes the MISSING LINK in the history of one of the most remarkable mediums that ever lived. Every minister of the gospel; every theologian; every church member; every free thinker, and every Spiritualist should have this book, for as a matter of history it is ESPECIALLY IMPORTANT for future reference; and as it is sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay postage, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year, we expect to distribute a vast number—in fact we would like to send out ONE MILLION COPIES. The Regan Printing House is now busily at work in turning out another edition, and we expect to be able to supply all demands.

Not to Go to California.

The next convention of the N. S. A. was voted to be held in California—a very unwise thing to do. Now the Californians have concluded to relinquish their right thereto, and the next convention will probably be held in Washington, D. C.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Gelett Burgess.

Facts Worth Remembering.

The first piece of printing with movable type bearing date, was an Indulgence exempting the holder from punishment for crime. It was issued by Nicholas V, Nov. 15, 1454, the object to raise money to aid in resisting the invasion of Europe by the Turks. A copy is in the Hague Museum. Seven editions of these Christian documents, a full pardon in advance of wrong doing, were issued in 1454 and 1455.

It has been stated by a learned scholar who gave special attention to this historical subject, that the so-called Crusades, claimed to have been waged to rescue the holy sepulchre from the Saracens, were only attempts to beat back the Turks who were attempting to invade and overrun Europe. The Encyclopedia Britannica, article Turkey, Vol. 23, p. 643, says of this invasion and resistance:

"The conflict was long and bloody, and resulted in the total defeat of the Christians."

Constantinople fell into the hands of the Turks in May of 1453.

Christian monks wrote the original history of the Crusades, and later writers have drawn upon those sources for all we know of that pretended event. Sometime there will be a terrible overhauling of that history. New causes for events, with new dates, will be discovered which will astonish all christendom. And the Crusades, with the new lights to be reflected on them, will be a different story from what even the learned have supposed. As no trust can be placed in any statement coming from a Jesuit, so the parents of those Jesuits, the cowled and hypocritical monks, cannot be trusted.

Still They Are Coming!

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30. as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

Mrs. Rose L. Bushnell DonnElly writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "Please put my name down for a set of Andrew Jackson Davis's works. I once owned a few of his books, but I cannot find any one of them now in my collection. Any time that you would like ten dollars on the twenty, inform me, and I will remit."

Mrs. Geo. McNelley writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "I would like to be a subscriber to a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis's works at $20 per set. So put me down as one, and am only too glad to get an opportunity."

Martha E. McCarty writes from Boise City, Idaho: "I wish to subscribe for a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis's books, when published. The $20 will be ready when called for."

DON'T MISS IT.

Don't miss the opportunity to read what LYMAN C. HOWE has to say of THE GREAT WORK, a book lately ushered into the world of literature by the Indo-American Publishing House, and which has created a NEW VIBRATION all along the line. The Progressive Thinker is now admitted by prominent Spiritualists everywhere to be the CENTRAL MAGNET in our great Cause, and those who do not read it, cannot keep well posted in passing events in our ranks.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

PLEASE UNDERSTAND.

Every order for "THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF CHRIST" must be accompanied with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and it WILL NOT be sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT on any other terms. If you only send ten cents in stamps without the order for the paper, the same will be applied to your subscription. Remember the conditions.

All absolute gifts are generally accompanied with certain conditions. When Mr. Meyer of Washington, the noble philanthropist, gave $20,000 at different times to Spiritualists, he wisely DEMANDED they should do something in return for it, and they did. So when we give a VALUABLE BOOK to you, we also demand a slight return therefor; that is, that you send 10 cents in stamps to pay the postage on The Unknown Life of Christ, and also send one dollar for The Progressive Thinker one year. The book is an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who comply with the conditions. We are now sending out thousands of copies, showing conclusively that Spiritualists appreciate THE GIFT.

An Honest Question.

Would the cause of genuine Spiritualism be advanced by substituting the old-time flummery of the church, borrowed from Roman paganism, with its creed, "I believe," in place of knowledge, and in doing good for the love of it?

When speakers and writers are laboring to make Spiritualism an appendage of ecclesiasticism, and are thrusting its Bible on us as the inspired word of God, and converting its fictitious characters into mediums, and demons into obsessed spirits, it seems just that adverse criticism be allowed to do service, and show the ancient faiths are not worthy of acceptance in these wiser times.

COBWEBS.

What are the filmy cobwebs?
We find them all around,
Here and there and everywhere;
They are always to be found.
They worry us, they pester us,
No matter what our plane,
But, let them gather anywhere
But on the human brain.

We find them in the corners,
We find them in the hall,
We find them in the parlor,
And round the chimney tall,
And where we least expect them
We find them rough and plane,
But the greatest nuisance in the world,
Is cobwebs on the brain.

They bar out air and sunshine,
They mock us in our dreams,
They make life dull and listless,
And at times it almost seems
That the general circulation
Is impeded by the strain,
And what we oft call "chronic"
Is only—cobwebs on the brain.

Then clear away the cobwebs,
Let the light of truth shine in,
'Twill give you four-fold measure,
And make you strong within.
Let the soul rise to its level,
Nor stop for wind or rain,
But clear away the rubbish
And cobwebs on the brain.

And Still They Come.

Now right here at home, from the Chicago University Press, comes a book from the pen of Rev. Wm. C. Selleck, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Providence, R. I., entitled "The New Appreciation of the Bible," which perhaps leads all rivals in extreme and truthful utterances, though in some respects the author follows closely along the line of thought in the work entitled The Finality of the Christian Religion, by Prof. Geo. B. Foster, of the University of Chicago, which aroused great interest a few months ago. Rev. Selleck says:

"The Bible has been made to teach almost every conceivable doctrine, and to support many a terrible wickedness—slavery, polygamy and the subjection of women."

The learned writer says very correctly:

"The Bible should be considered merely as a piece of literature, as a collection of ancient writings—not a single book, but a library of 66 books. It contains history, philosophy, poetry of many kinds, fiction, love stories, a hymn book, collections of maxims for practical conduct, biographies, letters of spiritual counsel and friendly correspondence, and ecstatic visions of seers and dreamers. * * * The quality of utterances range from the childish notions of a primitive people just emerging from slavery, and from the moral pessimism of a satiated sensualist to the sublimest and most comprehensive thought." * * * The traditional view of the Bible, considered with reference to the present age, has been and is now an unfortunate view. It has cramped the human mind, allowed little room for progress to such an extent that nearly all progress has had to bear the stigma of heresy. It has begotten idolatry, and is made a fetich. It is full of inaccuracies historically and scientifically. Nearly anything can be proved by the Bible. The real authors of many of the books of the Old and New Testament are unknown, and Christ was not quoted until a generation after his death."

We have abridged slightly, but the language and the ideas are everywhere the author's. His positions are identical with The Progressive Thinker, and we are proud to find the ablest and the bravest scholars in the orthodox churches with us, as the great world of religious thought will be in another generation.

Departing Glory.

Three-fourths of a century ago Congregationalism was a power in the United States. Its distinguishing feature was that each particular church shall exercise ecclesiastical authority over its own body, without being subject to any bishop, synod, presbyter, or council. They held that there was no scriptural authority for prelates and higher officials. Their clergy were of their own number, and were ordained to the ministry by prayer and the laying on of hands, and were subject to expulsion by the church itself. Their creed seems to have had many features in common with Presbyterianism.

Free from outside restraint, what in other churches would be called heresy sprang up in the Congregational churches, and many of them were developed into Unitarians, still retaining their ancient name. This was not very uncommon in the New England states, where their numbers were largest, and if we are correctly informed some Congregational churches were transformed into Unitarians.

The consequence of all this freedom has led to disintegration, the members quietly sloughing off, many of them merging with Methodism.

Perhaps no one of the Protestant churches has suffered more from advanced thought than has the Congregational. It had hell as a sort of whip to scourge recalcitrants, but as that fabled place of torture has fallen into disrepute, and churchmen have grown more intelligent, few seek the ministry, so their churches are now begging for young men to enter their pulpits, with but little success.

A Novel Procedure.

The good people of Colorado elected Rev. Henry A. Buchtel, a Methodist clergyman, and Chancellor of the University of Denver, governor of that state, last fall. He was inaugurated, and entered on his official duties on the 8th instant. But note: instead of the ceremonies and oath of office being administered in the State House, where they properly belonged, they were transferred to the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, and his excellency occupied the pulpit when the oath was administered.

It was an olden custom to crown kings in church and anoint them with oil, thus making them Christians, for the Greek verb christos, from which came the word Christian, signifies "to anoint."

It has heretofore been understood that our state and national governments were secular, and in no way identified with any system of religion; but is not this affair at Denver an attempt to revive a practice unworthy of our Republican institutions?

There is a constant effort among churchmen, particularly with the clergy, to forget that our revolutionary ancestors wisely discarded all forms of religion in the founding of this government, and went so far as to not even recognize a God, either an orthodox or a heretical one, in its Constitution; and the nation has been favored as has no other in consequence.

Whilst other nations are laboring to throw off the shackles imposed on them by a barbarian church, the priesthood in America, on every opportune occasion, is trying to unite church and state. These little attempts like that at Denver, are proof of their evil intention.

Good for France.

On the twenty-five franc coin of France, there was milled on the edge, "God Preserve France." In consequence of the separation of church and state in that republic, an order on January 5, was issued, directing all coins so inscribed to be teturned to the treasury; that these words be omitted from all new coin, and in their place shall be substituted "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

The justice of this act, in a nonsectarian government, must be obvious to all. With France coming to the front as a secular government how ridiculous our own coin appears with, "In God We Trust," an inscription placed on American coin during the war of the rebellion. Salmon P. Chase, as Secretary of the Treasury, was alone responsible for this unwise act.

On a bas relief of an English coin in our possession, circling the head of the late British Queen, are the words, "Victoria Dei Gratia Regina," the Latin for Victoria by the Grace of God Queen. It was a copying after royalty that both France and the United States were induced to place God on their coin. It should be eliminated from all governments established by the people.

The Remedy.

The churches are conscious, as is the outside world, that orthodox Christianity is in a terrible decline. Every movement of theirs is proof of the fact. The great schools of learning are discarding their olden creeds, and are teaching science, where they formerly taught theology. And those showing the greatest advancement in teaching the great truths of Nature, in place of the speculations of ecclesiastics, are the best sustained. We often meet with clerical notices in the public press of which the following is a fair sample:

"The undersigned ministers and members of the various Christian denominations, greatly deploring the present signs of the times, with its increase of crime, the rapid advances of skepticism, and the spiritual dearth in our churches, therefore we recommend a special season of prayer to Almighty God, asking him for the outpouring of his holy spirit on the country, to the end that sinners may flee his wrath, and for the upbuilding of his church; and that Sunday, January —, be specially devoted to such service."

Why don't our brothers strike at the root of the evil? They teach that the Devil is responsible for the sins of the world. Why not ask God to kill the old monster? Induce him to crush his enemy—his Satanic majesty, then all their troubles will end. Set apart one day, and concentrate all the energies of the pious in this one direction, then let us hope victory will crown their efforts. The Progressive Thinker will gladly announce their success, and give them full credit.

Pulpit Sensationalism Denounced.

Another Episcopal Bishop has put himself on record as opposing pulpit methods. This time it is Bishop Fawcett, of Quincy, Ill., who has given a black eye to the practices of the late Rev. Sam Jones, Rev. Billy Sunday, and others of their ilk. In the course of a sermon before the Episcopal Synod, at Springfield, Ill., on the 9th instant, the Bishop expressed himself with much warmth against pulpit sensationalism, and declared the actors were "novelty preachers." He likened them to circus clowns with caps and bells. Quoting him: "It is not lectures on bugs, boulders and sensationalism that helps the world, but we need practical sermons on hope, faith, charity and immortality."

Spiritualists everywhere will echo such sentiments. More truth and less fiction is the demand of a scientific age.

A well governed mind learns in time to find pleasure in nothing but the truth and the just.—Anon.

PASSED TO THE REALM OF SOULS.

The Eminent Lecturer and Author, Rev. Moses Hull, Passed to Spirit Life at San Jose, Cal.

The San Jose Mercury of Jan. 13, has the following in reference to his death:

Moses Hull, who has been delivering a series of lectures at Hale's Hall, passed away at 10 o'clock Friday evening. He was stricken with paralysis Wednesday morning and the stroke resulted in death Friday. The funeral will be held from the San Jose undertaking parlors Monday at 2:30 p. m.

Moses Hull was born in Walro, Delaware county, Ohio, January 16, 1836. He was heard to say many times, he could not remember when he did not expect to be a minister. When but a child he joined the church and entered into its work with the interest of older people. At the age of 17 he commenced work as an exhorter in the Methodist church. He worked in this capacity, as a licensed exhorter, for several years. He later became an Adventist and his connection with the Methodist church was severed.

He preached Adventism twelve years, and became, in the meantime, one of the most popular preachers and writers on Adventism in the country. Mr. Hull was a growing man. He was a student, and especially along the theological lines he made remarkable research. Naturally he evolved from the doctrines of a physical resurrection and, after having parted with some of his best beloved on earth, went into an earnest investigation of Spiritualism. Unbounded evidence was given to him, proving to him beyond a doubt that death did not end all. He was bitterly attacked by the Adventist church, but was so strongly fortified in his own conclusions that he remained impregnable to every attack.

Mr. Hull has labored in the field of Spiritualism upwards of forty years. He has met many of the brightest, most scholarly men of nearly every denomination in the realm of debate. Probably no author on Spiritualism has contributed so largely to the literature of Spiritualism as Moses Hull. He has written upwards of thirty volumes, treating mostly on Bibilical Exegetics. Among the more recent works are "The Encyclopedia of Bibical Spiritualism," "Our Bible. Who Wrote It, When, How and Where?" These books contain not less than 500 pages each. Many smaller books, equally interesting, have come from his pen. Probably the crowning work of his life was in connection with the Morris Pratt School, Whitewater, Wis., of which he was one of the founders.

Mr. Hull was accompanied to this city by his wife, Mattie E. Hull. She is an author and lecturer. They have worked jointly in behalf of Spiritualism for more than a third of a century. Their special mission to this coast was to acquaint the people with the work of the Morris Pratt School and to interest those of like faith in its behalf.

Letter From Mrs. Mattie E. Hull.

To the Editor:—You will receive a marked copy of the Sunday Morning Mercury, containing the announcement of our beloved Moses passing to spirit life. He was attacked last week—Wednesday—with hemorrhage of the brain, and within a few hours the second one followed. We had the best counsel in the state, nothing could save him.

Thus in "The Wanderings of the Hull Pilgrims" there has come a "parting of the ways."

Mr. Hull had been in fine health since we reached the coast. Every week brought us encouraging reports from the Morris Pratt School. He had been in the best of courage, and never did a grander work. He has fallen by the wayside; dropped in the harness, true and loyal to the cause he loved.

His "wanderings" henceforth will not be known by the visible eye. He may not be able to communicate all his experiences, but his work will go on just the same.

My present plans are to remain here, to fill the engagement as had been arranged. I shall not return East until near spring, and I hope I may be busy on the coast.

I feel more than ever the nearness of the Spiritual world and would say from my soul, Spiritualism is the only sustaining influence in a time like this. After a while I will try and write something relative to the wanderings of the one left to face the world from a material side.

MATTIE E. HULL.

Just as We Suspected.

Camille Flammarion, the French astronomer who was reported a few weeks ago as having abandoned his belief in Spiritualism, in a late letter to his Boston publisher, wrote: "There is not one word of truth in the story." The lie was off the same web with the one which represented Thomas Paine as renouncing his belief on his death-bed; that Washington was a churchman; that President Lincoln became a Methodist before he died; that Robert G. Ingersoll repudiated his hell-kicking proclivities on his "death-bed," a thing he never occupied, dying in his chair. All these men are in hell, if orthodox teaching is true; and they have as companions the learned and the honest thinkers of all the ages.

There would be more happiness in the world if we would rejoice more with others instead of feigning sympathy with their sorrows.—Max Bewer.

"The Great Work."

Lyman C. Howe, the Veteran Lecturer in the Ranks of Spiritualism, and a profound Thinker along Spiritual and Occult lines, will Review Chapter by Chapter that Book designated as The Great Work, thus affording a rare treat to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, and furnishing information to them that will be worth ten times the price of a year's subscription to the paper. Every Spiritualist not taking the paper now should subscribe for it at once. Our present subscribers should call their neighbors' attention to The Progressive Thinker, and induce them to subscribe for it, and thus swell the Tidal Wave of Success on which it now rests.

"THE GREAT WORK."

The Editor of The Progressive Thinker invites me to review chapter by chapter this latest production from the Indo-American Publishing House; and I have the temerity to undertake it. At the outset let it be understood that truth is my aim. I am a Spiritualist without an adjective. We are told that "Spiritualism is no finality." Narrowly interpreted, as it generally is, progressive thinkers will agree with this statement; but from the first it has been to me the one all-inclusive science of life, and religion of Nature. Nothing can be evolved that is not in agreement with it. In its phenomena this door is ever ajar for new and startling revelations. In its philosophy all facts, and their meanings, are included. Though a million graded worlds, appealing to the outlying perceptions of yet latent senses, should be brought within the limits of human consciousness, the scope of Spiritualism would cover them all. If I should be convinced of the absolute truthfulness and scientific accuracy of every claim set up by the author and the "Great School," it would not jar the foundations of the science of life that has been my light for over fifty years.

To bigoted, sectarian Spiritualists, my review may be disappointing; for I do not propose to conjure up objections that I do not think are justified by facts and reason. In my discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime," I found enough to challenge opposition, and I had not approached the most important and vulnerable points, when my fair correspondent suddenly left me, after launching her most vigorous arraignment; and it is quite likely that many readers were surprised, and puzzled, because I made no answer. But the editor had decided that it had run long enough; and "the way to stop it was to STOP IT." In this "Great Work" the author frequently refers to "The Great Psychological Crime," and the volume of the Harmonic Series that preceded it, which I have never seen. In this introductory letter it is due to the author of "The Great Work" to say that I have a pleasing conviction of his thorough sincerity and upright purposes in all he writes. I have never met, and do not know his name; but a picture comes before me of a man past middle age, of average stature, semi-blonde temperament, even features, rather broad forehead, a mild blue, or bluish-gray eye, a serene expression, gentle voice, somewhat musical, and a trustful glow of humanitarian sympathy beaming from his quiet countenance.

But, pleasant and helpful, as it is to believe in the truthfulness of an author, it does not carry with it the necessary conclusion that all he says is true. When facts and reason are against him, or any part of his writings, we must infer that he has mistaken his data, or misapplied them, or else we have to review our premises, and either re-establish the supposed facts, or discover the mistakes that led us to wrong conclusions. For instance; in my discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime," I presented numerous facts that seemed to utterly discredit the statement of the author that in every case mediumship, and hypnotism progressively demoralize the nervous organism, and paralyze the brain. In her last letter, Mrs. Huntley brushed them all aside with the assumption that the testimony of my witnesses—of whom I am one—had "no scientific value." If facts have no scientific value, what else has? Science that has no use for facts is not authority for me. Most of the evidence that I presented was as thoroughly conclusive, as anything found in the dissecting room, or the chemical laboratory; and this bare assumption was the only answer, or explanation offered against them. The book before me deals with different sections, but is in complete line with the preceding book, and I find much that thrills with the delight of a palpable revelation.

After a cursory, and incomplete reading of this book I realize that any approximately thorough review of it will require liberal verbatim quotations. I would suggest to all readers who may honor me with their attention, that the book is worth careful reading; and, whatever they may think of the value of my writing, the quotations that I shall use will be found interesting and suggestive. At the outset I will quote a whole chapter. Like the texts which clergymen select from the Bible, it may serve as a nucleus for the evolution of a vigorous discourse, which an hour's thinking will not exhaust. Here it is:

CHAPTER I.—EVOLUTION IN OPERATION.

1. Nature evolves a man.

2. Man, co-operating with Nature, evolves a Master.

3. The Master Man, co-operating with, and controlling the forces, activities and processes of Nature evolves a ——?

The second chapter deals with the "Classification of Data," and is not so easily quoted. I will, therefore, leave this first chapter to make its own appeal, without incumbering it with any commentary LYMAN C. HOWE.

AN ABSOLUTE GIFT TO ALL.

Already about 1,500 copies of THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF JESUS have been GIVEN AWAY, and still the orders for it are flowing to this office in one STEADY STREAM. We would like to give away ONE MILLION COPIES. This book contains FIFTEEN illustrations, and constitutes the MISSING LINK in the history of one of the most remarkable mediums that ever lived. Every minister of the gospel; every theologian; every church member; every free thinker, and every Spiritualist should have this book, for as a matter of history it is ESPECIALLY IMPORTANT for future reference, and as it is sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who send TEN CENTS in stamps to pay postage, and ONE DOLLAR for The Progressive Thinker one year, we expect to distribute a vast number—in fact we would like to send out ONE MILLION COPIES. The Regan Printing House is now busily at work in turning out another edition, and we expect to be able to supply all demands.

Not to Go to California.

The next convention of the N. S. A. was voted to be held in California—a very unwise thing to do. Now the Californians have concluded to relinquish their right thereto, and the next convention will probably be held in Washington, D. C.

There is work that is work and there is play that is play; there is play that is work and work that is play. And in only one of these lies happiness.—Gelett Burgess.

Facts Worth Remembering.

The first piece of printing with movable type bearing date, was an Indulgence exempting the holder from punishment for crime. It was issued by Nicholas V, Nov. 15, 1454, the object to raise money to aid in resisting the invasion of Europe by the Turks. A copy is in the Hague Museum. Seven editions of these Christian documents, a full pardon in advance of wrong doing, were issued in 1454 and 1455.

It has been stated by a learned scholar who gave special attention to this historical subject, that the so-called Crusades, claimed to have been waged to rescue the holy sepulchre from the Saracens, were only attempts to beat back the Turks who were attempting to invade and overrun Europe. The Encyclopedia Britannica, article Turkey, Vol. 23, p. 648, says of this invasion and resistance:

"The conflict was long and bloody, and resulted in the total defeat of the Christians."

Constantinople fell into the hands of the Turks in May of 1453.

Christian monks wrote the original history of the Crusades, and later writers have drawn upon those sources for all we know of that pretended event. Sometime there will be a terrible overhauling of that history. New causes for events, with new dates, will be discovered which will astonish all christendom. And the Crusades, with the new lights to be reflected on them, will be a different story from what even the learned have supposed. As no trust can be placed in any statement coming from a Jesuit, so the parents of those Jesuits, the cowled and hypocritical monks, cannot be trusted.

Still They Are Coming!

A letter from Dr. Davis indicates that a change has been made in the price of a full set of his remarkable works. They will be furnished per set when republished at $20 instead of $30, as heretofore announced. There are thousands who ought to have a set of these books. Their publication at an early day depends on the number of subscribers that can be secured. His books are a fundamental part of Spiritualism; the history of Spiritualism can not be written without them.

Since last week, the following subscribers to a full set of the Doctor's works have come to hand:

Mrs. Rose L. Bushnell DonnElly writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "Please put my name down for a set of Andrew Jackson Davis's works. I once owned a few of his books, but I cannot find any one of them now in my collection. Any time that you would like ten dollars on the twenty, inform me, and I will remit."

Mrs. Geo. McNelley writes from Cleveland, Ohio: "I would like to be a subscriber to a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis's works at $20 per set. So put me down as one, and am only too glad to get an opportunity."

Martha E. McCarty writes from Boise City, Idaho: "I wish to subscribe for a full set of Andrew Jackson Davis's books, when published. The $20 will be ready when called for."

DON'T MISS IT.

Don't miss the opportunity to read what LYMAN C. HOWE has to say of THE GREAT WORK, a book lately ushered into the world of literature by the Indo-American Publishing House, and which has created a NEW VIBRATION all along the line. The Progressive Thinker is now admitted by prominent Spiritualists everywhere to be the CENTRAL MAGNET in our great Cause, and those who do not read it, cannot keep well posted in passing events in our ranks.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. A., I am desirous of obtaining all press notices for or against Spiritualism, and reliable information with regard to attacks upon our movement that may be made by preachers. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

PLEASE UNDERSTAND.

Every order for "THE UNKNOWN LIFE OF CHRIST" must be accompanied with a yearly subscription to The Progressive Thinker, and it WILL NOT be sent out as an ABSOLUTE GIFT on any other terms. If you only send ten cents in stamps without the order for the paper, the same will be applied to your subscription. Remember the conditions.

All absolute gifts are generally accompanied with certain conditions. When Mr. Meyer of Washington, the noble philanthropist, gave $20,000 at different times to Spiritualists, he wisely DEMANDED they should do something in return for it, and they did. So when we give a VALUABLE BOOK to you, we also demand a slight return therefor; that is, that you send 10 cents in stamps to pay the postage on The Unknown Life of Christ, and also send one dollar for The Progressive Thinker one year. The book is an ABSOLUTE GIFT to all who comply with the conditions. We are now sending out thousands of copies, showing conclusively that Spiritualists appreciate THE GIFT.

An Honest Question.

Would the cause of genuine Spiritualism be advanced by substituting the old-time flummery of the church, borrowed from Roman paganism, with its creed, "I believe," in place of knowledge, and in doing good for the love of it?

When speakers and writers are laboring to make Spiritualism an appendage of ecclesiasticism, and are thrusting its Bible on us as the inspired word of God, and converting its fictitious characters into mediums, and demons into obsessed spirits, it seems just that adverse criticism be allowed to do service, and show the ancient faiths are not worthy of acceptance in these wiser times.

COBWEBS.

What are the filmy cobwebs?
We find them all around,
Here and there and everywhere;
They are always to be found.
They worry us, they pester us,
No matter what our plane,
But, let them gather anywhere
But on the human brain.

We find them in the corners,
We find them in the hall,
We find them in the parlor,
And round the chimney tall,
And where we least expect them
We find them rough and plane,
But the greatest nuisance in the world,
Is cobwebs on the brain.

They bar out air and sunshine,
They mock us in our dreams,
They make life dull and listless,
And at times it almost seems
That the general circulation
Is impeded by the strain,
And what we oft call "chronic"
Is only—cobwebs on the brain.

Then clear away the cobwebs,
Let the light of truth shine in,
'Twill give you four-fold measure,
And make you strong within.
Let the soul rise to its level,
Nor stop for wind or rain,
But clear away the rubbish
And cobwebs on the brain.

The Dangers of Psychism.
A Lecture by Miss Elizabeth Harlow.

It is refreshing to every inquiring mind to read the different views in reference to Occult or Spiritualistic matters, especially so when they relate to The Dangers of Psychism. Col. Olcott is a man of large and varied experience, and his invstigations in India as well as this country, have caused him to cast his destiny with the Theosophists. Miss Elizabeth Harlow, however, is far more sensitive to the higher spirit influences than the Colonel, and in consequence her lecture will be read with additional interest, satisfaction and profit.

The thought that has been ascribed to us is one of great value, especially at this period of the development of the mind of man. There has come a cry in your midst that there is great danger in the development of the soul qualities and activities, for psychism but means the ability to sense through the soul, functioning direct, soul-sensing of soul-life, independent of the lower activities of nature known as the physical structure of man.

WE HAVE LEARNED ere this that there are dangers in every department of life. It makes no difference in what department, we take ourselves, we find that there are dangers, in so far as we are not fully acquainted with and master of the situation. It has been and is still the same old whip-lash, danger, to keep the race under the power that now is; to hold man within the precincts that now are. Thus we would say unto you, come out from under the whip-lash of fear in any manner, and come to know yourselves. Robert Ingersoll once said that fear was the DUNGEON OF THE SOUL, and no truer saying was ever uttered. So long as man dwells in fear, so long is he submerging the great vital forces that are his, and his for use. Man is a great primity, and is here in this sphere of life to become somewhat acquainted with these departments of his being and come to know something of their great uses, not only to himself but to his associates.

Man as a physical being is simply an automatic machine governed and controlled by the great eternal and inevitable "must." You may call it fate. You may call it God. You may call it energy. You may call it what you please, but it simply is summed up in that little word "must." The great automatic man must obey the laws that be and are and of him.

We find that man the thinker, the next great step and department, the mind-man, becomes something of a master. He becomes something of a director. He becomes something of a teacher. He comes into possessions that cannot be taken from him. Thus we find that in this realm there is a light, a hope, a satisfaction that in the lower realm of our beings does not exist. In the realm of the intellect, in the realm of understanding, in the realm of knowledge we are not fated but by becoming the masters of our own fate.

And still we find there is another department of this wonderful creature man, and it is that great inner precinct; it is that eternal altar through which the fires of life burn for eternity. That is the great soul man; that is the poise of the eternal entity that shall survive and master and still stand in the supremacy of all that is, that shall touch or border upon the lines of his being.

MAN THE SOUL IS A GOD. Man the soul is master of himself, is an Intellectual God, if you please; and man the great intellectual soul-god is king of all conditions, of all relations, and therefore is at peace and there is no danger. But ere he gains this, starting as he does in the great automatic realm of things he climbs the ladder slowly, step by step up the ladder of experience and through the gateway of pain does he come to know of these departments and their summing up.

And we find that it is only in the psychic realm, if you please, that man has ever caught sight of the next great step to be taken in his existence, in his living, acting associations that now are his. There is not a single instance of a progressive move that has not been touched and associated with psychic revelation and psychic experience. There is not a single religious cult in existence that history can bring forward that is not the sum of some mighty mediumistic qualification and experience gained thereby.

RIGHT HERE, MY FRIENDS, we wish to call your attention to the fact that there is a difference between mediumship and psychic development. This has been one of the confusions amongst the minds and acts of men to-day. Mediumship simply means to be an instrument in the hands of other intelligences. An individual who has mediumistic qualities must make up his mind to a greater or less extent to be a machine, and he can be nothing less. But you can have your choice, if you so demand, and assert yourselves, as to what extent and in what degree that shall occur and shall continue to occur.

Mediumship as you know it and as it has forever expressed itself, is where three individuals meet; one the questioner, one the interpreter and one the sender. The medium is the one that sits between, and is used as an interpreter. Thus you find that mediumship becomes the machinery between the two circles of acting life that has welded and brought together humanity in an understanding of the continuities of life. This came to you unsought and unlooked for. Why history has records along the lines of its happenings and of its workings showing that it is no especial law, that it is no new revelation; that it is nothing that is peculiar to this generation, but is a law of nature; that there is born now and then a generation of men that have within them this qualification by which they can be used as machines between the two spheres of existence.

Now these machines have been used in all times for the betterment of mankind. And you will find that those who can be used must have been taken spontaneously, for here we find again the law of the spirit works spontaneously.

YOU DO NOT FIND the spirit world or the realm of nature working according to text-books or according to square rules laid down by man, but she works and they work in a spontaneous manner which simply means that when the relationship and conditions associated with these relations are right, then the result follows. And so we find that the greatest mediums of the world have been mediums who have been sought out by the spirit realm; that have been taken, so to speak, in spite of themselves, and have been used for good.

You do not find among a spontaneous class any great dangers occurring, nor no records of any that have occurred. Your oldest mediums in Modern Spiritualism, the most efficient mediums in Modern Spiritualism who have stood before the final test of intellect, of prejudice, of dogmas and of scientific analysis have been of this class, and they have proven worthy, thus showing that the intelligences that sought them out were of a high order. Those who used them were of a high moral character. Those who sought to awaken humanity were seeking for the good and the progress of the mortal spheres, and they have accomplished it, for since the advent of Modern Spiritualism the whole moral tenor of the world has been changed; the entire intellectual grasp has been tightened; the entire moral sway of consciousness has been intensified until to-day all life is taking on an intensity in its hopes, in its ideals and its aspirations that has not been recorded before. When we turn to the past we find there have been individuals, there have been classes; but to-day we find it is not one individual, it is not a few individuals, it is not one class, it is not one nation, but old Mother Earth is stirred with the throbs of light, with a hope and aspiration that has never touched upon the entirety of man as it does to-day, thus proving to you that mediumship is of service, is of divine service, and hath within the power to lift instead of degrade.

NOW WHERE OUR DANGERS COME; it is here: Because you do not understand the difference between mediumship and psychic development. The thought has been set forth by many that every individual was a medium. This is a mistaken position and proposition. Every individual is no more a medium than every individual is a musician. Neither is every individual capable of developing high artistic qualities of sculpture or painting. But there are those here and there that are born with peculiar organizations, that peculiar chemical combination and nervous tension that produce about them a peculiar aura that the spirit world can use in a diversity of ways and manners. This has been used and is being used and brings to you the variety of phenomenal results that have proven to the world that man lives and lives in somewhat finer relations on the other side of the doorway known as death.

YOU HAVE AS WELL what you term mental mediumship. This calls for a peculiar brain formation, a peculiar brain quality and tension. And from this realm has come to you the great teachings of its philosophy; has come to you as well its great systems and revelations that have brought to the world the new thought of life, the new adjustment of life in every condition and relation. It is mental mediumship that has established the great philosophy of life from its natural basis. You have no books previous to Andrew Jackson Davis' Divine Revelations that gave you a philosophy of life from a natural basis that had a determined fact in them.

From that time on there has grown the different philosophies that have been and are being taught under the different names, which are many; but you will find the grain of truth that every one possesses came from mental mediumship. Now you have had only one Davis; you have had only one Ingersoll; you have had only one Hudson Tuttle; you have had only one William Cullen Bryant. And thus we find that these cases are few and far between. But out of it has been developed a power of such strength that it has taken you fifty or more years to gather even the fragments of the truth that are therein contained.

THUS WE FIND that mediumship is something born within the individual; it is not something made, not some development of the senses, and not every individual can develop mediumship. But we find on the other hand that every human being is a soul entity. Every human being has an intellectual capacity. Every human being has a physical dress or house in which he lives. Thus every human being can develop something of his psychic self, his soul sense. Now this is not mediumship. Through the development of your psychic self you may display wonderful results and give proof of many departments of life and of many activities that have never been displayed before, and yet give no proof of the great fact of immortality. Here is where the confusion has come. Men have thought that in the development of the psychic self they were developing mediumship and have presented it as such, and the world has tested it in many directions to gather the proofs of immortality and have failed; then have they questioned, and questioned you seriously and legitimately.

NOW TO BE ABLE to psychometrize, which is a line of procedure of the soul's consciousness, is not mediumship. Now you who may possess these qualities, I beseech you to not be disturbed, but to learn the truth that you may protect yourselves. Psychometry allows you to enter into the subtle life of things about you. It will reveal the good, bad and indifferent, and thus become a great protector to you and those whom you may use it for.

You may become naturally clairvoyant or experimentally clairvoyant. There are two phases or two degrees of this development. Experimental clairvoyance is where some individual from the spirit realm draws near and projects upon the optic nerve that power that enlarges your vision, raises it until you can see into the vibratory relations of life just out there. You can only do it when some spirit does this, and thus you only see now and then, or when the spirit draws near and performs this experiment with you. There is though, now and then, an individual born with the high natural tension of the optic nerve so that they can see into that realm of life without the assistance of a spirit from the other side; this is natural clairvoyance, but this is only with a few.

NOW YOU HAVE COME to this altar of psychic life in all the glee and merriment and anticipation of children. You have seen that out of it has come much good; that mediumship has brought the world happiness; it has brought to the world some glory. It has placed in high places some of those who, according to the measurements of so-called society and culture, would have never gained them. Thus it has touched the vanity or egotism of the dawning age in which you live, and you have aspired to reach these heights. To desire to stand up and be heard, to go out and be lauded, has been due to that great motive power that has been behind this, perhaps unconsciously to some of you and consciously to others. You have placed yourselves in a negative position whereby there is not only the law of the spirit realm operating, but there is as well all the psychic waves of mental states and magnetic auras of this life playing in upon you, and you have become as a great sponge in that negative position of yours that absorbs these states, and then later you experience the variety of results that come, some in mental hysteria—for we have such—some in self-psychologized position and conditions; others where there is a low stage of intelligences from the first spheres, which have gradually attached themselves to you, not for good, not for intelligence and not for progress. Thus has come about a great variety of disturbed conditions and experiences; but as these things have occurred—and these things can and do occur, we would say that the development of the psychic self is dangerous. As we come to study what the development of the psychic self really is we find this out.

NOW AS WE SAY, man as a physical being in the automatic realm is fated. He is buffeted by circumstances. He is bound by environment; and thus he is nothing but simply a machine in this realm. But when man begins to think he begins to be something of a master. And you will find in history there was a period when a great cry was put up to try to keep man from thinking, because the world did not wish—the world of power, I mean, the world of systems, the world of pulse did not wish men as a whole to become thinkers.

Thus you have the records of the dark ages in which all those who did were put to death in some manner, and all literature was burned or kept for the exclusive few. In spite of all these efforts the great thought life of man would and did develop, in spite of cults, in spite of opinions, in spite of desires; and so at last there came gradually one thinker and another thinker and still another, until the life of the intellectual man was born, but as it was being born there were many persecutions. Some were burned at the stake, some were beheaded. You might as well have said in that day—and it was said—to develop the intellectual man was dangerous. When man begins to think, you cannot lead him, you cannot control him, you cannot submerge him; he becomes master in a great degree and gradually grows to be more and more so.

Thus we find that to become free thinkers, even as free as you are to-day, has cost much of suffering in the past, and there have been those who have thought along foolish lines who have made the best use of the intellect they did have, who have brought about systematically many things that are detrimental to progress. And would you to-night say, because those things were, that it was dangerous and should never have been developed—freedom of thought—the Darwins? Nay, you turn with pride to Benjamin Franklin and others. America has been and is a burning reason of the great power of the intellectual freedom of the human race. There is no nation that has given so much to the world in so short a period as has America; take it in any department you please, and she has outstripped them all in the same period of time, and it is because the mind of man has been set free and he has been given the liberties of his intellectual activities.

And while some men's thoughts led them to prison, other men's thoughts lead humanity along the lines of progress, love and justice. Thus we find that the good overrules the so-called bad. Thus we find that freedom and development of any of the qualities of man have been the levers upon which humanity has been lifted from the animal plane toward the human, and will yet move on toward the soul man that is to live, to act and to be an expression upon this plane of life.

THEN WE FIND that to touch the great psychic realm is now the period that is ours. You are not satisfied then to be intellectual giants; you are not satisfied to be masters of physical things and to possess the world. You wish to know its uses and its associations. You have come to know that man must develop the soul and the soul-qualities even more and more. You were not satisfied with the old systems of mail transportation; you have wrestled in thought until you have to-day wireless telegraphy. Thus we find that now you are wondering, you are experimenting, you are searching out the great system of thought transference—one of the psychic developments, the consciousness of thought striking your etheric self and conveying to the psychic consciousness the thought of others. Thought transference brings to us with rapidity that which the old way could not bring to us, and thus we are not satisfied with the slow methods of the past, but must have the keener and better that we know can and do exist.

We find that as man comes to know of the power of his thought not only for communication, that he is finding the power of his thought in healing ways. Thus you have today mental healing. We find that man has found that out of his thoughts he can build, and so you are being taught that thoughts are things, which is another error, misnomer. Thoughts are not things; but thoughts are potencies out of which and from which things later come. Thus we are finding the great, subtle power of thoughts through the development of the soul consciousness and the use of them. We find as well that man can be protected as he comes to know of things from this department and this view point of life. Knowing that he himself is a soul, is a psychic development, to become self-conscious of your own soul life is one of the great developments of the day and age and is a psychic development.

No one will claim that it is dangerous for man to know the eternity of their existence or their soul potency. We find as well that we are not obliged to depend on the slow methods of nerve transportation in our acquaintance with man, for as we allow the intuitive, the concealed soul consciousness to breathe out in systematic order through our entire being we are coming to feel, not to fear in the old way. We are coming to know the world from a higher standpoint, and thus we are coming to know motives.

NOW WHEN THE PSYCHIC SELF is being developed, that leads especially into the lines of psychometry. You can read the life of an individual and from the psychometric side you can read the motive side of life, not the resultant side, you read the motive side. Often our motives are clean, but the result in outward expression is not exactly the representation that we intend, for it comes through the color of environment and sense interpretation. Thus it is a great protection. It has lifted up to a standpoint of association and recognition that before was not known. And yet in this realm there are those that would try to buy and sell these things which are given to men and women of high purpose and high motive. But yet, I ask you, has not the world been lifted higher, and is it not better for having developed these qualities somewhat, than it was without them? And I feel that you will answer back that it has most assuredly been made better instead of worse.

Thus we may say that in the development of the psychic self, while there are dangers, it is the next great step; it is the lever that will lift humanity out of the stage of so-called materialism, out of the cold realm of the purely intellectual and place it on a higher plane.

WHAT WE WISH TO KNOW and what we must come to know is the difference between the development of mediumistic qualities and of psychic qualities. Now a psychic may be somewhat mediumistic and a medium may have some psychic development, but it is not necessary in either way. And you will ask us how are we to know? You can know of these things by studying the results that come. When true mediumship is being displayed you will always find the earmarks of a third individual. Watch for individuality. We have been too well pleased with generalities. We have been too well pleased with simply a display of psychometric power, and so we have been confused and have thought one thing and another thing. When an individual has simply psychic power, you go to her and she reads your life back to you, your hopes, your thoughts and your conditions; but when you go there with one thought and one motive and she brings to you individual proof of life continuous and the individuality of the expression of that life though it is in direct opposition to your thought, to your motives, to your hopes, then you may depend on it you will find that is actual mediumship.

There are seldom lying spirits, though this has been laid at the door of mediumship that lying spirits come so often. I repeat, in the demonstration of actual mediumship it seldom occurs; not but what the liar and the thief return the same as the teacher and scientist, but where actual mediumship exists with an individual consciousness of its great power and work it seldom occurs. But in the lowest strata of a partial development of psychic life, in a careless negative position that places itself in that relation there comes the demonstrations not only of the lying spirits but of lying atmospheres.

AS I HAVE SAID, mediumship is like a sponge, in the absorption of all around us in this negative condition, and gives it out again. Thus we will come to know that mediumship is of divine origin and divine use. It is the doorway through which and by which the world has forever been lifted. It is the doorway through which every progressive step and thought and truth has come. Thus come to appreciate it. Protect it as you would and do protect musicians and artists of the day and hour. Come to know as well that the development of the soul man lifts you into a commandery, into a great associate power by which you can better serve and be served, and reach out not in a negative way but in a positive way of development.

Get spiritual by developing all the faculties. Get poise by knowing that body, mind and soul are the great trinity. Get more sensible by knowing that the spirit after death is no more settled than the moment before death; that a spirit after death the next morning is no wiser than it was the evening before. Banish from your minds the thought that spirits have supreme power to manipulate all conditions. Banish from your minds the thought that a denizen from the life beyond must give and can give a marvelous demonstration of life from a miraculous standpoint, and then you will have saved mediumship; then you will have secured to yourselves much of the blessing that belongs in this great realm.

I SAY, THOUGH THERE IS A CRY that the development of the psychic life is dangerous, though there have come through the bad use of mediumship unfortunate results, yet it is the morning-star, it is the next great step that humanity must take, the same as man has come into intellectual freedom, the same as man has come into a certain physical freedom as well, so in the great march of progress and power must the psychic self be unfolded and developed.

Now to enter into how this should be done would call for another hour and we cannot give it this evening. But in response to those who are feeling that Spiritualism is being dragged in the mud and mire until they must let the ship go, I will say this: Spiritualism contains the all-inclusive truth that man is capable of using. You will find that Spiritualism has taken you away from, and outside of, all cults, all systems, all previous opinions. Spiritualism is greater than all the religious systems of the past. Spiritualism is larger than all the systems of philosophy which have come and gone. Spiritualism is too broad for cults. Spiritualism is the great philosophy of life based on scientific fact that asks you to walk upon the path of life. There may be, like the old mythological stories, an iron side where we are fated and bound by environment and inheritance; there is another side where you come into the glitter of the senses which lies in the physical. There is a silver side where man begins to look out and get the glittering power of intellectual freedom, but there is a golden side toward the morning sun glistening with all its golden rays that tells you that wisdom is the great portion of mankind and it is to be gained somewhat here.

THUS BE NOT DISCOURAGED, you Spiritualists who feel that Spiritualism is waning. I say to you now, you have cast your bread upon the waters and after many days it shall return to you. In the confusion and misunderstanding of its phenomenal side and your lack of the application of its philosophical side you have come into the present condition, but Spiritualism is living; the world is eating from its table. It has been the life and power and doorway that has brought comfort, that has brought beauty, that has brought revelation, that has nearly brought into existence the new era that now is yours and will yet more and more be yours.

Thus cling to the ship that has brought you this truth. When you desert it as rats desert a sinking ship and leave it to those who misuse its work, then you are cowardly. No battle was ever won by fear. No man masters in any department by giving up at the first failure. No principle was ever defeated because the first experiment along its line was not successful.

Go, read the history of actual mediumship. Go, read the history of men as they have developed the spiritual side of life and come to know that in all cases has the world been made better. A few individuals may have lost through the great standard of men's opinions; they may have gone through some suffering, but not in proportion to the great good it has done. It is but a drop in the bucket, and we find that all life has succeeded and risen through the gateway of pain; so that we say though there have been seeming failures and there are many dangers, the world is better with it than it possibly could be without it, and to our cults and friends that are warning the world against it we would say as they say to their listeners, use common sense.

NOW HERE IS THE PLACE to use common sense. You cannot build a cult that will follow any one teacher or two or three teachers and let the world in general be free. You cannot allow the world to express the great democracy of its nature and build up a cult. Mrs. Eddy never would have built Christian Science to the mammoth stage that it is if she had let her friends and followers go free in the world and eat from the great democratic table of knowledge. She has held them to the table of ism, and it is Eddyism. She has given to them stolen truths that she filched from old Dr. Quimby. She has placed upon the altar the spirit revelations of a wonderful mind at the price of Mrs. Eddy's full concept of eternal fame.

We would say to the Theosophical friends who are afraid of the elementals and allowing other people to develop the side of their nature, if they allow all their followers to develop to the entirety of their being they will find not that a Mme. Blavatsky or Col. Olcott or Annie Besant can be their leader, for when men are free they come to lead themselves. Then there comes in all the development of nature; then there comes diversity of opinion, diversity of methods, diversity of intellectual development. So we can see wherein there are dangers—not to man but to the cult; not to the race but to their ism. And so we would say use your common sense; you cannot even afford to fear it; you can learn to control it.

THOUGH IT HAS ENGULFED hundreds and thousands of human beings in its ravages, you are not afraid of the mighty ocean. Though there have been many ships sunk on its bosom that have never arisen, you have learned to master it, and through its mastery you have gained great benefits. Though there have been those who have fallen by the wayside through half-developed mediumship from this misunderstanding of the psychic self, yet the message from the other world has touched all mortal minds, until hell no longer is; its sulphurous fires have been put out and it has been lifted coequal with heaven. We have found the golden stairs of heaven have been melted until knowledge has come and the pearly gates have fallen and there has come only now a thin veil, and we have mediumship that lifts that veil and sees into and brings back to us comfort, and furnished a basis that has dried up the tears and has brought heaven down to the bosom of earth.

My friends, it is only as the soul man has been developed, this psychic life, and man's consciousness and ability to appreciate and to understand and use these things, that your tears have been dried. Then hold fast the sacred truth and use your common sense. Remember life has many departments. Remember that man has many needs, that man must be free to unfold and develop all of these; and we would say that if you want to serve humanity in the development of the psychic self, begin to live, to learn to live here and now.

SPIRITUALISM IS THE PHILOSOPHY of life and teacher of the now. You have not got to die to find your soul; it is here. You have not got to wait until to-morrow to have opportunities; they are here. We must not put off beginning now, and when we begin to live as spirits and souls and men, with all that this means, then our dangers will fade and fade and fade away until you will find that out of it will come the great peace and prosperity and comforts that have come to you through genius, intellectual freedom and physical possessions, to the soul of man. Being born to know, comes through the efforts of pain. Step from thought into consciousness, leaving behind the blind chance of physical states automatic, and sitting at the table of control and mastery, has been a great experience. It has brought its sufferings, its shadows, its tears; but each tear is glistening warm that has shown to us the greater beauty of soul of man. Each pain has awakened in us a consciousness that there is something more to learn.

EACH MASTERY OF THE LAWS of physical things has shown us the great infinitude even of mind. We have chained man to limitations. We have bound him down to the wheels of criticism and measured greed. We are trying to keep him within the fold of limitations, and yet he will not stay but will outward go, and so the spirit of the age is progress.

The morning star is the light of understanding, and it is leading us away, and we must develop, to be able to use all that comes to us from day to day.

Be of courage, be brave, and come to know you must protect your soul development, your thoughts, with as much care as you protect the body from the storms and winds that come and blast it when unprotected. Oh! come to know that you must build about you a temple rich and pure, and so doing, lift yourselves into the song of vibratory life until the lowest spheres cannot touch, but will withdraw, feeling the power from your garment as you pass by. Then simply come and learn of self, the spirit of this being, and protect it with the understanding of common things, and you may ride safely through the storms of life and not lose but gain, and in that gaining give to humanity that which will give to it more life. Oh! mediumship and self-consciousness, ye are the higher temples of the living man, to live and know that life reaches each wave, and will never stop, but must upward and outward go from day to day.

COGENT THOUGHTS.

Errors and Delusions of Theism.

Spiritualism is to each individual a matter of fact, demonstration, knowledge, experience; it is the truth and nothing but the truth. It is not a system of faith, and it holds no ecclesiastical authority over people, but all have rights and liberties to hold and freely express any faith, opinions, theories, sentiments, in their own way. Nevertheless when some Spiritualists heedlessly repeat false assertions, regardless of their confusion and contradiction, and saddle them upon Spiritualism, I am strongly impressed to dispute and combat the statements. These people do not intend to deceive or be deceived, nor mislead others, yet they are biased by shams and delusions of religious faith; and their persistent propaganda has caused confusion and discord.

The errors and fallacies of writers are readily seen by fair and logical analysis of their statements. The most absurd, delusive ideas expressed are along the lines of Theism. They must have a god of some kind—educated that way; however, I want to help them to "see themselves as others see them."

The Theists declare "God is undefinable"; yet they are constantly defining it; tell us what they mean by God; define it by assertions reiterated for centuries with no regard for truth, reason or common sense. It has more definitions than any other word, which are in perpetual antagonism and make for us a riddle impossible of solution.

"The Unknown God" has more names, synonyms, cognates, equivalents, substitutes than any person or thing. A word made to mean anything, contrary to reason, knowledge, science, is an uncertain, senseless word that has no true meaning.

"The finite mind cannot comprehend the infinite," is often affirmed by Theists; yet they pretend to comprehend it; talk and write about it with assumptions of knowledge, only to expose their fallacy and ignorance. They often say "God is unknowable and unknown," which upsets their pretensions to knowledge.

Some Theists affirm "God is one person only." Other Theists declare "God is three male persons." Others aver "God is two persons." Another class affirm "God is a principle, not a person."

He seems to be a principle of male gender; but men do not worship an abstract principle; their conception of a God is a being possessing human attributes.

It is true, as some say, "God is not a person;" nor is it anything real; nevertheless they claim to be children of this impersonal God, the product of fanaticism; and tell us what he hears, sees, does, says.

Ignorant people talk learnedly about "The Infinite God of the Universe"; yet they cannot produce a fact or demonstration of a specific or universal god, nor present a new idea on the subject. They prove their fabulous god by vehement assertions of what they believe. One false assertion sustains another in Theism, which is mystery of the unknown.

Some Spiritualists affirm "We believe in Infinite Intelligence;" and they say that is God. It is very easy to believe things that are untrue, unreal; but what do they know of "Infinite Intelligence?" Absolutely nothing, for they say "it is unknowable—incomprehensible." Then why do they talk and write so much about it?

Intelligence implies mind, will, memory, knowledge, individuality to manifest it; and if they want it understood they "do not believe in a personal God," the "Intelligence" must be lopped off.

Some wise Theists say they "base the personality of God on consciousness, purpose and will—not on shape or avoirdupois—do not mean form nor location." A person is a living man, woman or child, and consciousness, purpose, will are attributes of a person that do not exist independently. If these Theists are "the image of God" and "He is their Father," as they claim, he should have shape, form, avoirdupois on the hypothesis that "like produces like." And that "strong arm of God" they talk about should have some weight. However, this fabulous god has no weight.

"He has no location," they say; yet they often tell where he is; locate him definitely in places; sometimes in heaven where he has a kingdom and throne. Some say "He dwells in the holy residence of creative power." This looks very much like location. Some say he is in their town, in their church, in their homes, in their hearts. He has more locations than any other person or thing.

These stupid Theists aver "God is everywhere—omnipresent," and contradict that by the assertion "God is not in hell where sinners are banished from his presence."

No—these Theists do not believe in a personal god; affirm "God is not a person"; nevertheless they call it "He—Him—Father"; inevitable marks and proofs of personality. If "men are made by God in his image and likeness," as alleged, it must be a personal god, because men are persons.

This impersonal god, they say, is "The Father of Christ"; and they talk wisely about the "bosom of God—the mind—the heart—the eye—the voice of God;" all of which imply a person.

From the preceding averments we now perceive that their ideal god has no form nor location, no shape nor avoirdupois, and no personality; which is evidence to our mind that it is a chimera, hallucination, a thing of fancy.

GIVE TO THE WORLD.

Give to the world more freely,
Of the truth of which we know.
Some will receive it gladly,
Some will not want to know.

There will always be two classes,
As long as this world will stand,
So give forth to all regardless,
And some will understand.

Not all will be bright sunshine,
Clouds and shadows will intervene,
But through them all bright faces shine
Of angel friends serene.

Go forth on your way more gladly,
Knowing that we go too,
Comforting, cheering and helping,
In all you have to do.

Remarkable Invention.

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

SpectaelesCan Be Abandoncd.

This instrument, which the inventors have patented, is called "Actina"—a trade-mark word.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for most forms of disease. Cataracts, pterygi, and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision improved or restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles.

"Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has affected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give absolutely a free trial. They want everyone interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of "Actina." One will be sent on trial postpaid:

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of disease—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has affected, and all about the responsibility of its owners—all is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address Actina Appliance Company, Dept. 34QR, 611-613 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

A mistake was made in last week's paper, the date of the dance of the Sunflower Club dance being given as January 21, when it should have been the 28th.

Mrs. Celia Riley writes from Tecumseh, Mich.: "My husband, Chas. Riley, is located in Tecumseh, Mich., and dispensing glad tidings to many from those gone before. His tests are very fine and convincing, and his work very much appreciated. All are welcome who come here, and he can be engaged at reasonable rates. All mail matter promptly attended to."

Joseph Chapman writes: "Your paper grows better and better every year. I shall certainly be a life subscriber to it. I have been taking it since 1894, and when you miss my renewal, you can set it down that I have arisen. May you live to a ripe old age to spread the truth of spirit return, and down the fakes in our glorious cause."

W. D. Noyes writes: "We have served the Tacoma Spiritual Church the last three months of the old year, and our work has proved so satisfactory that we have been engaged for the rest of the season. The society has gained a large number of members, and has moved from its old quarters to a better location, 913½ Tacoma avenue, one of the best in the city, and at the first service in 1907 there were many strange faces in the audience. George Trust, one of the leading architects of the city, was elected president of the church, and we look for a good attendance the rest of the season, and many new members."

Correspondent writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "On last Thursday evening a few intimate friends of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Morrill gave them a pleasant surprise at their home. The treasurer of our local society, Mr. Potter, presented Mrs. Morrill with a handsome china chocolate set, a gift from the friends present. Although completely taken by surprise, Mrs. Morrill proved herself equal to the occasion and responded in a few well chosen words, expressing her delight and appreciation, not of the gift alone, but of the friendship and motive that prompted their action. Mr. Haynes then responded in the following:

'Friendship with some is a flickering flame
And is unworthy of the name.
I trust that yours may be so faithful and true
That it will ne'er lose its glorious hue.
May your full hearts their richness still retain,
And all their warmth and fervor still remain;
May your affections still as warmly glow
In life's descent as when they first did flow;
And if upon this token you e'er gaze
When we have passed from life's bewildering maze,
Oh! will you not when our brief course is run
Oft think of us whose friendship you have won.'"

D. Crawford writes from Riverdale, Cal.: "I have been a Spiritualist for over fifty years, and I think I was the first person in the United States who lectured under spirit control; but my business was such that I did not develop very far, owing, in part, to my skepticism. I am now too old to write much, being 78."

Miss Ada M. Came, Secretary, writes from Cambridge, Mass.: "The Ladies' Spiritual Industrial Society of Cambridge, Mass., Mrs. Emma E. Zwahlen, president, held its regular meeting on the second Friday of the month, January 11, in Cambridge Lower Hall, 631 Mass. avenue. Mrs. Mamie Helyett was the message bearer. Seldom, if ever, have we had such fine messages given. The audience were enthusiastic, and hope to have her with them again in the near future. The next meeting will be on the fourth Friday of the month, January 25. Mrs Sadie Ham will be the speaker, and will undoubtedly bring out a large audience."

E. R. Fielding writes: "Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague, well known in the missionary field for the N. S. A., are speaking to large audiences. Many are joining the First Association of Spiritualists, Mrs. H. D. Morgan, secretary, and Mr. F. A. Wood, president. The auxiliary of the First Association gave an entertainment. Mrs. M. T. Longley was chairman for the evening. After an address by Mr. Sprague and messages by Mrs. Sprague, Dr. T. A. Bland, author of 'In the World Celestial,' addressed the audience, holding to the theme Spiritualism. Dr. Bland is here in the city in the interests of the medical fraternity, and was interviewed by President Roosevelt, presenting his views which the president listened to with marked interest. The president received a copy of Dr. Bland's new book, 'Pioneers of Progress,' which he seemed much interested in. You may hear later what Dr. Bland has to say on the Medical Bill in Congress. Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, the slate-writing medium, has moved into his new and beautiful home, 1301 Fairmount street, and is giving public seances in the light, Wednesday and Friday nights."

W. J. E. writes: "The Alliance Society in Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes ave., is holding splendid meetings at 3 and 8 p. m., every Sunday. Mrs. May Elmo, assisted by other good mediums, gives tests and messages. Remember our masquerade, February 2. Regular socials every Saturday evening."

R. A. Dague writes from Tacoma, Wash.: "The Progressive Thinker is a splendid paper. I have been a subscriber to it since its very first issue. I was an editor and publisher for thirty years, and I do not understand how you can furnish such a splendid journal for $1 per year."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may, or may not, agree with their respective views.

Secretary writes: "The annual meeting and election of officers of the Illinois Sunflower Club was held at Lincoln Hall, Fraternity Building, January 8, 1907. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Carrie Francis; vice-president, Mrs. Isa Cross; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Hattie F. R. Peet; financial secretary, Mrs. Belle Curtiss; treasurer, Mrs. Ella J. Bloom. On Monday evening, January 28, a dance and card party will be given in assembly hall, Fraternity Building, commencing at 8 o'clock. There will be an admission fee of 25 cents, which permits both dancing and cards. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends."

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass., about the Progressive Spiritualist Society: "Our turkey supper and social held on Thursday evening, January 10, was a grand success. After the supper a fine meeting was held at which many took part. Our Sunday services on the 13th, was as interesting as usual. The president, Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, presided at both sessions, with Miss Mabel Carter at the piano. The services opened with praise, reading of scripture and invocation. At the afternoon circle R. L. Bishop and Prof. Macurda of Lynn, made short addresses and gave several messages. Others made interesting remarks, and all seemed to think that a revival in Spiritualism was about to take place. At the evening meeting, Prof. Rufus A. Macurda of Lynn, Mass., was the speaker and message bearer. He chose as his theme, 'Life,' giving an able address, after which he devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many beautiful messages. Mrs. Alice M. Whall of Everett, Mass., will be the speaker on the evening of the 20th, and Mrs. M. A. Bonney of Roxbury, Mass., on the 27th."

G. H. Brooks, president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, has been lecturing at LaCrosse, Wis. His meetings were well attended, and much good was accomplished.

Mrs. O. B. Wilson writes: 'The Hyde Park Occult Society had its annual election on the 29th of December, and the following officers were chosen: Mrs. O. B. Wilson, president; Mrs. Ware, vice-president; Miss L. Stuart, financial secretary; Mr. Lundy, treasurer, and Mr. Peters, recording secretary. All communications should be sent to No. 6 East 47th street, the president's address. We had the pleasure of having Dr. George B. Warne with us, Sunday, January 13; also Mr. H. Fraser, and he did finely. We hope to have good speakers hereafter. We hold our circles every Tuesday evening, and January 24 we will hold our usual dance. Come and have a good time."

L. E. Whitney writes: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society of Springfield, Mass.—Our speaker for December 2 was Wellman C. Whitney of this city; the 9th and 30th, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, Cambridge. Dec. 16 and 23, Mr. E. D. Butler of Lynn, Mass., occupied the platform. All gave excellent satisfaction, and there is a growing interest in our meetings. Feb. 14, we will hold our annual fair and sale of fancy articles. We will also serve a salad supper."

W. J. Howes writes: "The attendance increases every Sunday at Central Spiritual Church, Trimble Hall, 1977 W. Madison street. Sunday, January 13, we had with us Mrs. Hill, pastor of the Golden Rule Society, who gave us a very instructive lecture. Sister Hild and Mrs. Howes gave some very convincing messages. Sunday, January 20, the lecture will be given by Dr. Warne. Sister Hild will also be with us."

Mrs. James Riley writes from Marcelus, Mich.: "Perhaps some of the friends of Mr. Riley would be glad to hear that he is enjoying better health the past year than he has for some time, and that he is still in the work, holding seances at his home in Marcellus, as in the commencement of his mediumship. While he has calls from a distance, he has all he can attend to at home; bringing light and comfort to many hearts, while his gifts seem to unfold in greater power at every seance."

Mamie Young writes: "The Divine Spiritual Church, Barnes Hall, is having some good spiritual lectures. Spirit guides and friends through the pastor, Rev. Lucy A. Hodge Koontz, are giving to seekers of truth that which is satisfying from the spirit land. By her hard and earnest work for the betterment of mankind and spreading the spiritual truth, she is deserving of the words of cheer she receives."

Mrs. Sexsmith writes: "On Sunday evening, January 6, Dr. C. A. Burgess was the speaker. His heart to heart talks seem to draw the people nearer to the truth, and he always leaves an impression for good. Messages were given by Mrs. Susie Thompson. Her messages are always sharp and to the point; also those by Dr. Burgess and Miss Thomas. On Sunday evening, Jan. 13, Dr. Burgess again lectured for us, followed by messages from Mr. Schmidt, Dr. Burgess and Miss Thomas. Come and bring your friends, as these meetings are always well conducted and largely attended. Good speakers and messages at all meetings. Those that are working for the good of the cause and are honest and truthful, are invited to take part. The cause in Grand Rapids is progressing, and harmony prevails. I am to assist the mid-winter meeting of the M. S. S. A., to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 10, 11 and 12. I have some dates for camp work. I will be pleased to hear from secretaries wishing my services. I will also answer calls for funerals. Address me at No. 57 Benson street, Grand Rapids, Mich."

Lecture by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond. All are welcome to come early and spend the day. There will be a message for you."

Nellie E. Abbott writes: "Sunday, January 13, at Pemberton Hall, Lawrence, Mass., we had with us Mrs. A. J. Pettengill of Malden, one of our most earnest and highly gifted workers in the cause. The announcement of her being with us always calls out an interested and intellectual audience, and as usual on this occasion the services were all too short for those who came to listen to her addresses upon 'Sweet Are the Uses of Adversity,' in the afternoon, and 'Is Spiritualism a Delusion?' in the evening. These addresses contained many illustrations of spirit presence as proofs of the subjects taken. At the conclusion of each address messages that were eagerly recognized were given, both through psychometric readings and sealed letters. We find the interest is deepening in our city, this being the fourth consecutive season that we have striven, with the aid of our loved ones on the spirit side, to demonstrate the continuity of life. We have awakened an interest among the church people, many of whom are constant attendants. Many of the best speakers have been engaged for this season's work, and we hope to realize a spiritual revival in our midst before this season closes."

Mr. Hatch writes from Boston, Mass.: "The annual meeting of the Onset Bay Grove Association was held at the Essex, Boston, Mass., Wednesday, January 9, 1907. A good representation of the stock was present. Vice-president James B. Hatch was in the chair, owing to the absence of President J. Q. A. Whittemore. After the usual business of the association was finished, under the order of new business, the following board of officers was elected for the years 1907-1908: President, John Q. A. Whittemore of Boston; vice-president, James B. Hatch, Jr., of Boston; clerk, George A. Fuller, M. D., of Onset; treasurer, George A. Fuller, M. D., of Onset. Directors—Carl T. Whittemore of Newton; Joseph H. Burgess of East Wareham; Walter C. Pessels of Brookline; David L. Whittemore of Newton; Loring Q. White of Brockton, and E. Gerry Brown of Brockton. Everything looks good for a successful season."

Correspondent writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society held a grand meeting on Sunday, Jan. 6, both afternoon and evening. In the afternoon the lyceum was well attended, about 18 children being present, and our little conductor, Miss Munger, is much loved by the children, and is doing her work with grand success. The afternoon services were a short talk by the pastor, and messages by Mrs. Morris, all being recognized. In the evening, our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, gave a short address and it seemed to stir her hearers to a knowledge that spirits can commune with mortals, which was fully proven by the message bearers, Mrs. Morris and Mrs. Clybourn and Mr. Trevor. On the afternoon of Jan. 13, our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill, held the fort alone and gave good satisfaction. In the evening Dr. J. H. Randall gave one of his fine addresses, followed by Mrs. Ada Clybourn with messages. Her work was well received. The lyceum is adding new faces to their work and if Miss Munger keeps on she will be at the head and will lead them all as a lyceum instructor."

Mrs. Anna A. Wood writes from Joplin, Mo.: "The audiences at the meetings of the Spiritualists Science, held at Odd Fellows Hall, Seventh and Main, have been doubly blessed during November and December through the excellent work done by Dr. Marie Seeah. Her tests are very clear and gratifying to those who are seeking for the light and truth. We have a class for development every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock; also conference meeting at 6:30 p. m., followed by a lecture given through Dr. Marie Seeah's control. The meetings are very interesting, the members taking an active part. Mrs. Dr. Seah is doing a grand good work for the cause, which all true Spiritualists appreciate."

Any medium of good morals who can lecture, and would accept a position for a branch club of the Occult Club, should address for further information, Dr. R. McL. Angus, 1022 Michigan street, Port Huron, Mich.

J. J. Rittenhouse writes: "I have read 'The Unknown Life of Jesus,' and find it to be a valuable book, and I am sincerely thankful for same. I have eight of your excellent Premium Books, and prize them all very highly."

Mrs. Cleveland writes: "The Society of the Psychic Forces and the Spiritual Alliance will give a unique entertainment and dance at Vincennes Hall, 3514 Vincennes ave., Wednesday, January 30, at 8 o'clock. There is an excellent program arranged. Good mediums and plenty of them and choice singers for this occasion. Unique music by Brother Norton. Admission only 25 cents. All are welcome."

Prof. E. E. Rex and wife are at Frankfort, Ind. They are taking an extended missionary trip and can be addressed there for engagements.

Correspondent writes: "Sunday, January 13, the Secular League of Washington, D. C., became a temple for spiritual instruction. Mrs. Mary A. Price gave a lecture on Spiritualism, which was followed by a lively discussion of the subject, not only by members of the League, but by many prominent Spiritualists, among them Mr. Sprague, who is serving the First Association. Mrs. Price closed the meeting by summing up and answering the criticisms, but groups of Spiritualists and Materialists stood in different parts of the hall and continued exchanging ideas for nearly an hour after the meeting closed. The earnestness was almost excitement, and when scientists get in earnest, there are seeds of thought sown which will some day bear fruit."

Dr. Geo. A. Fuller lectured for the Ethical and Spiritual Society, New York City, 74 West 126th street, Sunday, January 20, and will lecture before the same society on the 27th. He could answer a few calls to lecture not too far from this city. Address him at No. 575 West 159th street, New York City, N. Y. Next week we will publish a most excellent lecture delivered by the Doctor while in Washington, D. C.

C. L. Hatch writes from 9 Appleton street, Appleton Hall, Boston, Mass.: "The First Spiritualist Ladies' Aid Society met as usual with the president, Mrs. Mattie E. A. Allbe, in the chair. A very interesting business meeting was held. In the evening the following talent took part: Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse, Mrs. Jollimore, Mrs. Freemont, Mr. Graham, Mr. Packard, and Mrs. Dick. Mrs. Mary F. Lovering presided at the piano. At the social hour, Mr. Sam Graham, Mr. Gowing and Mr. Freemont furnished some excellent instrumental music on violin and piano. Next Friday we hold our Snip sale."

D. W. Hull writes from Olympia, Wash.: "The article, 'The Universe Is Not Running Down,' by Prof. Larkin, Nov. 5, is worth two years' subscription to The Progressive Thinker. It brings to the surface all the worshipful qualities of our sublime natures. I wish he would write again."

Conductors and Secretaries of Lyceums

Please send me a list of your members, and the name of your lyceum. For some time I have been waiting anxiously for a list of all our lyceums. It is most important that we should have an authentic list of your lyceum, its membership, and address of its officers. Will you not give me this assistance?

The Banner Contest list will remain open through the month of January, so any school that has not reported, send in report at once; but even though you may not desire to enter the competition for a prize, please send report of your membership. The lyceums that have reported are as follows: Los Angeles, Cal.; Parkland, Pa.; Chesaning, Mich.; Pittsburg, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Decatur, Portland, Galveston, and a partial report from three others. We trust by the close of this month to have a full list of every working lyceum in the United States.

The Pathway of the Human Spirit.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, whose books are sharp, full of interest and replete with valuable inspiration, has certainly placed the reading public under a fresh debt of gratitude to him since this, his latest work has adorned our libraries.

"Truth the Highest Authority," is the striking motto engraved in gilt on the purple cover of "The Pathway of the Human Spirit." The volume is composed of 17 chapters, each dealing with some special aspect of the general theme and treating it in the brisk and breezy manner which is the veteran author's characteristic style.

"Why this Book?" is the title of the forewords prefacing the Introduction, wherein we are reminded of bygone controversies, but far more of glorious inspirations which have reached humanity through some of the greatest seers and poets alike, of ancient and modern time.

Walt Whitman and his verse receive a high tribute from Dr. Peebles, who quotes freely from that gifted bard of Nature, whose rhythm is unconventional, and whose heart is in his every line.

Reminiscences are often charming, and Dr. Peebles carries us back to days before many of us were born, and then leads us on in a most fascinating way to the doings and sayings of the present generation. In the Preface the author leaves no doubt in the mind as to his acceptance of the truth of the spirit's pre-existence, in the following words (page 21): "Pre-existence is with myself a settled conviction. But the pre-existence of the spirit is not the synonym of re-incarnation." In that sentence we have the key to the philosophy of the book. The whole subject is very ably and kindly handled and there are no harsh strictures against the doctrine of reincarnation, though the author does not commit himself to its advocacy. He treats its advocates with courtesy and fairness. Theosophists equally with Spiritualists of all shades of opinion can study this volume with profit, and it seems impossible to read it thoughtfully without growing wiser from its perusal. The splendid classic prose, the exquisite poetry, and above all the extremely noble and highly elevating ethical teaching with which the entire treatise abounds must endear it and its venerable author to all those who can appreciate beauty of diction as a vehicle for expressing spiritual truth. 75 cents is an extremely low price for so valuable a book. W. J. COLVILLE.

"Just How to Wake the Solar Plexus." By Elizabeth Towne. Valuable for health. Price, 25 cents.

"The Jesuits." By Rev. B. F. Austin, A. M., B. D. An excellent pamphlet. Price, 15 cents.

"Religious and Theological Works of Thomas Paine," contains his celebrated "Age of Reason," and a number of letters and discourses on religious and theological subjects. Cloth binding, 430 pages. Price $1.

W. J. Colville in California.

To the Editor:—While thanking you cordially for publishing my last communication in a recent issue, I wish you now to let me inform your readers that since my return to California, I have found excellent opportunities for successful work in San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Berkley. San Francisco is rapidly recovering from earthquake and fire, and signs of increasing prosperity abound everywhere. I am now visiting Los Angeles, and expect very soon to be in San Diego, where I have made favorable arrangements to deliver a course of lectures in the Spiritualist Temple, during February. All letters, etc., addressed to me in care of Metaphysical Library, Grant Building, Los Angeles, are sure to reach me promptly.

"Universal Spiritualism," after many delays, is now being bound. The publishers, R. F. Fenno & Co., 18 East 17th street, New York, are acting in perfectly good faith, but they have required that all expenses be met prior to publication. The book may be in your hands now at any moment.

Camp Notes Concerning Southern Cassadaga Camp.

Since my last letter the most important event was the New Year's supper and dance given for the special purpose of raising money for a new fence, and new gates at the camp entrance. It was inaugurated and taken charge of by Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, who have a pleasant home, "Happy-go-Lucky," just outside the gate, and netted $50 for this purpose, so it is not necessary to add that it was a success in every way, and old and young took part in the dance to their heart's content.

Mrs. Twing lectured on Sunday, December 30, reading Tennyson's "Bells," and giving a dissertation thereon which everyone enjoyed.

Mrs. Wheeler of Onset, Mass., lectured on January 6, on "Thoughts of the New Year, and followed her fine discourse with equally fine tests.

The new arrivals of a very recent date have been Major Hopkins and wife of Brooklyn, N. Y. and Mrs. Wilten, who has been staying some time with Mr. and Mrs. Swift of Utica, N. Y. She has bought Mrs. Buchanan's cottage, and will fix it up. Also Mrs. Laura G. Fixen of Chicago, and is occupying and beautifully fitting up her cottage.

The Budington Excursion sails from New York on the 11th, with fifteen booked for Cassadaga Camp.

The apartment house is full—some rooms still in cottages. Brigham Hall has been put in perfect order by Mrs. Brigham, and is very tidy and comfortable.

We are soon to have a new hedge put around the park in front of the Auditorium, which will add very much to the attractiveness.

The Underhill family are expected soon.

The weather is ideal, everybody seems social and happy, and all look forward to the opening of camp with pleasure. LEE MORSE.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Entered spirit life, Wayne Hemenway, aged 8 years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Hemenway, of North Leverett, Mass.

A memorial service was held in their beautiful home, January 9, conducted by Francis Bailey Woodbury, of Greenfield, Mass. Beautiful floral tributes were received from the schoolmates of Wayne, the Grange, and hosts of friends. The members of this home are "progressive thinkers" and the knowledge of immortality as a fact proven without doubt cheered and consoled them all.

As the little body was lowered into the grave, the father exclaimed, "Thank God, I know my boy is not being buried; he has arisen."

He leaves a wife and a host of friends to regret his going. His wife accompanied the body to Howard City, Mich. The funeral service was held at the home of his brother-in-law, Warren Lisk, Jan. 10, the writer officiating.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

Since making my big hit in Mexican Mining property I got so many letters from people I know to be readers of your paper, that I ask you to publish this statement. If you and your wives wish to make money fast and sure invest in Mexico. Cecil Rhodes, Mining King, says that "Mexican Mine investments are the safest in the world and the most profitable." Mexican laws will not permit that wild-cat business that robs the people in the State. It is the richest mining district in the world. Any person can make money. A few dollars' investment now will bring you thousands in a year. I invested $10 for a friend who is now getting $5 per month dividend. I have nothing to sell, and as I am traveling I have no chance to answer letters. The Pittsburg Oaxaca Mining Company, Block 25, Pittsburg, Pa., will give you full information regarding SAFE INVESTMENTS in Mexico. This firm is perfectly reliable. Through them I made $20,000 in less than a year with only a few dollars to start with. You don't have to go to Mexico. Ask them to send you samples of ore. Your old friend,

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"Cleveland": Q. Are the "unknown tongues" spoken, or said to be spoken by the converts at the revival now going on in this city, real "tongues," or simply jargon?

A. To understand the question of this correspondent, some little insight must be had of the "revival going on." Some evangelists came to the Friends church, and they quickly stirred the waters in the usually calm pool of that society. They understood the revival business and "worked it for all it was worth." At times all the assembly were talking at once, every man and woman in a language of their own. It was "Esperanto," "Volupuk" or some such lingo, developed out of their own "subliminal consciousness." For the conveyance of ideas it was as good as the most classic tongue, for as not even the evangelists had any ideas to convey, one articulation was as well as another, if it only made a noise.

Having the power of "unknown tongues," carried with it the divine gift of casting out devils! There were many devils to cast out, for all who were sick were believed by these devotees to be obsessed by devils. They were all believers in "The Great psychological Crime." One lady had two, and another five devils cast out. Said the latter:

"There were five of them. They went from me only after a great struggle. I felt a rending and tearing as from my very bones, and the room was filled with the rushing winds described in the Bible.

"It was so when we cast the demons from my aunt, Mrs. Stough, wasn't it, auntie?"

"So it was," said Mrs. Stough. "I felt the rushing of winds. Though I had been unable to move in bed without assistance, my limbs threshed about beneath the covers. I sat right up. I would have sprung from the bed had it not been for those who knelt by me."

But this was as nothing to the performances when the struggling converts received the "gift," and became conscious of salvation. With shouts they threw themselves backwards into the air falling on the floor with a crash and with waving outstretched arms lay moaning prayers or in stupor.

In fact the revival ran with the evangelists who were conducting it. It would have been a success in a past generation, but in a cultured city of to-day became a farce, too pitiable to laugh at; too degrading to be covered with the mantle of religion. The "unknown tongues," were a suggestion of the Bible, as they are in all revivals. They come from auto-suggestion, and the deluded subjects are victims of the combination of this with the hypnotism of the evangelists. The "unknown tongues" are not languages in any sense, but a jumble of articulations. Revivalists bring in play all the arts and methods of hypnotism, and work on the emotions. Reason is paralyzed and the dazed mental state of the convert is thought to be a mark of the presence of the Holy Ghost.

Its true character, however, is shown by its evanescence, for the evangelists have no sooner sought new fields than the converts return to their old ways of thinking and manner of living. The "power" departs as it came, and reason again awakens.

Mrs. E. S. S.: Q. If a person were bitten by a rabid dog, would you recommend the Pasteur treatment?

A. In the supposed imminence of the emergency, it is assuming grave responsibility to advise in such a matter, yet I have found no cause to recede from the position taken in this column some time ago. As to the value of Pasteur's so-called discovery there is a wide diversity of opinion. While on one hand he is lauded as a veritable savior, and his toxin cure of rabies as a priceless boon, on the other, many able physicians and scientists regard the treatment as quackery. There are grave doubts expressed by physicians of extended practical knowledge, as to there being any distinct disease such as rabies, and they say that the treatment is misleading, and often produces fatal results, developing a disease known as "laboratory rabies." When persons are bitten, they go to the hospital for treatment. If they do not develop the disease from the bite or toxins injected, they are said to be cured. If they take on the symptoms expected, it is said they came too late. A test of the remedy is thus impossible. The bite of a dog that has been eating decayed meat or gnawing old bones, is dangerous because of the possibility of blood poisoning. The saliva of animals at times is poisonous when introduced into wounds. Human saliva is often virulent in its toxic action.

To say the least, the Pasteur treatment is at present empirical, and opposed by physicians and scientists as eminent as those who advocate it. It is conducted in a purely commercial manner, for the money that can be made out of it, and is advertised and exploitered with the brazen superlatives of the patent medicine quack.

But if I was bitten by a mad dog? Well, I should first want to be sure the dog was mad. If I became convinced that he was, I doubt if I would be frightened into having the cultured virus injected into my veins. Some physicians claim that the so-called cases of rabies result not from there being any poison conveyed, but by auto-suggestion. The patient becomes so firmly convinced that he is doomed that the symptoms he thinks expressive of the disease are developed. In proof they instance the aversion for water which is supposed to accompany all cases of rabies, but really dogs afflicted with the so-called madness seek water, but find it difficult to slake their thirst.

The best authorities object to the use of cauteries as making the wound larger and more difficult to heal. It is the time-old way, and as useless as barbarous. Instead antiseptics are recommended, to be applied to the wound as soon as possible, carefully applying so as to reach the deepest part of the wound. It is just the treatment all wounds should receive, and then suppuration, inflammation, indicative of the presence of more or less virulent microbes will be entirely avoided.

Marcus Hawkins: Q. Where are the most extensive catacombs?

A. Those at Rome are the largest, though those at Paris are of great extent. There were excavations for burial purposes in Egypt, Naples and other cities. The deserted quarries were utilized in Paris, but it is now conceded that those of Rome were of galleries excavated for the purpose. The main galleries, with their corridors, extend mile after mile, and would make put together a tunnel hundreds of miles in length. The number of skeletons gathered there has been estimated at six millions, but probably far exceeds that number. There is no other place in the world where there is such a collection of human bones.

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor:—Evidently in the hurry of your duties you failed to read correctly the article embodying the views of Abbe Loisy, which you extract from, with comments, in your paper of January 12. If you carefully read the first part of Fr. O'Kelley's article, you will see that he quotes almost every line, following that from the books put forth by Abbe Loisy, and deeply declared Loisy's extreme views. Fr. O'Kelley criticises them, and certainly does not endorse them. In "The Ecclesiastical Review" were footnotes naming book and page from which he quoted Loisy's assertions. As the "Review" was loaned to me merely for my own reading, and I copied that article without the knowledge and consent of its owner, the least I can do now is to see that it is not misunderstood. The evident purpose of Fr. O'Kelley and the "Review" was to give the clergy at large an opportunity to see just what extremely heretical assertions Abbe Loisy had published; editorial criticism went without saying. While there doubtless is, individually, a more liberal tendency among the clergy and their periodicals for the past year have contained an almost unbroken series of narratives of spirit return, they may safely be trusted to stand by the doctrines and principles of the church.

By the way, when it is proved that Spiritualism inspires as unselfish heroism and devotion to fellow beings, as is on record of so many who found their inspiration in the teachings of the church, we shall be in a better position to call those teachings worthless. "Try all things and hold fast that which is good"—whether its original teacher can be indisputably ascertained or not. One thing is sure: back of the Catholic organization on earth, known as the church, and the powerful spirits who were saintly here, is a supreme power for good. It is very doubtful if those who assume that mortal man is "the whole thing," and God a myth, are as happy and have as strong incentive to be good, as those who pin their faith on God. In these days, we surely need something to hold fast to—someone to believe in as supremely good and wise and powerful; that need has been felt from the earliest human existence, and always will be. While we seek a clearer understanding of teachings handed down to us, there is no occasion to deny the existence of God.

REINCARNATION.

"Life Is a Part of, or Is Embodied in, Nature."

In The Progressive Thinker, No. 893, Jessie S. Pettit Flint asks if I think "that life is less than nature."

Life is a part of, or is embodied in, Nature. How can life be more or less than that of which it is a part? Can our friend imagine Nature without life or life without Nature?

The question at issue is this: Is the spirit embodied in a material form more than once? I have taken the position that it is not. The spirit cannot enter and occupy a physical body the second time any more than the life of a fowl can return to the egg and develop a chicken, or the insect return to the caterpillar and bring forth a butterfly.

Every law of Nature sustains me in this position. If the theories of some of my friends are upset or interfered with I cannot prevent it.

"Our point of view" is surrounded by substantial evidence. The law is invariable. L. P. WHEELOCK.

A TRUMPET SEANCE.

A German Spirit—Two Voices at Once.

On Wednesday night, December 26, 1906, a trumpet seance was held at the home of Mrs. Margaret Spencer, the medium, 177 No. Union street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

We sat in a room up stairs. The door was bolted and we were locked in. A quilt was tacked over the two little windows. The only other opening was a stove-pipe hole; as the room was close, we had some fans to use.

In these seances, it is customary to repeat the Lord's Prayer, and sing, "Nearer, My God to Thee." I could hear a spirit voice taking part in the singing.

The first voice speaking through the trumpet was that of Frank Ogden, deceased son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Ogden, of 79 Diamond street. He saluted the sitters in a general way.

'Hello, ma," said Frank Ogden, to his mother.

"Hello, Frank."

"I am glad to meet you all, and we will try to have a good seance so none will be disappointed."

"Hello, pa," said Frank to his father.

"Yes, Frank, we are glad you are here."

"Good evening, Mr. Martin," said Frank to me.

"Good evening, Frank."

As I noticed that his controlling spirit spoke in heavy tones and as loud as any man's voice, I said, "Mrs. Ogden, did your son Frank have such a heavy bass voice?"

"Yes, he had a very heavy bass voice."

Mr. and Mrs. Ogden were very silent during the seance, and gave others a chance to talk. They were unselfish. In fact, they are just as good, nice, friendly and exemplary people as are found anywhere.

Here I will say that they have two deceased daughters, Rose and Hattie, making three grown up children in spirit life. It is worth your time to go to their seances to witness the love and affection manifested in this Ogden family. They are a devoted family. The son-in-law, Mr. Fred Engle, an intelligent man, was there. If there was not truth in these phenomena, they would not attend these seances so long, for months and years.

Then a childish voice spoke in a lisping whispers; it was greeted as little "Sunshine," her pet name. All were quiet so we could hear the little one. She, too, likes most everybody, and the ladies thought her childish prattle was nice.

"Sunshine, what is Frank doing while you are talking?"

"Oh, he is standing by his mother looking on."

"Ma," said the deep bass voice of Frank Ogden, "though it has just past, I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New year."

"Thank you, Frank," said his mother.

"Say, pa, what I want to say now is, that many spirits want to thank you for your help in bringing about this seance," remarked Frank to his father.

Then little Sunshine soon spoke in. She likes to call people by their given names.

"Charlie," said she to a man at my right, "why don't you introduce me to your girl?"

The little spirit was then introduced to a lady on his right, who still sat in her wraps, furs and hat.

"You will be a pretty warm girl before this seance is over," remarked Sunshine.

Most of us had been using our fans. I was so warm that I took off my coat without any apology, and hung it up on the floor in front of me. The German woman, Mrs. Millie Nichols, at my left, feeling me move about a little, put out her hand on my head, thinking I might have fainted; but I told her I only took off my coat. Then I found my fan, pencil and note book and used them.

Sunshine and the warm girl, who had never attended a seance before, had a little chat. Sunshine thought the warm girl was already a medium and would make a good medium.

"A little bit longer and things will be gooder," said Sunshine and the sitters were pleased to hear the little one's grammar. A little laughter and some general remarks, or whispering among the sitters followed.

Some one said there was too much whispering to hear what the spirits said. Then all was quiet.

Then Frank Ogden talked to a serious young man who had never been to a seance before. "You will find this spirit world a better one. In your investigations, you will need to be a little patient, and you will find much consolation. If you will only investigate with my parents and their friends, you will find much truth and satisfaction.

Then spirit Rose spoke through the trumpet to her parents and to her husband, Fred. "You are proud of our little girl, are you not, Fred?" said Rose, who died about four years ago. "You will see her often, won't you, and help to support her? and ma, you know how to raise the girl. Ma, I am so very glad that I can hardly hold the forces," "Were you with us yesterday?" inquired Mrs. Ogden.

"Yes," said spirit Rose.

"We had the table set for you and Hattie and Frank."

"Yes, and if you had had a good cry, "Yes," concluded Mrs. Ogden, "it would have relieved the pressure on my brain, for I thought so much I had something like the headache."

Then Frank's heavy voice was heard: "Ma, don't you think Rose did well? She never dropped the trumpet."

"Yes, she did well."

"Ma, if you had cried yesterday, it would have relieved you some."

"Yes, I might not have had the headache."

A voice began whispering in German. The lady at my left responded. Her name was Mrs. Minnie Nichols, who had lived in Lowell, Mich., but had lately moved here. As requested she arose so the spirit could talk to her better. They recognized each other. I could understand a few words, but not what they said. They both talked very fast. The warm lady and some others were so pleased that they laughed a little. I said, "Please keep still so we can hear." All were quiet. Down went the trumpet, and down sat the lady. Someone inquired what she talked about.

"We talked about love and secrets," responded the lady.

The whispering voice of Sunshine spoke out quickly: "I wish everyone could talk United States."

There was a general laugh.

Frank's heavy voice remarked, "Well, that little chatter-box would talk all night if you would let her."

The voice ov a boy, Elmer Bennett, wanted word sent to his mother not to cry so much.

During the seance, I heard someone sighing often, and I inquired. "Mrs. Spencer, do you do that sighing?"

"Well, I don't know, I guess so."

"You don't tell all you know, do you?" said Sunshine.

"Bless her, isn't she cute?" said the ladies.

One spirit voice said to a person, "I am so overly glad to tell you I live. I would like to be with you a little while and hold you in my arms."

Here the reader will observe that the mighty bonds of love are unbroken between the two worlds.

"This is heaven on earth, I am glad I can talk to you. I wish you a happy New Year," concluded the spirit in a strong voice.

Frank said, "Friends, I think I must draw this seance to a close. I hope we may all meet again. I want to thank you for the good thoughts you have entertained and sent out to my medium. Thoughts have force and power to affect sensitive people, so send out good thoughts to help them."

"Frank," inquired someone, "where will you spend the night?"

"I will go home with my mother. She is one of the best mothers in all Grand Rapids."

"Well, good night, girls," said Sunshine.

Down went the trumpet.

All responded, "Good night."

The medium said she would open the door, first, and become accustomed to the light gradually. Then she lit the gas and all went down stairs.

"How do you feel, Mrs. Spencer?"

"Oh, I feel as if I had been running up hill and was all exhausted in my lungs."

All the people were pleased with the seance. Here I might remark that we sang a few songs during the seance. When all were singing in the chorus, "In the sweet bye and bye," I sang "The sweet now and now." I felt the time was a happy one. I paused in my singing to hear the heavy voice of the controlling spirit, Frank Ogden. I heard his voice, and I could hear the medium's voice also. No woman can imitate Frank Ogden's voice.

We paid our twenty-five cents to the tired medium for her time and work.

Every Sunday night she holds a trumpet seance in her own home. After a person has attended a few times, two or three times, his own spirit friends can talk through the trumpet. Every investigator is welcome who will act like a lady or a gentleman. All seances are so quiet that a person can get plenty of proof without striking a match to see where the trumpet is, because no one would strike a light in a photographer's dark developing room, and no one would be so rude as to strike a light in a dark trumpet seance to shock the medium, for all creative power works in negative darkness. Hence, only well-bred people of good manners are welcome in a trumpet or materializing seance.

"Mrs. Spencer, are you unconscious in a seance?"

"Only when I give a private seance."

"Why is that?"

"Because, in a large seance there is so much power and strength from the other sitters that I do not need to be entranced; but in a private seance, my strength is so drawn upon that I am entranced, and because I am not to know the private affairs of my patrons."

As I have done my kind of work, as I have lived among mediums and been to many seances and meetings, and as I have been a school teacher for many years, I still like to be a psychic or occult student and report the results of my observations.

It has an interesting article in the November number, for modern thinkers.

It publishes in each month the International Sunday-school lessons for the next succeeding month with comments and instructions to the ministers throughout the country. In the November number in the critical comments on the lesson for Dec. 16, subject, "Jesus risen from the dead," by Rev. Willard Thorp, is the following:

"The narrative of the soldiers set to guard the tomb, and afterward consenting for money to admit that they had committed the deadly offense of sleeping while on guard, no doubt preserves a story which was current among the early Christians to counteract and explain the Jewish assertion that the disciples had stolen the body. The story of the great earthquake, the descent of the angel of the Lord, rolling away the stone and causing the watchers to quake and become as dead men, evidently represents the attempt of the church to picture what took place before the women reached the tomb, and belongs rather to the realm of imagination than in that of the witnessed fact, the New Testament itself indicating that there were no witnesses of these things.

"There is nothing in this original account of Mark, verses 1-8 or in that which was probably contained in the original conclusion of Mark, which is inherently improbable. Such experiences are not uncommon and have a recognized place among psychological phenomena. They are variously explained according to the view held by many scientific biblical scholars, this and the other resurrection phenomena were produced by the surviving personality of Jesus projecting itself into the minds of the disciples and causing them to see visions and hear voices. Such a view of the resurrection of Jesus, as a real and spiritual event, but unattended by any reanimation of his body, is, on the whole, the most acceptable in the present state of scientific thought, if not also most consistent with the earliest New Testament evidence itself. The chief difficulty with it is the question: What became of the body of Jesus? The attempt to derive from the different gospels accounts of the resurrection appearances a connected and self-consistent story has never been wholly successful. We must for the present rest content with the judgment that at the basis of the narratives there are real experiences of the disciples of Jesus, through which their faith in him being revived and strengthened, they entered into a spiritual fellowship with Jesus which became the moral dynamics of their lives. That their interpretations of the cause of these experiences are not wholly consistent, and that around the record of such extraordinary experiences there are gathered some elements that are historically improbable, is not at all surprising."

Verily, if such information is imparted to divinity students and preachers, it will not be long until the modern preacher will have his eyes opened to the beauty of the teachings of Jesus about his spiritual kingdom and then "peace on earth, good will toward men" will become a reality. Then the new commandment to "love one another" will be appreciated and will rule. Then the millennium will begin, for men will learn that these things are realities instead of theory.

To the Editor:—Spiritualism is still climbing slowly but surely to the topmost round. January 6, the Indiana State Association held service in the First Spiritualist Church. Mrs. Allie Buhland lectured and Mrs Josephine Ropp was message bearer; both were highly interesting. Dr. Kingsly in an underhand way had secured the church, and we were obliged to go elsewhere. It was not hard to do, and Mrs. Carrie Mong and Mr. Schram secured Old Pearson Hall, and Mrs. Buhland and Mrs. Ropp were again announced to speak and give messages; but on account of serious illness of Mrs. Buhland's father, she could not be present, and Mrs. Ropp's physician forbid her leaving home. Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden the vacancies were filled, and all were delighted with the lecture and beautiful messages from Mrs. Hayden. Mrs. Crane read from many articles from the audience. Mrs. Mattie Anderson furnished some good instrumental music, and Miss Nellie Joss favored us with one selection. All were well pleased and all who so kindly assisted us have our best wishes.

Next Sunday, Will J. Erwood, state missionary, will be with us, and through his efforts we hope to accomplish some good work.

The Helping Hand Club has re-organized, and have identified themselves with Camp Chesterfield, to secure a fresh air fund to provide a few weeks recreation at the camp for some deserving poor children or women who are sickly, and need such a vacation. If those who may read this feel they can spare anything, all the way from twenty-five cents to twenty-five thousand dollars, we shall be thankful for the same, and the amount received will be published in The Progressive Thinker from time to time. This is a new departure, but we feel as if it will be the means of bringing many into the light of Spiritualism.

Mrs. Thomas O'Neill is president, and your humble servant secretary, and any one having anything to give us, can kindy send to

A Word for The Progressive Thinker.

As the new year, 1907, rolls in I can not but say, that I note with great pleasure the progress and rapid strides "Our Official Organ" has made in the past years. A man as a rule is judged by his works, so the same with our organ, better known as The Progressive Thinker, we find by its works it stands for truth and Justice alone, and will do for the world what no other organ has done so far. It gives unto the people the naked truth, and I am proud to admit it cannot be bribed or bought.

It is the mouthpiece for every honest and true worker. Let us help to spread it throughout the world; let us men and women work, not dream and sleep; it stands us to hand to read and study. We are in need of more workers such as those I met at our recent convention. What we want is more of "the show me," with a good deal of backbone and push in us. So once again let us rally to our most glorious cause, with the aid and help of The Progressive Thinker, my paper, your paper, everybody's paper. May it prosper as never before, and may it always with the help of every honest worker in and out of our field be ever kept pure and clean in all its works.

It is time to be brave. It is time to be true.
It is time to be finding the things you can do.
It is time to put by the dream and the sigh,
And work for the cause that is holy and high.
It is time to be kind, it is time to be sweet,
To be scattering roses for somebody's feet;
It is time to be sowing, it is time to be growing,
Time for the flower of Spiritualism to be blowing.
It is time to be lowly and humble at heart;
It is time for the Spiritualists to press hard their start,
For their aim to be white, and their steps to be right,
And their press to be weaving a garment of light.

A BOOK FOR THE NEW YEAR, AND THE NEW TIME.

NOW READY!

The Evolution of the God and Christ-Ideas.

The idea of God, beginning with savage man, is traced through its endless phases upward from primeval savagery through Assyria, Greece and Rome; the speculations of philosophers; the Hebrew seers, the Alexandrian school; to its final interpretation by scientific investigation as the Cosmic Mind.

The Christ-Idea, of a mediator between God and Man, is traced through all the great World Religions, to its ultimate in the ideal of a perfect man. Redemption is by growth. If the teachings of individual spirits may be taken as representing Spiritualism, this book must be regarded as the message that Cause presents to the world on the disputed questions of God and the Savior.

The application of the Darwinian theory of Evolution to man's conception of God and a Savior, may be presented as at least one new idea Spiritualism has given to the world. The work has more than spirit-authority, for it holds fast to authentic history, and aside from its inferences and conclusions, is a compend of what has been thought and taught of God and the Savior, through the ages, by the lowest and highest of mankind.

So many years have passed since I began writing this book by inspiration and automatically; so severe and prolonged attention has been given to its revision, that it was with almost a feeling of regret that I received the message that it was finished.

Reincarnation.

Trenchant Thoughts in Regard to the Same—The Writer Says: "The history of those persons who claim to have a knowledge of reincarnation by actual experience, is this, they were some great personage in their previous incarnation, kings and queens and rulers of empires, but to-day we find them in the humblest walks of life, which shows that according to their own theory, they have retrograded in the scale of being."

The doctrine of Reincarnation, as taught to-day by certain schools of philosophy, is one of the most pernicious errors connected with occult teachings, and should be persistently refuted by all earnest lovers of the truth of Nature's laws, for the simple reason that re-embodiment of the individual in earthly relations is beyond the province of natural law as expressed through evolution and involution of the soul.

The simple truth about planetary life, in its first stages, is that the entity which survives death is really a product of the planetary relations of the elements, and gets its inception there. If it be forcibly detached it can be magnetically attached to kindred spiritual entities in the form, and obtain life experience through that relation, but it has no power to go back to the primitive status or to become re-embodied at the expense of the embryonic life, and nature most emphatically refuses to permit it.

The great trouble with our modern teachers is that they fail to recognize the eternity of matter as well as spirit, and also fail to connect the two as correlative in the Universal Cosmos. By so doing they miss the knowledge of the inception of the spirit, and vaguely suppose it gets its original impetus from the universal impersonal spirit, which seeks to express itself through matter to obtain knowledge that it could not gain elsewhere.

The metaphysical teachers of reincarnation of the individual spirit, have had to meet many objections and much speculative questioning, but their chief reliance was and still is, that Karma is the cause of reincarnation, and when a good karma is obtained they will not need to repeat the experiences of earth further.

Let us examine the idea of karma and see if it presents any good basis of the theory of rebirth into conditions that necessarily must be extremely likely to produce a bad karma. If the experience of earthly life has not been able in its first influence upon the embryonic spirit to give it a good karma, will the continuation of rebirth into the same or similar conditions be likely to improve the spirit as surely as to detach its thought and desires from that state?

The history of those persons who claim to have a knowledge of reincarnation by actual experience, is this, they were some great personage in their previous incarnation, kings and queens and rulers of empires, but to-day we find them in the humblest walks of life, which shows that according to their own theory, they have retrograded in the scale of being.

Now the law of spiritual unfoldment is this, that the better the conditions, the wiser and purer the life, and while it may be necessary for the spiritual entity to lay its foundation in planetary life, the sooner it can escape from bad conditions there, the more likely it will be to have a beautiful development. It may have to stay in mortal environment for a season to perfect the form powers, but when that is once accomplished no necessity exists for further imprisonment upon earth, for all that earth can teach is what pertains to the physical senses rather than to the spiritual life, and to condemn a spirit to return to it after once having its nature developed in that direction would be rather to degrade than to exalt the soul, nor could anything be gained by it.

Spirits of the scientific order never endorse the advisability of early death, and aver that until the embryonic spirit has obtained the necessary development of earth life, it must remain in the magnetic environment of earth. This gives it all the experience needed, and effectually disposes of the theories of spiritual rebirth into ante-natal life. It is Nature asserting her rights, which no power less than hers can deprive one of, but she can do it without disturbing the equilibrium of either world. The teachings of karma are seen in the idea that the final redemption from a bad karma is to be obtained by translation from earth in infancy, hence abortions and early death from other causes are looked upon by that class of individuals as blessings instead of curses, notwithstanding the fact that Nature enters a most marked protest against early death. Karma demands it, hence infanticide has been practiced by reincarnationists to an enormous extent, so much so, that the civil government has had to impose its strong arm to suppress it.

The original karma idea was that the soul would have to expiate its experiences, the effect of all conditions through which it would have to pass from the realm of unconscious being to the perfect development of all its powers. But it was perceived by the wiser teachers that the spiritual influx from the lower spheres of spirit betokened a bad karma, and that it was not possible for the spirituality of a low order to perfect itself except through a series of mental experiences or evolutions from one plane of thought to another of higher degree, and in the metaphorical expression of language the idea of a rebirth was used to express this process, and was never understood in any other sense until a debased priesthood gave it the literal interpretation which is taught to-day by the schools of reincarnationists. This false theory must be overthrown, for it is not true to Nature's law of evolution.

By the law of spiritual evolution, the spirit once having had its formative stages in earthly or planetary life has no more necessity for returning to that condition than the developed bird has to re-enter the shell of its embryonic life, for the earth experiences at best are but formative, and as far as being of any great value except in the necessity of the embryotic stages of life it may be said to be absolutely necessary to complete the soul's Cycle of Necessity. In the supreme economy the planets are necessary to organize the elements into conscious entities known as spirits, but beyond that function they have no essential purpose of a spiritual character, hence, after this stage has been passed there is no necessity for a return to experience over again what has already been learned, besides nature, in her evolutionary laws, positively refuses to work backwards or to repeat over again any experiences that have already accomplished their purpose.

There is an influx pouring in upon the earth to-day from the subjective reincarnationists that bodes much trouble if it be not checked. India has steadily sunk in the grade of her spiritual powers because of it, for in the place of the pure doctrine of the Vedantic system the priestly perversion is taken in its place as the original ideality. In Europe and America the teachers of the Wisdom Divine are confounding the moral sentiments that are the basis of spiritual unfoldment with the superstitions engendered by the priesthood, and ere the people of these countries are aware they will be invaded by the hosts of the lower heavens who still are seeking re-embodiment, and a carnival of licentiousness may be inaugurated that will sink these countries as low in the scale as India has ever been. The spiritual thought of the people is the standard of its grade in knowledge, and to a soul imbued with the idea of reincarnation to escape the consequences of a bad karma, all avenues are legitimate, and a parentage of adultery is as welcome as the doorway of wedlock.

To teach the theory of reincarnation is to hold the mind solely to the earth plane, and the mind cannot rise to the spiritual realms of thought. To flood the west with the reincarnation theories is to invite an eruption of the vilest grades in spirit life, and no wonder that the higher spheres of spirit are averse to it, and are doing all they can to prevent it and to counteract its dire effects upon the present races of mankind upon earth. The western world has had a deluge of Oriental feudalism to counterbalance its own crude conceptions of the divine nature, but neither formula has proven sufficient to protect its believers from flagrant impositions in the name of their Gods. The Oriental influx is seized upon by the souls in darkness or despair and labeled by various names as well as taught by numerous schools of philosophy each of whom only appreciates a portion of the truth. Some of them deny the individual existence of anything but the impersonal supreme, and imagine they will be absorbed in the divine ocean of spirit upon their transition to the world of soul life, losing consciousness and individuality. Others are sure that the spiritual world can have no direct influx into the sphere of conscious life upon earth, and teach that such an idea is an insane delusion. Others again, are so anxious to become united to the God-head that they forget the great law of spiritual unfoldment, and seek to hurry matters generally ending in disappointment or shame and disgrace.

Fanaticism is slowly rearing its hideous face in the spiritual movement, and the most absurd dogmas regarding the power of the spirit to control material forces are freely advocated. The most irrational ideas of the control of spiritual powers by the will of ignorant and embodied souls are advanced, and the experiments made by the most intelligent minds in spirit to demonstrate the principles, are supposed to be in the regular order of evidence to support the theories of extravagant visionaries. The amount of intelligent ignorance current upon earth is one of the problems that eternity alone can solve. There are societies and systems innumerable for the study of the occult forces of nature, but hardly any two of them can agree touching the nature of the spirit or the true methods of its enfoldment. Even the wisest minds fail here to discriminate between the natural laws of nature and the artificial theories of man; they even go so far as to say that reincarnation takes place alternately in the male and female organism, but fortunately for poor humanity, Nature's law does not call for the return to the environment of earth after its escape from the atmosphere of earthly thoughts, nor does it ever need to express itself again in the realm of earthly embodiment. Its pathway to Nirvana, or perfect at-one-ment with its source of its being is away from earth, and happy the soul who is free from the idea of ever having to tread the path through mortal life again.

Compare the moral power of this thought with the idea that life is a ceaseless round of reincarnations upon earth and weigh well the difference. One exalts the spiritual consciousness to the highest heavens, while the other condemns the victim to perpetual despair. For the thought of return in spirit to earthly environment cannot fail to discourage, eventually, the most heroic soul and will ultimately lead it to despair. It is only when the soul experiences this truth, that it gives up all hope, and is capable of committing any crime known to the calendar of crimes. The western nations have been the prey of a senseless belief in a return to a physical body, and her numerous hosts of her ignorant children hover over the earth awaiting the resurrection morn, yet they can do but little harm compared with the souls whose thoughts are held upon the earth as they strive to impress the mortals here to furnish avenues for the spirit to enter again to expiate a bad karma.

Our western societies of occult thought should be aware that the projection of thought upon earth by a concentrated effort of the will must have its effect here and if that thought be upon a plane of error, it will take many long years ere its effect will be removed, and as nature's laws deny reincarnation to the spirit, they should reflect and meditate seriously upon this subject, before they lend themselves as willing tools to this erroneous theory of occult law, as taught by the "wisdom of man" and not of God, and His sacred hierophants, of the higher realms of being, who have returned to the world through thought transference warning the people not to trust in the wisdom of man, whose interpretation of the laws of spirit, must be vain until he has arrived to that degree of knowledge whereby he knows the nature and office of spirit and form in the spheres of universal being. A BABYLONIAN BOOK OF JOB.

With Some Highly Interesting Particulars in Reference Thereto.

That Hebrew literature, as represented in the bible, has derived much from Babylonian traditions embodied in works of Assyrian poetry, history, and law is not a new idea. It receives confirmation from the discovery in the library of Assyrian King Ashurbanapal (668-626 B. C.) of a work strikingly parallel to the Hebrew Book of Job. But while the Book of Job as we know it dates back about 400 B. C., the Assyrian work can not have originated later than 2000 B. C. In The Contemporary Review (December) the learned Orientalist, Morris Jastrow, Jr., professor of Semitic languages in the University of Pennsylvania, speaks as follows of the probable connection between the Hebrew and Babylonian books,

"While there is no evidence of any direct connection between the biblical and Babylonian tales, the great age of the Babylonian parallel, taken in connection with what we now know of the wanderings of Babylonian myths and legends throughout the East as a result of the conquests of Babylonian and Assyrian rulers, as well as through the extension of commercial relations between Babylonia and the surrounding countries, makes it quite possible that the Babylonian tale was a prototype of the Job story. This becomes more plausible when we recall that Job is not pictured as a Hebrew in the book, but lives in the land of Uz, which is probably to be sought in the region of Edom. The names of his three friends are foreign, and their homes are Arabia. The story, therefore, came to the Hebrews through their intercourse with the surrounding nations—perhaps directly from Edom; and in adopting it they strove to give it a Hebraic flavor, its foreign stamp is unmistakable. It ought not, therefore, to be a matter of surprise to come across this tale, or a strikingly similar one elsewhere, and if the Hebrews obtained it from the Edomites, there is no inherent reason why it should not have come to the Edomites from a region still farther to the east."

The Babylonian Job is Tabi-utul-Bel, King of Nippur, whose name means "good is the protection of the god Bel." The King, whose period must have been earlier than 200 B. C., was noted for his piety. In the text he dwells, as did Job, upon his devotion to the Supreme Being, but in spite of his zeal and piety he is afflicted with a terrible disease, of which Professor Jastrow writs as follows:

"He is smitten with a painful disease, which in accordance with the current views was regarded as a symptom of divine displeasure. The ordinary means resorted to in order to drive out of one's own body the demons who were regarded as the cause of disease were of no avail. The priestly exorcisers were powerless; the official diviners were unable to secure any omens through which to determine the duration of the king's sufferings. In his distress Tabi-utul-Bel appeals directly to Bel, pours forth his complaint, and contrasts his service of the gods with the recompense meted out to him."

This painful disease is only at last healed by the providential interposition of Bel. Thus:

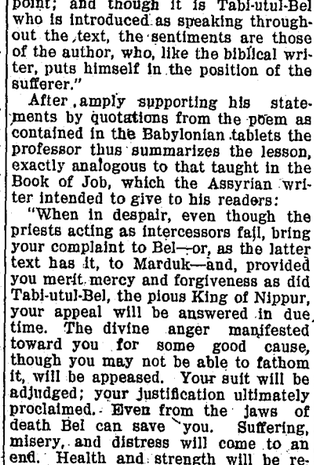
"Tabi-utul-Bel describes his sufferings in such detail as to permit us with due allowance for poetical exaggerations to diagnose his ailment as a complete paralysis, involving the loss of eyesight, hearing, and locomotion. Incidentally to this lament he manifests his humble and contrite spirit and admits the possibility that he may have unwittingly aroused the anger of the gods by acts or sentiments that he thought would be pleasing to them. His prayer is answered, and corresponding to the description of his sufferings he proceeds to enumerate how one sense after the other is restored to him, how his strength returns and with it his cheerfulness. The text closes as it began, with a hymn of joy and thanksgiving, to which there is added the moral of the tale, namely, when in distress not to despair, even though priests seem powerless. Help from the gods will come in due time."

The work is distinctly didactic, and in this way exactly parallel to the style of the Hebrew Book of Job, of which the professor writes:

"The Book of Job, a philosophical poem dealing with the fundamental problems of human suffering and divine justice, will always hold its place in literature as the work of a master mind, quite apart from its religious significance. In its tone and spirit, and more particularly in its veiled skepticism, it is more modern than most of the books of the Old Testament—indeed, next to Ecclesiastes, where the skepticism is more pronounced, the most modern. The Book of Job in its present form can hardly be older than 400 B. C., but the underlying story of the pious man overwhelmed by misfortune must have been current much earlier. The story, which is of popular origin, is used by the author of the book merely as a medium for introducing us to his philosophy of life, to his views of sin and suffering, and of divine guidance."

Similarly of the story of Tabi-utul-Bel we read:

"The story is told for the sake of the lesson that it teaches. Our author, therefore, like the author of the Book of Job, uses the story of Tabi-utul-Bel as an illustration of certain doctrines which he desires to emphasize. The interesting feature of the text is therefore not so much the story as the author's reflections, placed by him in the mouth of the king in connection with the king's complaints. He reveals to us in this way his philosophy of life, or—if we choose—his theological standpoint; and though it is Tabi-utul-Bel who is introduced as speaking throughout the text, the sentiments are those of the author, who, like the biblical writer, puts himself in the position of the sufferer."



After amply supporting his statements by quotations from the poem as contained in the Babylonian tablets the professor thus summarizes the lesson, exactly analogous to that taught in the Book of Job, which the Assyrian writer intended to give to his readers:

"When in despair, even though the priests acting as intercessors fail, bring your complaint to Bel—or, as the latter text has it, to Marduk—and, provided you merit mercy and forgiveness as did Tabi-utul-Bel, the pious King of Nippur, your appeal will be answered in due time. The divine anger manifested toward you for some good cause, though you may not be able to fathom it, will be appeased. Your suit will be adjudged; your justification ultimately proclaimed. Even from the jaws of death Bel can save you. Suffering, misery, and distress will come to an end. Health and strength will be restored to you, and you will live to sing the praises of your savior.

"Such is the story of Tabi-utul-Bel, as revealed by the curious text, and such the moral of the story, as the ancient author conceived it."—Literary Digest, January 5.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 35 CHICAGO, ILL., FEBRUARY 2, 1907 NO. 897

THE REV. MOSES HULL.

An Interesting and Impressive Sketch of His Remarkable Career.

Moses Hull was the son of James and Mary Hull. He was born in 1835, and was one of a family of sixteen children.

When Moses was a small boy his parents moved into Kosciusko county, Ind.—a part of Indiana which was then an uninhabited wilderness, except by Indians. School privileges were impossible. Moses' attendance at school was limited to less than two years. His father was a physician and surgeon of some note at that time. His mother being a natural nurse, and withal a very energetic and intelligent woman, soon became a helpmate in the practice of medicine and almost the sole manager of the home and farm.

The children had free access to the small but carefully selected library, and learned many things not usually understood by country children at that time. The hints and references they found in the books were eagerly followed, and every book on any subject they could buy or borrow, was almost if not quite committed to memory.

Dr. Hull and wife were members of the Baptist church, and their children were carefully taught in all the doctrines of that cult.

When Moses was sixteen years of age he chanced to form the acquaintance of a congregation of people known as United Brethren. Their teachings were more progressive than he had been accustomed to hearing, and became so attractive to him that during one of their revivals, he cast his lot in with theirs. He became so enthusiastic, and made so many speeches at their meetings that, before he was seventeen years old they had him ordained and sent him out a full-fledged minister in that denomination.

But he had learned to study all things, and he soon knew all that was contained in that church.

"The coming of the Lord," or Adventism, began to be preached in that part of the country and attracted universal attention. He attended the Advent meetings, then he commenced to study the scriptures and to his mind the Advents had the truth. He immediately united himself with them, was ordained, anointed, and sent out to preach the Second Advent of Jesus. His father's family were all converted to that belief, and two of his sisters are yet waiting and looking for the Lord.

He preached that doctrine until the summer of 1863, when he became thoroughly convinced of the truth of the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism.

From that time he never wavered in his belief of the new teachings. He wrote a great many books and held almost innumerable discussions on that subject.

He also wrote, preached and debated on all reforms.

He published papers in Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Maryland, and Massachusetts.

He was always a student and an investigator. He must know what was contained in the new movements. Every "reform" was thoroughly investigated and accepted or rejected according to its merits. He had not the slightest fear of public opinion. For him to be convinced that an idea was true, was to advocate it, and as far as possible, practice it.

Money could not hire him to preach what he did not believe, nor refrain from teaching what he conceived to be the truth. He always had the courage of his convictions. If a time came that he found he had been teaching error, he stopped it and made known that his mind had undergone a change.

He was of such a positive nature that he made both friends and enemies, yet his most bitter opposers generally "liked the man." He was so large-hearted he could never resist an appeal to his charity, nor turn his face away from any one asking comfort and sympathy. Many times he was misunderstood and maligned by those he was trying so hard to help.

He was authority on the Bible and had students among the leading clergy in several cities.

For forty years he tried to induce the Spiritualists to found a school where young men and young women could learn to present Spiritual truths in a pleasing and convincing manner.

In 1897 he got permission to try the idea in a camp-meeting at Mantua Station, Ohio, where he and Mrs. Hull, Mr. Andrew Weaver, and Mr. Hull's daughter, Mrs. Alfaratta Jahnke, established the first Spiritualist school, so far as is known, in the United States. They taught there six weeks each session for three years. They then moved their school to Lily Dale, N. Y., and taught six weeks each season in that camp for three years. In 1902, the Morris Pratt Temple was offered for a school building, if Moses Hull would act as its president. Upon no other condition could the Spiritualists have it. With Prof. Weaver as principal, Mrs. Mattie Hull as psychic teacher, and Mrs. Jahnke as teacher of oratory, they accepted the charge, and have done all in their power to build up a successful school that will be an honor to Spiritualism and an ornament to Whitewater.

Mr. Hull has been compelled to spend the most of his time out in the world preaching and talking to get people interested in sending pupils and furnishing means with which to carry it on. He and his estimable wife, Mattie, have toiled and traveled, and suffered privations that the school might live. He would say: "I have prayed for a school forty years, and now we have one I must work to keep it alive while I live," and he kept his word. He was preaching three times a day, three days before he left his body. He and Mattie donated their services to the school. Every cent they earned that they were not obliged to use for expenses was given to the school notwithstanding they were obliged to face cruel opposition from those who were envious and jealous.

For years Mr. Hull has been closely allied with the labor movement. He claimed that to be a Spiritualist in the true sense, meant to be a worker in all reforms. I have known him fifty-two years, and I have always found him earnestly engaged in trying to ameliorate the conditions of humanity. Of late years he had been working with the Socialist movement, and the Socialists of his district at the last election honored him by nominating him for Congress. He re-

Was He Obsessed?

A Problem Very Difficult of Solution.

Something in the Occult Line That Will Puzzle the Philosophers—A Case That Will Go Down in History as Most Peculiar—A Thug While Asleep—A Youth, Somnambulist, Breaks Into Saloon, Attacking Owner and Wife—Memory of Deed Blank—Psychic Marvel, With Respectable Young Man as Burglar, Proved in Court.

Somnambulistic thuggery [as set forth in the Chicago Record-Herald] is excusable in the eyes of the law. For when Ross Freeman broke into Fred Folger's saloon at Armour avenue and Fortieth street, as New Year's day was dawning, and attacked the saloon-keeper in his bed room, and terribly beat Mrs. Folger, he was sound asleep and therefore unaccountable, according to the judgment pronounced by Judge W. N. Cottrell of the Municipal Court yesterday.

The case in which Freeman—a refined-looking youth of 20—was acquitted on the ground of somnambulism after being captured red-handed, and with a mask in his pocket, is unprecedented in court annals, and presents one of the most remarkable instances in the records of psychology.

With apparently not the slightest shred upon which to hang a defense except good character and a solemn declaration that he had not the slightest recollection of any of the acts attributed to him, science stepped into the breach with the somnabulism theory.

Judge Himself a Witness.

And to cap the climax of a mass of testimony, expert and otherwise, on somnambulism, Judge Cottrell himself became a witness for the accused youth and, drawing upon an experience of his own as a sleepwalker, unqualifiedly acquitted Freeman against the protestations of the complainant and those who had aided in the capture of the accused man.

It was not until Dr. Augustus A. O'Neil, testifying as an expert, had demonstrated by authorities that somnambulism, instead of being an evidence of weakness of intellect or other shortcoming in the human brain, was, on the contrary, in most instances, associated with genius, that Judge Cottrell, amid the laughter of the attorneys, confessed himself to have been a sleepwalker, and related his experience.

"This is the most remarkable case I ever heard of," he said, "and you were fortunate in having the case come before a judge who can realize and appreciate the possibility of what a person may do while in a somnambulistic state, for since we have had evidence here that somnambulism is associated with genius, I am free to admit that I also have been a sleepwalker."

Judge Tells Experience.

The judge related that on one occasion he had retired as usual and went to sleep, and when he awoke several hours later he found himself on a sofa in another room of the house, partially dressed and with a pipe in his hand preparing to take a smoke. Of his actions from the time he fell asleep until he awoke on the couch, he said, he had not even the very faintest recollection.

Young Freeman wept as he shook the judge's hand after his acquittal and a score of women, who among the large number of neighbors and friends of the Freemans had come to testify to the defendant's good character, also wept and crowded around the youth to congratulate him.

It was shortly after 4 o'clock on the morning of New Year's day that Fred Folger, asleep in his bedroom off the kitchen back of his saloon at 4001 Armour avenue, was suddenly awakened by a noise. Mr. Folger weighs 300 pounds, and his movements are therefore rather deliberate. He turned over slowly, and in the darkness made out the figure of a man standing near a trunk in the corner of the room.

With a shout he started to climb out of bed to get a revolver from the dresser, but before he reached it the man, without a word, walked to him and began raining blows upon him. Although of rather slight build, he seemed to possess a demon's strength, and hurled the unwieldy form of Folger back upon the bed. Then he quietly picked up the pillows as if searching for something, but Folger again started out of bed, and the two men grappled and struggled in the darkness out of the room and into the kitchen, where Mrs. Folger, who had been aroused and left her own bedroom, was trying to strike a light.

Intruder Beats Woman.

When the struggling men bumped against her the intruder turned upon the woman, and, while Folger fled through a side door into a hallway and began calling for help, the assailant backed Mrs. Folger against a wall and struck her blow after blow in the face. Folger's cries and the screams of the woman brought from an upstairs room of the house Cornelius Angstrum, an ex-policeman and a giant in stature, who found the saloon-keeper holding the door on the outside to prevent, as he explained, the assailant's escape, while his wife apparently was being murdered within.

When Angstrum rushed into the room and attacked the assailant the latter fought like a maniac, and it was not until a fireman and several neighbors had arrived that he was overpowered and thrown to the floor. There he lay as if in a stupor, with his eyes closed most of the time. Up to this time he had not uttered a word, and for some minutes after his captors began questioning him he made no reply. When asked where he lived he quietly gave the correct address, 3436 Vernon avenue, but when asked his name his answers were so incoherent that he could not be understood.

Mask in His Pocket.

Then he was taken to the police station and booked for burglary and assault with intent to kill. No weapon of any kind was found upon him, but in the pocket of his overcoat was found a black mask. The front door of the saloon had been broken and a large panel of glass shivered to bits. The crash awoke a woman on the third floor of the building, and it was this alse that aroused Mrs. Folger, who left her bedroom and went into the kitchen, where she stood when the intruder walked through the saloon and into the kitchen, passing between her and the stove without apparently noticing her and proceeding into her husband's bedroom.

All this and much more was told in court on January 3, when a continuance was taken for ten days. The evidence against the young prisoner seemed only too complete, and when he told his own story it sounded so much like the ordinary lie that even young Freeman's friends could see nothing for him but a penitentiary sentence. Some of them were impressed, however, with his manner, and convinced that he was not a burglar, and they advised his mother to engage an attorney and sift the matter to the bottom.

Freeman's Strange Story.

Freeman's story is one of the strangest ever told in court. On New Year's eve, he said, he went downtown to see the festivities. On the street a man handed him a ticket to the ball of the Great Northern Hotel employees at the Coliseum Annex. He went there, and bought a mask. He met and danced with Grace Kelleher of 6438 Bishop St., and two of her friends, Elsie Steeve, 940 West Thirty-fifth place, and Emma Barz, 933 West Thirty-fifth place.

When he offered to escort Miss Kelleher home she told him two young men were going home with the other girls and proposed that they all go together. The two young men were introduced to him. One of them was tall and gave the name of Schultz. None of the girls seemed to like him.

In the weird drama enacted later in the night Schultz is credited with having played some mysterious part, and although four detectives searched for him for ten days he has not been found. The other man gave his name to one of the girls as Peter Moore, and his address as 5545 Wentworth avenue, but search for him has also been in vain.

They Go to Saloon.

According to the story of Freeman, corroborated by the three young women, they took a car and went to the house of Miss Barz, who had invited her two friends to remain with her for the night. After parting from the young women, so Freeman's story runs, he and the men walked about a block, in which direction he is not certain, and then went into a saloon and ordered beer.

He says that as the tall man pushed his beer over to him he noticed that he held his hand over it, but thought nothing of it at the time. He drank half the beer and from that time the rest of the night is a blank.

His last recollection is that he set the beer down and from that moment he knew nothing until he found himself in a cell at the police station, and asked why he had been arrested. This he says he did not learn until his sister called at the station in the afternoon.

His Record Good.

Neighbors and friends of the family came forward and representatives of the Crane Manufacturing Company, where Freeman is employed, came to his aid, convinced that whatever was the solution of the matter he was not a burglar. All gave him the highest praise, and while he was in court being tried a letter was brought to his sister from his employers notifying him of a promotion and an advance in salary. His habits had always been exemplary and he had never before been involved in any difficulty. About the only places he ever went would be to some dance, and he seldom drank.

It was after the continuance had been taken that Attorney Quin O'Brien was engaged to defend the youth. He listened to the young man's story and then verified it. Freeman, in company with the attorney, visited every saloon in the vicinity, but he failed to identify any of them as the one in which he drank with the two men.

Proved by Tests.

It was not until Attorney O'Brien was informed Freeman was a somnambulist that he took steps toward an investigation along this line of defense.

After testing his client in various ways and failing to break down his story in the smallest particular, he took him to a hypnotist, but Freeman could not be hypnotized. Dr. Augustus A. O'Neil was then consulted, and became convinced after an examination, that Freeman was a victim of the phenomena of somnambulism. Both his brother, who is dead, and his sister were somnambulists in their youth, according to the mother, and Attorney O'Brien set about getting evidence about somnambulism.

As a coincidence the attorney himself was the champion sleepwalker of his neighborhood when a boy, and on that account as he grew up had given considerable study to the subject. Dr. O'Neil found authorities to show that there was nothing in Freeman's actions which might not have been done by a somnambulist.

Mother Gives Proof.

Dr. O'Neil testified and produced proof of many remarkable things done by somnambulists, and the defendant's father told of instances in which he had walked in his sleep. An unexpected witness in favor of the somnambulism theory appeared in the person of Policeman Patrick Hanrahan, who is attached to Judge Cottrell's court. He told of his Ohio friend, who, he said, would get up in the night and dress and hitch up his team, and who at times even went so far as to go swimming while asleep. Instances of remarkable work done by men of genius in their sleep also were cited.

It was at this point that Judge Cottrell made the startling announcement that he, too, had been a victim of the phenomenon, and he decided there was sufficient doubt as to Freeman's guilt to warrant his acquittal.

Before formally discharging the youth the court called Saloon-keeper Folger and ex-Policeman Angstrum forward and asked them what they thought of his proposed course.

"Asleep!" exclaimed Folger. "Asleep! Look at that woman's face," pointing to Mrs. Folger, whose features still show the result of the blows she received. "Nobody can tell me that the man who did that was asleep. That's all nonsense."

Freeman's Memory Blank.

The whole thing is a deep, deep mystery to me," said Ross Freeman at his home last night. "It seemed to me when I was arraigned in court that I was listening to a tale of the wrong doings and arrest of another person. I cannot account in any way for what they say I did New Year's morning. I can distinctly remember half of a glass of beer that one of the two strangers ordered in the saloon on Halsted street. The other half I can see now standing on the bar. As regards what happened after drinking my memory is a blank.

"The first I knew of having committed any offense to anyone was when the turnkey at the station rapped the soles of my shoes and gruffly told me to get up if I wanted anything to eat. My clothes were arranged in an orderly manner."

"It would not have done the community a particle of good or have benefited the public in any way to have incarcerated the boy," Judge Cottrell declared last night. "The evidence showed conclusively that he was of a good family, had always behaved himself heretofore and that he was the easy dupe of two men he met for the first time the evening of the unfortunate occurrence."

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

Genius always gives its best first; prudence at last.—Lavater.

THE SACRED CAT.

And the Prominent Part It Is Playing in "Cultured" Boston—The Trenchant Views of Mrs. M. C. Barrett on the Subject.

Some of the ladies in Boston and vicinity are returning to the worship of Egyptian gods. They are to have a cats' cemetery. There is to be a cemetery corporation, "which will probably be conducted just the same as any ordinary cemetery corporation," says the Boston Globe. "As quickly as the corporation is perfected, lots will probably be sold to any one who wishes to buy them. Monuments with such inscriptions as 'Faithful to the end,' will probably be erected over the remains of pet cats and dogs.

"It is believed by those interested in the movement that this is the first time that a movement has been started to lay out such a cemetery in this country. Such cemeteries, it is stated, are common in some parts of England and other countries."

Women with means will spend money to tie up real estate which shall be devoted to the bodies of pet cats and dogs, and to erect costly monuments to their memories, while the bodies of the poor woman's babies are buried in the potter's field, and she has not a house so comfortable as the dog's kennel for her living children.

One is reminded of the old problem that was given to a boy to solve: If the frog is at the bottom of a well so many feet deep, and he jumps a certain number of feet and falls back so many more, how long will it take him to get out of the well? The boy filled both sides of his slate with figures and then said, "If I had one more inch on that slate, I would have that frog in h—."

If, while crematories are being erected in various parts of the country for the sanitary, kindly and spiritual disposition of the dead, the Catholics continue to forbid cremation, and the influential, wealthy ladies set aside valuable ground for the bodies of animals, where will the Frog of Progress land? If he does not get clear down to h—, he certainly will never get out of the well.

This move is a discouraging indication of materialism. It is quite natural and proper to have a deep affection for faithful animals. Few people are inclined to dispute their right to a surviving spirit. They deserve to rise beyond death if human beings do; but it is not kind to any animal—and the writer does not believe it is kind to any human being—to place his body in the ground, fasten it there with a marble shaft, submit it to the horrid process of gradual disintegration, and force that animal or individual to forever be a detriment to future generations by standing upon good soil and pointing the finger of death—death in its worst form—at every one who passes by.

How much kinder and more loving it would be to give the unmutilated body to the purification of the flames—release the living spirit and let it wend its way onward and upward. Keep the bright, living memory before the world and before the immediate friends. A photograph in the home is better than a cold spot of earth outside. Flowers to brighten the breakfast table in loving memory of the one who has gone, thus giving him an opportunity to shed his cheerful presence upon those whom he has left behind, are more useful and beautiful than flowers on a grave. To subscribe for Angell's little paper, "Our Dumb Animals," for some child or friend in memory of Tommy or Fluff is putting money to a more sensible use than sinking it in a piece of unresponsive marble, and is allowing Tommy or Fluff to influence that child or friend, and through him others, to show more kindness to living animals than he perhaps otherwise would.

To chain one's affection to a graveyard is to turn out of doors, out of the home and its privileges, even the memory of the one who has passed through the gates of death. Wouldn't it be finer to buy a block of stone in an institution devoted to education in the form of art or literature, or even commerce, and carve in that stone the name and such data as it is desirable to preserve, than to buy a useless slab of marble to stand like a grim sentinel of death, in a grim lot devoted to the grim purpose of holding down a deserted body that is trying to escape as best it can?

The Egyptians, in their groping after the secrets of life and death, worshiped the white cat, believing, fearing that their ancestors were embodied therein. A man or woman today, if he or she is so unfortunate as to be a materialist, should still be intelligent enough to create a semblance of immortality for his loved ones by keeping their memory alive, not hopelessly dead and buried in the ground. And if a believer in the triumph of the spirit over death, let him employ every means to assist the living, spiritual influence of his departed friends and relatives to permeate society.

Mrs. Jennie Hagan-Brown.

Her Passage to Spirit Life, at Arlington, Nebraska.—A Message from the Veteran Moses Hull.

Mrs. Brown was a most remarkable woman. Her lectures and improvisations were marvels of excellence; indeed some of her poems have never been excelled, so full of that vibration that charms the mind. The following letter explains her transition to spirit life:

To the Editor:—I regret to report to you and her many friends, that Mrs. Jennie Hagan-Brown, after a very short illness from blood poison, passed to the spirit world, January 19. I am glad to say Mr. Brown was with her during her last days. Mrs. Brown arrived here January 6, from her home at El Campos, Texas, and gave the oration at Mrs. Jane M. Unthank's funeral—(my mother) the same day. After visiting and resting for a few days among old acquaintances and friends who loved her and knew her since a child of eleven years, she visited a day or two with friends in Blair, returning here Jan. 12, all the time complaining of lameness from a bruise on her knee, caused by falling down some steps at her home, not awakening to the real danger till too late. She passed quietly and peacefully away. Mr. Brown takes the remains to El Campos.

O. N. UNTHANK.

Arlington, Neb.

The following poems came spontaneously to Mrs. Brown, on one occasion while visiting the home of The Progressive Thinker:

LOVE.

I'd give the world if I could prove
My love so fond and true;
Wherever I'm compelled to rove,
My heart will stay with you.

Refrain—
My heart will stay, my heart will stay,
my heart will stay with you.

Oh, if by chance some cruel fate
Should place us wide apart,
Love still will hold its own estate,
The empire of my heart.

No matter what this world may bring
Of sorrow, loss or gain,
If I have cause to weep or sing,
I'll love you just the same.

Love knows its own when once they've met,
No matter when, or where,
It never, never will forget,
But builds its empire there.

OCTOBER.

October has a history,
Wrapped in shrouds of mystery
That none are really able
To fully penetrate;
From her colors,
Soft and mazy,
From her sunlight
Warm and lazy,
From her forests
Dim and hazy,
Comes a subtile something near.
We almost seem to feel it,
Yet she does not quite reveal it,
In her whispering
To our listening,
Yet we know that Autumn's here.

TO YOU.

If the road seems long,
And the dust is deep;
If the glad hours fly,
And the sad hours creep,
Don't feel that your path
Is from others apart,
But just brush the dust-germs
Away from your heart.

If you feel you're alone
In this cold world of ours,
That the pathway is thorny,
And few are the flowers,
Just gather the few
And their perfume impart
To others who need it—
It will strengthen your heart.

If you think that this world
Is harsh and unjust,
That it's all turned against you,
A sinister trust.
Just cast by those shadows
And take a new start,
By helping your brother,
Rub the dust from your heart.

I am speaking to you
Who, discouraged to-day,
Are thinking within
That this life does not pay;
To you who are saddened,
Disconsolate, blue,
I am saying, be hopeful,
Heart shadows won't do!

Rejoice that you're living
In this great universe,
Where life is a blessing,
And never a curse
If only we make it
Ennobled and true
You who are blighted with heartrust,
I'm speaking to you.

You man, or you woman,
The world is here—take it!
Your world is your own,
So beware what you make it.
A beautiful flower wreath
All fresh with God's dew,
Or poor withered and dust-stained,
I leave that with you.

AZRAEL.

Bright-eyed came Azrael
Where a little child lay asleep,
With its pure and tranquil breath,
It never awoke to weep,
As it felt the solemn sweep
Of the robe of the Angel of Death.

Smiling came Azrael
Where an old man lay at rest,
Wrinkled with age and pain
And wearied his heaving breast.
A touch of the clam, white hand,
Peace swept over the weary man.

Calm came the Angel of Death,
To the couch where a woman lay;
The tears on her cheek declared
How grief ate her heart away;
The Angel said, "Thou shalt be spared,"
And bore her to regions away.

Oh! well may we whisper Thy name,
As we know thee of terror bereft;
Oh, thou masterful Angel of Peace,
To our panting, struggling breath.
Thy presence brings holy release,
Sweet Azrael, Angel of Death!

A MESSAGE FROM MOSES HULL.

Through the Mediumship of Mrs. C. A Sprague, at Washington, D. C., Sunday Morning, January 20, 1907, after an address by Mr. E. W. Sprague.

(Reported for The Progressive Thinker by Walter P. Williams.)

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—Before I begin my work this morning, I wish to speak of one that many of you know, and know to love, and that is our old friend and co-worker, Moses Hull. Last Friday morning we received a letter from Whitewater, Wisconsin, from the school of which he is the president, stating that Prof. Weaver had received a telegram telling of the transition of Moses Hull, in San Jose, California. The news shocked us, and has cast a shadow over us. We know how much he is needed here. He is certainly needed for the benefit of the school. The cause needs him, but he will not let his work end here; his work will go on, perhaps with a greater power, and, I hope, with greater force than ever before. I hope that some one may rise up to take his place in the school.

Last year that dear old man and his noble little wife—both along in years—started out and made a trip from Wisconsin to California, down through Mexico and Texas, then back to Wisconsin. We were there at the school in May when they returned. They worked hard and faithfully all the months they were gone, and that dear couple sent in to the school $500.

Where is there another worker in the field who would do that? Where are the ones who will now take the interest that couple has taken? This year they started out with the same expectation, and now he has been called to the higher life, when we needed him, and, dear friends, Mattie, his sweet little companion needs your love, your sympathy, and I am going to ask everyone of you that can do so to do something to assist them in that school work, for there is where he has given his life, as we might say, for the benefit of the cause and to benefit that school.

Yesterday I was reading a letter in The Progressive Thinker, perhaps his last letter to us as a mortal, saying that in Portland, Oregon, he received forty dollars in the collections above his expenses, which he sent to the school. The school needs your assistance, and, in the name of heaven, you as Spiritualists know that the school is needed. There is nothing in the world that our Cause needs more than that school.

We had a letter from dear Mrs. Weaver, its secretary, yesterday saying that Mattie wrote the day before Moses passed over, saying that "If the worst comes I will try and be brave and strong to bear it and, if I can, I will go on with the work."

Friends, let us send out our thought in silent prayer to Mattie Hull for a few moments before I begin my work, for we know she needs it.

(During the silence that followed, the medium was entranced, and spoke as follows:)

Yes, dear friends, I thank you for this thought. I heard this medium speak, and I know that it came from the depths of her soul. I am not dead, I live. I am working; I am going to work the same on this side of life that I did while here, and I am glad this medium has sent out the appeal to you for the assistance of your good thoughts to my beloved wife. God bless you, God bless her. We will all stand together and will sustain her in this work, and I am going to say this morning that though I have left that earthly shell, I am still Moses Hull, and I am here to declare to you that I know now that a spirit can return, and I know that I can go on with this glorious work. I thank you all for this privilege. Though not as strong as I hope to be, I am living still and I am ready to do the work. I trust that I may place my mantle on some one who will take a deeper interest in the school and carry on the work, for I have found as I touch this one this morning, understanding the law as I do, that it has helped me.

Dear friends, I am glad to meet you. This was unexpected to the medium, but I thank the guides who allowed me to come, for it has helped me. I shall come again.

May angels guide you all and lead you ever in the right, is my wish.

People may outgrow natural ignorance, but ignorance carefully cultivated, polished, propagated, and called divine truth, can rarely be outgrown, because it paralyzes the power of growth.—Moncure D. Conway.

REV MOSES HULL'S REMAINS LAID TO REST.

Remarkable Address Given by His Wife, Mattie E. Hull, at the Parlors, on South Second Street, San Jose, Cal., Monday, Jan. 14, at 2:30 p. m.

Mrs. Hull is frail in body but strong in the knowledge of the truth of Spiritualism; she feels the angel world is nearer since her dear one passed through the open door.

Robed in white, she arose in the full strength of her beautiful inspiration, and said Spiritualism does not dress death in black, but in white, as white is the combination of all colors, so Spiritualism is the combination of all truth, all love and all peace.

She spoke as none other could have done, of the life work of Moses Hull, of their thirty-seven years' work together, the last four years being devoted to the Morris Pratt School at Whitewater, Wis.

The latter portion of her discourse gave evidence of direct inspiration from the lately arisen spirit, asking the loving thoughts and strength from those present in behalf of the loved one he had left, and adding he should open his book where he closed it here. He also exhorted Spiritualists to be loyal to the cause—they could render him no greater tribute than to be faithful to the cause for which he had labored and should continue to labor in the larger field of expression.

Attorney Wm. H. Rogers, former resident of Wisconsin, and trustee of Morris Pratt School of Whitewater, of which Mr. Hull had been president since its inception, followed Mrs. Hull with some appropriate remarks, adding he did not wish to mar the beautiful effect of the sermon given by Mrs. Hull, by a lengthy discourse. The bearers were Wm. H. Rogers, Dr. W. W. Fraser, Joseph Murray, W. D. J. Hambly, John Harker and W. B. Stone.

Having been acquainted with Rev. Moses Hull, and keeping in close touch with his work since the summer of 1883, I wish to quote what was sincerely part of his every day life and action: "I would die happy if I knew the world was made better by my having lived in it."

In answer let me add:

Yes, the world has been made better
By thy noble work while here,
And the spirit world seems clearer
By the star implanted there.

OUR MOSES AND OUR JENNIE.

A Touching and Appropriate Poem to the Arisen Moses Hull and Jennie Hagan Brown.

Come and weep with me, my brothers and my sisters, one and all,
For our Moses and our Jennie have responded to the call,
And so greatly we will miss them in the field of labor here—
But we know they will be welcome in that higher working sphere.

Come and smile with me, my brothers and my sisters bowed in grief,
For the brother and the sister who have passed to their relief;
We will miss their earthly presence with a depth of feeling great,
But let's smile up at their freedom from the bonds of mortal state.

Come and laugh with me, my brothers and my sisters, for we know
That their duties, with their hardships and their struggles here below,
For the cause of Truth Immortal have a rich reward insured,
And they each have found advancement for the sufferings endured.

Come and shout with me, my brothers and my sisters, in high glee!
O'er the work they each accomplished e'er transition set them free,
And let's band ourselves the firmer as a unit in the cause,
For though they have gone on higher, their great labor will not pause.

Come and bow with me, my brothers and my sisters: not in tears,
But in silent approbation for their services for years.
None could be more true and faithful to the Cause they held most dear.
Let us bow in prayerful silence o'er their well-done duties here.

DR. T. WILKINS.

ceived more votes than he expected.

The last of October, 1906, he and Mrs. Hull started on their annual trip to California. The people wherever they stopped gave them hearty greeting, sometimes amounting almost to ovations. He sent all the money he received, except enough for railroad fare, to the school; but it seems his work is ended as a mortal. After two days' sickness he passed to the higher life, on January 11, five days before he would have reached his seventy-second year. He leaves a wife, four daughters, an adopted son, thirteen grand children, two great-grandchildren, two brothers and two sisters to carry on the work he has been engaged in for so many years.

We mourn not as those without hope. We know he has only gone a little in advance. Though we cannot see him in the physical body we know he is with us. While he cannot preach personally to the people he can inspire some who can and we expect to hear him again. We know he is with us as of old.

A Severe Shock to Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—The announcement of the passing to spirit life of our much beloved brother, Moses Hull, is, to state it mildly, a severe shock to his numerous friends here in the East.

However great may be his gain, our loss as Spiritualists is even greater. He was a great man and a tremendous power. Thousands have been led to a knowledge of Spiritualism through his convincing logic and his ever happy and genial manner of stating it.

We all knew him well, but it will be a long time before we can come to a full realization of the value of his labors and devotion to the cause in which he toiled so earnestly and constantly.

Men may rise up to take his place, but it will be difficult for any to completely fill it.

SPIRITUALISM

Teaches the Absolute Necessity of Individual Unfoldment.

Remember, conditions are made by one's self.
Earth's riches and grandeur sometimes prove but pelf;
Then what are we making? What will be our goal—
A hut or a mansion prepared for our soul?

I want to ask all of those so-called developing mediums, those who agree to develop mediumship in their fellow-mortals for so much per lesson, or give their word to guarantee spiritual unfoldment for a stipulated number of dollars, usually to be paid in advance, what kind of a spirit home do you think you are building for your own soul over there?

How often do these tricksters ensnare the inexperienced, unthinking, passive sensitive, who, with their very soul athirst for light, more light, as to how to approach the sacred altar of truth, never suspecting for once that any human being, much less a Spiritualist medium, or at least one posing as such, would dare trifle with heaven's most sacred gift, mediumship.

The crying need of the hour is, not "a higher Spiritualism," for that is impossible of attainment. Spiritualism is something that is of superlative importance. It embraces and retains only that which is pure, chaste, noble, just and right, including all truth from whatever source. Sifting out the precious gems from the worthless dross, it rejects all error, all that is impure. It separates the wheat from the chaff, and declares that, as we live, so we are; as we sow, so must we reap. It holds all individually responsible for the manner in which they mold their respective lives, declaring that, even our inmost secret thoughts are either right or wrong. What more can anything do?

What is needed is for Spiritualists both public and private to realize the great responsibility resting upon them as the light bearers to the children of earth who are groping in spiritual darkness, who in their blindness fail to find the guide posts that point them into a haven of rest and peace; and to bring their lives up to the full standard which Spiritualism demands, which means a higher standard of morality, a higher premium on individuality, a spiritual unfoldment.

If Spiritualism teaches anything, it SURELY TEACHES THE ABSOLUTE NECESSITY OF INDIVIDUAL UNFOLDMENT. It does not mean that we are to be babes in arm always, but rather that we each one develop, unfold our own talent.

I am aware that some people think that only certain ones have any mediumistic gifts, but I think that every soul has at least one talent.

Spiritualism needs men and women on its rostrum who will not shun to declare the whole truth, who know, and are not afraid to tell it, that, when Spiritualism knocked the bottom out of the orthodox hell, it brought into view a far more reasonable, just and effective hell—the HELL OF CONSCIENCE for wrong-doing.

When Spiritualism unseated the orthodox God and tore his throne asunder, even demolishing the golden streets and jasper walls of heaven, it showed humanity a natural God of justice and equity, governing by Nature's law, demanding full weight on the balances of right from every soul; no forgiveness of sins, but every debtor must pay in full, even to the utmost farthing.

Instead of a crucified Savior on the cross of Calvary, dying for the sins of the people, each one must inevitably become his own savior by pruning all wrong from his life, digging, as it were, down into his own soul until he casts out all tendency to wrong-doing, cultivating a desire for right in regard to everything, thus growing away from sin instead of living in it.

Instead of preparing to die we must prepare to live in exactly the environment and condition that we build around ourselves. Instead of groping in blind faith, asking some one else to better our condition for us, it is not only our privilege but duty to demand knowledge whereby we can better our own condition.

With this knowledge comes the responsibility to pass it on to others.

Spiritualism needs and demands laborers on its rostrum whose very souls are aflame with love for humanity, who know and are able to demonstrate that, the oft-repeated question, "If a man die shall he live again?" has been answered in the affirmative again and again, all down through the ages past and present; who know, that the most important question facing humanity to-day is, what is life? The angels of wisdom and spiritual strength are calling back to us from beyond the portals, life is what we make it. Then let us, mediums and all, determine to let the world know what Spiritualism means to us.

Are we ever on the watch, sister, brother,
For some one that's struggling for the light;
Do we lend a helping hand to one another
At all times, as often as we might?

Do we heed the anxious queries, sister, brother,
Pouring in upon us day and night,
For words of instruction to unfold some other
Soul that's yearning for the spirit light?

Are our lives clean and pure, sister, brother?
Are we living daily in the right?
Do our actions prove our love for one another?
Do we speak the words that bring them light?

BECAUSE YOU'RE GONE.

Because you're gone, the sun no more
Seems shining brightly as of yore;
The wind is always blowing ill,
And everything around is still,
Because you're gone.

Because you're gone, no more I feel
The joy that used to o'er me steal
Whene'er you spoke some loving word,
Which now is longed for but not heard,
Because you're gone.

Because you're gone, I feel some day
That I shall take my homeward way
And wait for you on that fair shore,
For every day I love you more,
Because you're gone.

What Is Religion?

Mrs. Clara Watson Tells Vigorously Why She Is Not Religious—President Barrett Makes a Lucid and Comprehensive Explanation of His Position.

I am glad of the effort being made to purge Spiritualism of the dross of fakerism; glad for all efforts to remove the parasites that cling tenaciously to it. I am glad for all efforts to ennoble, elevate, uplift, comfort and enlighten humanity, but I regret the prevailing tendency and effort to narrow this great humanitarian, universal, progressive movement down to the circumscribed level of a church—another religious sect!—for every step in that direction tends to abridge liberty and in time dogmatism follows.

Hudson Tuttle says in his most interesting work, "Religion of Man, and Ethics of Science," that "knowledge carries man away from Churchianity," and we know this statement is in accord with facts. We all know the church rests upon, and is held in place by, the ignorance of its devotees. Why, then, in the name of reason should Spiritualists, the most of them having once escaped from the prison of churchianity where the mind was fettered, the soul dwarfed, the spirit cramped and the body debased, desire to crawl back again into the misama of intellectual stagnation, is past comprehension.

Why leading Spiritualists cannot have a higher and more exalted conception of human upliftment than a church, passes understanding! Why ape the old decaying system of the hoary past? Why not be original? Why not have names for our organizations that stand for something? Echo answers—why?

Hall of Instruction, Hall of Philosophy, Temple of Wisdom, Society for Human Betterment, School of Spiritual Attainment, School of Nature Study, Psychic Association, Humanitarian College, Progressive Institute, School of Scientific Research, or simple, Spiritualist Association or Society—any of these names have significance.

Already the effort at imitation of Christianity being adopted by Spiritualists is bearing Christian fruitage, although that body through its president disclaims being a branch of Christianity; however, the intellectual "thumbscrews are already being applied.

I read with saddened astonishment the letter of Dr. R. E. Coon in The Progressive Thinker, addressed to President Barrett. Mr. Coon reports that at one of his "ordinations" (for he claims three) Mr. Barrett gave the "charge" to him which made the affair complete, in which he (Mr. Barrett) said: "You will not be privileged under any circumstances at any time or place to attack a church, society, institution, etc., that has for its object the uplifting of humanity, nor will you be allowed to attack a preacher, priest or pope* * * who is trying to make humanity better," which is equivalent to saying thou shalt never do this, for "thus saith the Lord."

Who ever knew a church, preacher, priest or pope who did not claim their work was for humanity, or to make humanity better? Only think, a Spiritualist minister must not raise his voice against those terrible institutions called convents and nunneries that imprison and degrade for life the fairest flowers of womanhood; not allowed to attack the hideous doctrines of "total depravity," the "fall of man," the "miraculous conception," an infallible "blood atonement," the power of pope and priest to forgive sin for a money consideration, "salvation by faith," "belief first, morality secondary." Think of Spiritualist ministers not allowed to protest against the awful sin of putting millions and billions of money into temples or churches in which to worship an imaginary God, while people starve and freeze and welter in poverty beneath their very shadow. Spiritualists forbidden to cry aloud against revivalists in the interest of Christian churches, and to fill their own pockets, going about the country frightening children with their cruel words, telling them they are sinners and God is angry with them, and if they should die before morning without Jesus they will not go to heaven, as has been done in this city this winter, until the children cried and screamed with fear and terror!

Spiritualist ministers not allowed to attack the wrongs and errors so largely inwoven with the little good accomplished by the great Christian corporation or "church trust!"

Again Dr. Coon tells us he was "charged" that he would not be allowed to endorse any "false doctrine," deception, etc. Now who is to determine for Mr. Coon what is false doctrine? The Christian church which the N. S. A. is trying so hard to placate, declares the whole of Spiritualism to be false doctrine. If Dr. Coon should use his own reason upon matters of "doctrine" and should happen to disagree with N. S. A. authority, woe be unto him.

Again, Dr. Coon says, "If I was empowered to do so I could organize societies, churches," etc. And now let me ask this good brother, if you have ability to do this work and the avenues are open to you in which to accomplish it, wherein is your power abridged? Have you not the natural right to organize a society if you know how and the people want to be organized? If you have not, by reason of your being "ordained," then you have not equal rights with the unordained; for any common citizen, with the co-operation of the people interested can organize a society, and many Spiritualist societies have been thus organized. Authorized "missionaries" have not a monopoly or corner on this work.

And I would say further to you, brother worker, if your liberty, your freedom, your opportunities to do good have been abridged by being ordained, then in the interest of the greater good you could accomplish if you were free, take the advice of an independent sister worker and request your ordination to be revoked. Surely, my brother, according to your statement of conditions regarding your ordination, you are sadly handicapped. Get out into the open field of independent action then you can do good as the opportunity offers; then you will have the right, the natural right, to battle against error and wrong wherever found and none shall say you nay. Surely if you work without recompense, as you say you do, you will not lack opportunity. There is nothing in this world so glorious as to be free.

But where is Spiritualism drifting under organized power? Back to the "fleshpots of Egypt." It is noted that Missionary Sprague has instituted "consecration" services at the Nation's capital, and it is only a half-step from "consecration" to "sanctification," then "holiness," then popery.

Someone should keep an eye open for the exalted position of "Spiritualist Pope."

I wish, too, to refer to the "religious" place President Barrett assigns myself, with a few others of the non-religious ones. The effort to claim all Spiritualists "religious" is amusing to say the least. Religion seems to be a kind of elastic commodity that may be stretched to cover anything and all things, good, bad and indifferent. In a recent Progressive Thinker, Mr. Barrett quotes a number of different definitions of the word, among them that of Thomas Carlyle, who says, "Religion is labor." Again, "work is worship." Once more, "Blessed is he who has found his work." And then friend Barrett proceeds to say, "If Carlyle is right, then * * * Clara Watson is engaged in daily worship and full of pure religion."

I believe in working. I like to labor with both hands and brain, and have been a laborer all my life, but I never supposed that constituted me religious. If simply labor is religious, then a person need not necessarily be good, honest, upright and true, to be religious, for many bad people labor. If simply work is worship, then one need not necessarily be moral to be worshipful, and surely I am not pleased at being assigned to a religion that does not necessarily imply moral character. I hardly understand why good friend Barrett, who knows me personally, would not let me come in under Prof. Loveland's definition of religion, "service to humanity, and the maintenance of a pure moral character." This kind of religion includes of necessity both labor and goodness, and if I must be classed religious let me be enrolled under Mr. Loveland's banner.

But what does it matter, any way? Religion has so many difinitions that its significance is lost in confusion run riot. It is anything to anybody according to the mental and moral plane of development. Mr. Barrett says: "There is a wide difference between theology and religion." But if Carlyle, Matthew Arnold, Francis Ellingwood Abbott, Prof. Loveland, Hudson Tuttle, Harrison D. Barrett, Noah Webster, and scores of others have a right to define religion, then has not a Christian the same right to claim theology to be religion? and to me it seems just as consistent as to say, labor is religion.

Hudson Tuttle says: "Religion is the citadel in which emotional ignorance has entrenched itself and fought to the death every advance of knowledge * * which is the true savior of mankind." Again he says, "Religion in its highest meaning is devotion to the right, consecration to duty, unshrinking self-sacrifice." And so we want a religion "we pays our money and takes our choice." Really when everybody puts their own meaning to words, language loses its significance, and there is "confusion worse confounded." But the standard definition of Webster still holds good: "Recognition of God as an object of worship"; 2nd, "Any system of faith and worship."

CLARA WATSON.

Jamestown, N. Y.

RELIGION OR NO RELIGION

No one can read the foregoing article from the facile pen of the versatile Mrs. Clara Watson without being greatly benefited by her vigorous arguments. A careful study of her paragraphs will convince the most ardent religionist that in her wish to prove herself irreligious, she has made out the best possible case for religion, and for herself as a living daily exponent of it. The only difference as far as the writer can see, that exists between her views and those of the ablest exponents of Theism, lies in their respective choice—perhaps use—of terms.

In any event, this discussion is bound to eventuate in good to all who read the articles presented, pro and con, and is equally certain to make philology the most popular scientific study of the times. This will do all classes of people no end of good, for it will lead them to be more careful in their use of words, especially of such terms as have been traced to a common root through the knowledge gained of them through their derivatives and synonyms. The readers of The Progressive Thinker have good reason to be profoundly grateful to Editor Francis for making his paper a veritable University by presenting absolutely definite instruction upon all topics pertaining to the welfare of mankind.

The writer agrees in full with Mrs. Watson's excoriation of churchianity, and with her endorses all that Hudson Tuttle says on the same subject. What is true, however, in common between the flummeries of the church as an institution and pure religion? The former is an aristocratic system of sacerdotalisms, with forms and ceremonies galore, yet without one atom of real spirituality in any one of them. Prof. Loveland's definition of religion, taken from the words of the Apostle James, reveals the hiatus between churchianity and religion—"Good works and the maintenance of a pure moral character"—truly, here is religion, tersely and forcefully stated, and it is no wonder that the church, as an institution sinks into insignificance when contrasted with it.

Mrs. Watson is willing to be counted in as a religionist under this splendid definition, and if the writer ever left her out of his reckoning in connection with these words of Prof. Loveland, it was done inadvertently, and he apologizes for it. If the writer has ever failed to endorse the definition given by the apostle James, as lucidly interpreted by Prof. Loveland, he wishes to go on record as doing so now.

It is ever well to endeavor to be original—but is there anything original under the sun, save possibly the new ways of restating old truths? Religion, divested of its theological coverings, has ever meant "right living and right doing," in which is involved (to the writer) the highest possible morality. It originated in man's aspiration to ennoble his life, to broaden his sphere of usefulness, to enlarge his opportunities for doing good, and became an essential in his life through his yearning for knowledge of the whence and whither of his being.

It is true that there have been hundreds of systems of worship, many of them arising out of fear, while others rested upon ignorance and superstition. Is there anything in either one of these systems that prompts to the doing of good works unselfishly, or to the maintenance of a good moral character just for the sake of pure mental satisfaction? The true religionist seeks no reward in earthly emoluments, neither does he desire the praise of his fellows, nor yet a position of power in the state. His reward lies in his consciousness that he has tried to do good, and has kept selfishness out of his life in the doing. Is there anything more original than this line of thought or action? If so, the writer "awaits information in relation thereto." Is there anything harmful in adopting methods that have proved helpful to humanity in the passing of the centuries? Shall we ignore everything that has benefited our race simply because it was first used by some church, and was sent forth therefrom on its beneficent errands? Would it not be the height of bigotry, prejudice and even ignorance for us to cast away good things by reason of their former church associations? The writer believes in making use of every possible means, provided the same be legitimate and ethical, that will aid humanity in its struggle upward. With Whittier, he holds—

"For all of good the Past hath had,
Remains to make our own time glad;
Our common daily life divine
And every land a Palestine!"

In all of the writer's public work, he has consistently pleaded for an equal and uniform rate of taxation for all church and ecclesiastical school property. He has likewise opposed half-rates for all clergymen, and protested vigorously against sectarian instruction in our public schools. He has also gone on record with earnest protests against the appointment of chaplains in the army and navy, also by the National Congress and State Legislatures. If those things constitute truckling to church influence, and a seeking to ape church methods, what, in the name of all that is just and right, would the opposite be?

Right here is the point—the writer believes in making use of existing methods, in the way of civil enactments, for the purpose of gaining a worthy end, provided, of course, that no principle be violated thereby. He has no objection to the terms or names suggested by Sister Watson, but he does venture to ask why they are so much better than those which will, and do, give Spiritualism and its followers equal rights and privileges under the law, with all other classes of people? What do we gain by seeking to use strange terms, and by following methods that place our movement outside of the pale of legal recognition? The writer has the temerity to believe that the propagandism of the principles of Spiritualism will prove beneficent to the human race, therefore is desirous of having machinery that will stand the test of law and prejudice, through which to do this work. If this machinery has worn other labels and served other peoples, thereby proving its worth and durability, is it to be sneered at and ignored on that account? This machine is systematic organization, devoid of all ecclesiastical ipse dixits, and papal pronunciamentos.

Let us now examine Sister Watson's reference to R. E. Coon. The writer first met Mrs. Watson in 1888, and from that time to the present has held her in the highest esteem, and has felt it an honor to be numbered among her friends. In all those years her absolute truthfulness and honesty of soul have grown upon the one now replying to her article. Her word will be taken by the writer upon any question concerning which she may testify, as the embodiment of her honest convictions, her sincere beliefs as to the facts in the case. Sister Watson, the writer asks you to be equally considerate with what he has to say anent R. E. Coon.

Mr. Coon read into the charge things which the writer never said, and omitted almost everything of moment which he did say. Please take note of that fact, Sister Watson, for it happens to be true. Mr. Coon is a Bible Spiritualist, and holds many beliefs peculiar to himself with which the writer does not agree.

In interpreting "the charge," Mr. Coon, no doubt honestly in his own mind, sought to fit it to his preconceived ideas and immediate notions. If Sister Watson knew Mr. Coon as well as does the writer, she would be less disturbed by what he wrote regarding this matter. Mr. Coon has heretofore been considered by the writer to be an honest man, seeking to teach that which he believed to be the truth according to his grasp of the subject. Recent developments (and Sister Watson's quotation of his words is one of them) have led the writer to wonder if Mr. Coon does embody that which he has previously been thought to represent.

He has put words into the writer's mouth that were never uttered by him, nor ever entertained by him in secret. He charged nothing upon Mr. Coon with regard to points of doctrine nor yet with respect to refraining from combatting error. Mr. Coon was bidden to qualify himself for the position of a public teacher. He was charged that "no man can teach that which he does not know," hence was urged to read Huxley, Spencer, Darwin, A. J. Davis, S. B. Brittan, R. D. Owen and other noted instructors. Nothing very ecclesiastic or orthodox in that advice!

Mr. Coon was also told that the minister was a servant of the people—all of the people, too, who might need aid. He was admonished that it was his duty to go to any one who might need help, no matter whether that person were rich or poor, good or bad, white or brown, and that he should respond as quickly in the night watches as in the hours of daylight. He was also bidden to remember that the world now has need of constructive, not destructive work—that he should resort to iconoclasm only when error stood athwart the pathway of progress—that he should always have something better to put into the place of that which he took away from those to whom he was ministering. The writer did say then, and he believes it to be a mathematical truth unto this day, that Spiritualism would stand higher, be of more use in the world, serve humanity better, were its teachers to spend more time in emphasizing its principles, and less in sneering at the beliefs of other people, whose opinions are entitled to respect so long as they are honestly held.

Mr. Coon was charged to be on guard against every form of wrong. He was urged to frown upon counterfeiting in mediumship, and upon sham in everything. He was asked to be perfectly fearless in his warfare against falsehood and injustice, and bidden "to cry aloud and spare not" those evils which were dragging humanity downward. No reference whatever was made to the parties quoted by Sister Watson from Mr. Coon's letter. The charge dealt with verities—not with the preconceived opinions of the candidate.

The closing words of the charge were: "Be free! Call no man master, neither be a slave to a book, nor yet to a creed!" Sister Watson, what is the matter with those words? Do they say anything at all about "false doctrine," or set up any claim on the writer's part to be the one privileged to determine the difference between truth and error? Was it wrong to ask Mr. Coon to make an energetic fight against the social evil, against child labor, against ecclesiasticism and sacerdotalism?

Mr. Coon was bidden to go forth among the masses, proclaiming the truth as he felt it to be, and was urged to organize societies, that he might thereby demonstrate his ability as a missionary worker. Did this seem to limit him in any way? His ordination was only a qualitative one any way, hence the repeated urging on the writer's part for him to do his best during the year ere he sought his full papers.

The writer gave "the charge" at the request, and in the name of the Clackamas County Society of Spiritualists, and not by virtue of his office as president of the N. S. A. In fact, the writer made this statement in public at the time the aforesaid charge was given. With Sister Watson, the writer declares that "there is nothing in this world so glorious as to be free!" Yes, free within the limits of the moral law, for no man in his freedom has the right to jeopardize the freedom of his brother, nor to do that which will result in material or spiritual injury to that brother. Those who are developing mediums and locating mines, lost husbands, pots of gold, and clearing the human stomach of snakes, at prices ranging from five dollars to five hundred each, please take notice of these words—the writer means YOU!

It is not necessary to prolong this discussion. The writer did not mean to drive Sister Watson away from Prof. Loveland's banner. In a previous paragraph he has endorsed the gifted nonogenarian's definition, and stated that he thought he had done so publicly long ago. True it is that mere labor does not make anyone honest, neither does it make him religious. Had all of Carlyle's words respecting work been quoted, he would have shown that the writer meant to involve morality in its highest and purest form in every mental and physical effort in which the children of men engage. "Bad men labor"—true—but every bad man has to pay the penalty in full of his every evil deed, and must likewise face the consequences of his every evil thought. Honest labor for the good of others generates good—not evil—thoughts, and in proportion as man becomes unselfish, in that same ratio does his labor become the highest type of worship and pure religion—morality and brotherly love.

The writer again affirms that there is a wide difference between theology and religion—between ecclesiasticism and devotion to the truth. The one is a system of creeds and dogmas formulated out of the prejudiced opinions of bigoted and superstitious men; the other is a system of pure morality and unselfish service to one's fellowmen. The writer does not object to being called "religious," but he does ask his friends and foes to refrain from calling him "pious," or "theologic" in his views. As he grows older, the Immanence of Life appears clearer and clearer to his inner vision, and for the want of a better term, he calls that all-inclusive life-essence "Theism." That term involves no anthropomorphic deity, nor any churchianic concept of the Infinite. It means to the writer the all-embracing principle of Life, the "Great Positive Mind" of A. J. Davis, the Cause that had no cause—the Over-ruling Power—the Inner-ruling Principle—the All-pervasive Energy.

"The All-in-All from out whose hand,
The centuries fall like grains of sand!"

POSSIBILITIES OF THE LYCEUM.

Read Before the Fourteenth Annual Convention of the N. S. A.

When thinking about the possibilities of our Lyceum, there are so many suggestions to be made that it is almost impossible to enumerate all, and I fear the best will remain unexpressed, on account of the limited time.

Let us say, first of all, those who have had opportunity to help build or form a Lyceum, have them devote more time to the children, no matter what age they may be, either those still in the care of parents or those that have older grown by years, but not in knowledge. Let us be like those of old, help where we can.

Those who have had and still have a lyceum in their midst, be not afraid to attend as a member or rely upon your neighbors for support, nor worry about sending your children for fear it is not as popular as the orthodox Sunday-school might be. But attend all its sessions and make it just as popular as the other Sunday-school, and help it to grow by giving suggestions and support wherever needed.

The lyceum is not a creed-teaching school, but an unfoldment of mind, helping the mind to express itself upon all subjects and questions of life. Not to bind mind, soul and body into something that must be undone in coming days. A school of liberal expression and free thought. Liberty in all conditions of life whether great or small, it matters not. Each is helpful when properly expressed. Let us bring the right and truthful teachings to the children, make them understand to not fear death. As I had occasion to hear a boy of twelve say when questioned by a lyceum conductor, "Are you afraid to die?" the answer was, "Yes," with great trembling, and when questioned why, he said, "I'm afraid God will not permit me in heaven, because I am not always a good boy, and never like to get my Sunday-school lessons, or commit the bible verses."

Now this child was taught to fear God in the wrong manner. After the conductor explained, "We do not need to fear an angry God,' and questioned other little children on the same subject, one little girl said, "My mamma says God is with us always and not coming to me when I am dead."

This was a beautiful idea to be expressed by a child, and to see the radiance that these thoughts brought to this little mind was more than a great many can realize.

Let those that know and have the opportunity teach to live a pure, clean and unselfish life to our children, that all who meet them will be pleased and anxious to also have their little ones attend the school.

We who claim Spiritualism as our religion are not always ready to have our children attend our meetings, because we are not always ready for public conviction, and as long as our Spiritualists feel that way our cause cannot take its place in the world as it should. How beautiful when our great teachers and seers, such as Andrew Jackson Davis, Emma Rood Tuttle and others who have so earnestly labored to bring books and papers into our ranks for instruction, and have seen the groups of children assemble in that higher life and receive instructions, how we should bring this great truth to the little ones, in this life. Thus bringing attractions which are uplifting the human family into an altitude such as we have never before.

If our ancestors could have had these advantages, how much crime and misunderstanding of bringing children into this life could have been avoided.

So let us begin to-day, give more time to the little ones, and not wait until they have grown to manhood and womanhood to undo the wrongs which might have been avoided or never committed if this right living had been taught in childhood.

To those present I most earnestly plead, take more time for the little ones and do not place them in conditions unpleasant, and expect them to be perfect when grown where all time was wasted, when time was ripe to mould and fashion everything. But bring them whenever opportunity presents itself. Then the responsibility of our lyceum will be fully realized, not before. MISS LOUISE G. LOEBEL.

BRAIN DOES NOT IMPROVE.

Opinion Given by Professor Thomas of the University of Chicago.

The average human brain is not only no better than it was thousands of years ago, but it is really deteriorating, according to Professor William I. Thomas of the University of Chicago in an article in the January number of the Journal of Sociology, which will be issued by the University of Chicago Press.

"Nature is not producing a better average brain than in the time of Aristotle and the Greeks," says the professor. "The brain is less likely to improve now than in earlier time, because the struggle for existence has been mitigated so that the unfit survive along with the fit. Indeed, the rapid increase in idiocy and insanity shown by statistics indicates that the brain is deteriorating slightly on the average as compared with earlier times."

Women have much greater endurance than men, continues Professor Thomas, while men are quicker to move and think and better fitted for bursts of energy.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

IMPORTANT QUESTION.

What Are the Soul Sensations After Death?—How Must the Spirit Feel as It Leaves the Body?

Did it ever occur to you what the after-death sensations are like?

Assuming that you believe in immortality have you ever reflected on what passes through the soul a minute after connection is severed with the body?

What do you suppose is the difference between the soul sensations a half hour before the end of life and a half hour after?

What change does, what change can pass over the soul in its quick transition between the states of existence?

Is not the soul really the same?

Has it not only changed its place?

It has stepped out of a temple and no more change has come over it than would come over a light which had been taken out of the window.

How can the separate imperishable elements of the ego, the real self, which develop by slow and tedious stages be intrinsically modified in ten or fifteen minutes?

Memory, love, fear, perception of God, or all of these and the other definite qualities of the soul may be either soothed in slumber or fired to the zenith of the soul energy by the change, but how can the intrinsic nature be altered?

The body has been dropped and the soul moves in its old accustomed path. The soul qualities of sight and hearing are there.

A man falls dead on the street. The soul leaves the body. How far does it go? A foot? A block? Into the air? Why should it do any of these things?

Considering how slow the process of education is and how difficult it is to grasp a new experience what is there to lead it to suppose that the transition of death has taken place?

A man with heart disease is on an errand. He drops dead. The soul severs itself from the body. It hovers beside, perhaps. The eye and ear are merely avenues through which the soul senses of seeing and hearing are manifest.

Electricity does not need the incandescent lamp to vibrate. Does the soul need eyes and ears to see and hear? Assuming that it does not, would it not be most natural to suppose that it would continue talking to people, watching the sights and hearing voices and the clatter of a city life as before? Would it not take an interest in its own body? Would it not follow it? Would it not go to its home and to its accustomed haunts as before?

"What can we reason but from what we know?" and what can the soul grasp of the unknown beyond what its state of knowledge will admit? What can it do beyond what it has been taught? What must be its sensations then if it asks questions as nearly as it can in the old way and these questions are unnoticed, unheeded?

It is in the spiritual world. That world and this must border. To the soul newly introduced over the border are the scenes the same? The process of a new education must begin. The soul no doubt must drift away from the old conditions. New environments are no doubt found. The distance from earth must get greater. Others who have gone before are met and mingled with and the process of education is facilitated.

The soul suddenly thrown out of the healthy body must no doubt receive a shock more terrible than imagination can in the least estimate. But the soul that leaves the aged body well spent in years must do so at the behest of natural law and the immediate sensation must be all that imagination can desire. —T. S., in the American Reveille, Bellingham, Wash.

The Cause in New York City.

In New York there are three regularly organized societies which are conducting meetings with mid-week sociables, which are attracting large audiences. The management all working harmoniously together, and a feeling of cordiality and welcome is extended to your modest representative and other others, which is very gratifying, and an apparent effort is made to interest and entertain strangers, which is very commendable, and will attract and instruct those who come as investigators into an acceptance of our phenomena and philosophy, where a cold indifference, which we have seen manifested at other gatherings, will chill and prejudice many who would like to believe and who have been in association with people who are like themselves, cultivated and refined, and are often repulsed and prejudiced by those in the direct management of some services who are lacking to a deplorable degree in those desirable qualities.
